but you ought not to lose sight of the fact that such association with the people as you have opportunity is your privilege and duty, and it will enable you to do your work better. The presiding elder can do a great deal in supporting the pastor as well as the people. I have thought there is a little failure on their part to deal with their preachers as honestly and conscientiously as they ought. [The Bishop here gave an illustration of his thought.] I am simply speaking now of the failure of presiding elders. They must, and they do sometimes, make mistakes. I can see wherein we have been making some mistakes, and sometimes the presiding elders were a little to blame, and perhaps we bishops are to blame in not giving to the world our views a little more freely, so I will not talk to you any more than to myself.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

I look around and see a disposition to ignore the sanctity of the Sabbath. I find our business men taking every advantage of the Sabbath, going to church Sunday morning, in the afternoon or evening, and attending to business the rest of the day, sanctifying the Sabbath by going to meeting at 10:30. I had a case presented to me that shocked me. A pious man and woman started for home from New Orleans on Sunday morning, and rode all day on the cars, and it never occurred to them that they were doing an improper thing. Sometimes I have talked to people about this desecration of the Sabbath, and I have been answered: "How about your presiding elders? If they can travel on Sunday, why may not I?" But sometimes travel may not be avoided. Then I have heard it said in some places, I don't know where, that presiding elders are in the habit of holding Quarterly Conference on Sunday, and transacting the whole business on that day. I have been in the ministry since 1829, and I have never been required but twice in these forty-six years to travel on Sunday. Of course, when I traveled a circuit I had to travel on Sundays; but if it were eight or ten miles from home, I got there on Saturday night and stayed there till Monday morning. I have always avoided everything that was not absolutely necessary—everything I could possibly avoid that looked like breaking the Sabbath.

SHORTCOMINGS.

Again, there are other things in which I think presiding elders come short. It says in the Discipline that the presiding elder shall report to the Annual Conference the names of all traveling preachers within his district who shall neglect to observe the rules for the instruction of children. I have never heard one report yet. The Discipline requires that the pastor should do a number of things—for example, that he should preach a missionary sermon and take up a missionary collection. It requires that they should deliver a sermon on conversion, and how many do it in the course of a year? It requires books should be distributed. I remember when every presiding elder had his saddle-bags full of books. In the country in which I used to travel I never stopped in a Methodist house that I did not find the Methodist books, so that I did not carry my books with me. No matter how poor the people, they had Methodist books. Now I can go among the most wealthy of our people, and there is hardly a Methodist book to be found in their libraries. You will find Dickens there, and a good many worse than Dickens. Will you find a Presbyterian or Baptist who is so poorly furnished with the books of his denomination? I find again and again evidences of this want among our people. If they had better knowledge of our doctrines and history, they would be more loyal and devoted.

In a Sunday-school, not long since, I asked, "How many of you have seen an elephant?" Every hand was raised. "What was his name?" "Jumbo," said they. I asked, "How many of you ever saw a catechism?" There was not a hand up, and the Discipline requires that the pastor shall instruct the people in the catechism! It requires that the children shall be properly instructed in the catechism by the pastor. It is the duty of the pastor to instruct the people in their duty. I heard a lady say, the other day, she had never heard a pastor preach on the subject of the duties of parents to their children. It is the duty of the presiding elder to inquire after this matter, and I believe our presiding elders can do a great deal of good among our people by teaching our history and doctrines. I know of a family—one of the most devoted families that ever belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church—and not one of the children now belongs to it. I have asked these children how it came to pass, and they have had no conception there was any difference between our methods and the methods of other denominations. If they understood these things, as our fathers understood them and we understand them, they would not have left us.

THE GOOD OLD WAY.

Then, again, I think we are losing a little in another way, and that is in giving up a great many of our methods. I believe the old methods whereby people were saved are the methods whereby they may be saved to-day, and I believe that the nearer we get to these old methods of saving men, women and children, the better we shall be. [The speaker here pointed to the altar rail, and remain here till God gives them power, the better.]

You have evidence right here in your own city that the other denominations are succeeding by adopting our old methods, and we are failing because we have laid them aside.

I believe the presiding elder has this as a part of his work, and when he mingles with his people he ought to carry these Methodist plans with him; and if the pastor fails short let him apply the means for the accomplishment of his purpose.

SECTARIAL DUTIES.

Almost all of our property is somewhere in jeopardy because of the failure to have it properly secured. The Discipline requires that the presiding elder shall look after this matter. Look after the title deeds, for we know that as a rule our pastors are not familiar with these things, and sometimes, before we are aware, we find ourselves mortgaged and alarmed to learn our property is in danger.

I think there is another thing in which the presiding elders are not doing as well as formerly. They are not looking after the districts through which they travel, and providing for the people who have no pastors. As I travel over Pennsylvania I find regions where Methodism used to be pretty strong, and where it has hardly an existence now.

The farmers get to be pretty well off, and when age comes they retire from the farm and move to the adjoining village. They erect their own church there, go to work and build it, leaving the old place to take care of itself. The presiding elders should see that these places are supplied with Methodist preaching.

I find in this great city that there is an immense amount of missionary work needed. I was amazed when an Italian told me the other day that there are fifty thousand Italians in the city of New York and only one mission, and that recently commenced.

I was greatly astonished, as I passed through the far West, to find whole counties where there were thousands of people and not a solitary Methodist preacher; and I think if the presiding elders were more careful and kept constantly in view the fact that they were the superintendents of their districts and would supply them as they ordinarily can, there would not be the deficiencies of which I speak.

We have a presiding elder in Illinois who started out with the idea that he could increase the circulation of Methodist literature. That man has organized a reading circle in every charge on his district and has got nearly all his young people to reading religious books. Some of them have been converted, and others have been led to consecrate themselves entirely to God.

I hope the time will come when our people's libraries will be supplied with religious books, and when a Christian Advocate shall be found in every Methodist home, and when these things are done we will have consecrated intelligence in our church.

Kentucky Correspondence.

BY REV. J. H. COTTELL, D. D.

It was pleasant to the eye to see the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE in such profusion at Paducah during the session of the Memphis Conference; and as it was the issue containing the somewhat elaborate letter of your Kentucky correspondent it was all the more interesting to him. Bishop Hargrove presided and preached to the great gratification of the preachers and people. Rev. Dunlap was successful in raising more than he called for on behalf of the theological school for negro preachers, and Bishop Lane, the negro Bishop and president of a college for his race at Jackson, Tenn., was introduced, spoke modestly and effectively and met a generous response in word and money. Dr. Young, missionary secretary, met no difficulty in composing the specific object which brought him to the Conference. On Friday evening of the session the anniversary of the Woman's Missionary Society, presided over by Mrs. Dr. Samuel Watson, of Memphis, held its anniversary. After an address by the president and reports by Mrs. Duckworth and Mrs. Ramsey, your correspondent was introduced and spoke briefly, entering a plea on behalf of the removal of all obstructions to woman's thorough engagement on equal terms with man in furthering the world's advancement. Dr. Winfield followed, and was quite pronounced in adverse characterization of the women of the North who have made claim on behalf of their sex. In saying that he hoped the South would never produce a Victoria Woodhull he seemed to be oblivious of the fact that such mention of the name of a notorious free love leader was not at all congruous with anything said, suggested or implied in what had been advanced. He claimed that woman's place was at home and her function was to bear and nurture children, declaring that one should never occupy his pulpit. Afterwards, while Mrs. Watson was addressing the audience very gracefully and effectively, I whispered to him to fall into my arms if he should faint. I would simply remark, in this connection, that no one is at all in haste or disposed to mount this movement as a hobby, but that a development pressing forward to the unfolding of this flower and the leaves of the tree of life is imminent, can not be questioned. The stalk that tasseled years ago is now about to silk, and we will have full corn on the cob in the sheaf. There are minds constitutionally averse to any reconditioning in Church or State. Some of this sort, through a peculiar cunning, have balked the Church, South, in very vital ventures. The dove-feast was a season of delight, and Bishop Hargrove's sermon at the Methodist Church, at eleven o'clock, on the apostasy of Judas, was a searching one. Dr. Winfield preached at the Presbyterian Church and Dr. Young at the Baptist Church, and of these I heard much commendation. At night in the Christian Church, to a crowded audience, your correspondent preached, and the heartiness of the invitation of the pastor for him to preach again the next night is evidence that he steered clear of any point of antagonism. In excusing himself because of an engagement to lecture elsewhere, he spoke of his partiality for the Christian Church, stating that he did not like churches much anyway, and he believed the Christian Church came nearer being no church than any of them. The impulsive laughter of the pastor drew many heads around to see what was up. He had the good sense to see the point of a joke and to understand a sally of pleasant irony. Tom Carlyle said there were forty millions of people in England, mostly fools. How fortunate for us that none of these ever emigrated to America. Solomon, in Proverbs, has somewhat to say about such.

The Memphis Conference averages well. Dr. Steel, of Memphis, in appearance as also in the case of his mind and coloring of his nature reminded me continually of Thomas S. Abner, Jr., in old comrade at Pensacola in 1855. Warner Moore is the Chesterfield of the Conference. His words are like down and his look and manner accord therewith. Drs. Boswell and Gullford Jones and the venerable Bynum give place cheerfully and gracefully to young men who were elected to the General Conference.

It took but a few hours at Paducah and at one or two other places for me to procure over a hundred additional names to the subscription list of the Centenary. It will have a wide circulation in Kentucky. To receive about one hundred names—Catholics, Jews and outsiders as well as Protestants of all denominations—at Owensboro, where I served four years, was gratifying. Many sermons, talks and lectures induced weariness, and home is sweet.

I found on return that my daughter had gone back to Florida with the little four-year-old, motherless daughter of my eldest son, Jennings. How still and silent the house as I entered with the two little dolls and the caudal in expectancy of a joyous greeting! "Where is Sue and little Elodie?" I asked. Wife answered, as the tears came, "They are gone!" So we three—wife, Carrie and I—sat down in silence and let the tears flow.

The best of a book is not the thought which it contains, but the thought which it suggests; just as the charm of music dwells not in the tones, but in the echoes of our hearts.—Holmes.

Alabama Letter.

MR. EDITOR: Your highly appreciated paper makes regularly its weekly visits and is read by myself and family with real pleasure. It meets all the conditions of a first-class religious paper. I am richly supplied with Advocates, taking five—the NEW ORLEANS, the ST. LOUIS, the ARKANSAS, the NASHVILLE and the ALABAMA. These, like silent angels, are flying over our land, bearing to all the glad tidings of salvation. There is nothing insignificant in God's hand. At his bidding silent agencies acquire potency. "Who hath despised the day of small things?" Behold, what a great matter a little fire kindleth."

I remember once trying to preach on "Unconscious Influence"—the influence we cast on each other without knowing it, and how words and actions, things animate and inanimate, affected us for good or evil. Soon after a gentleman of high standing at the bar and a member of my charge, seemingly impressed with the subject, related the following incident: Said he, "I was on a steamboat going down to M. On the same boat was Judge C. (another member of my charge). A gentleman approached me with an invitation to accompany him to the bar and share with him in a social glass." He declined the invitation on the ground that he was a member of the church.

Soon Judge C. was asked in a similar way. He yielded. The first brethren were invited the second time, to which he offered no resistance. Why? Because, said he, "Judge C. had taken a glass." The judge, I think, is dead, but as I never mentioned it to him, I suppose he died without knowing what he had done. For the one whom he influenced to drink, I am told, has become a confirmed inebriate. This same man, while conversing with me on the streets of C., saw a Christian gentleman walking along the sidewalk, when he remarked: "The other day I was about to enter that saloon over there, when that man standing near it turned me away from it." We observe the diverse influence exercised unconsciously by these two men.

The example of the first led my friend to indulge his appetite for drink, while the example of the second restrained him.

About the same time a lady of high social and religious standing mentioned an incident showing the wonderful influence of trivial things upon human character. Her husband was a physician of distinction, and a member of the Legislature of his State; and if I mistake not, he was for several terms president of the Senate. He met with some sad reverses of fortune, in consequence of which he suffered great depression of spirit. "One day," said his wife, "we were sitting near a window, and while gazing out he spoke touchingly of his embarrassment and dwelt upon the future as foreboding evil." Said the good lady: "While thus saddened with the gloomy prospect, a little bird, with a crumb in its mouth, alighted on a branch close by." She was quick to call his attention to it, saying: "Husband, see that bird with the crumb in its mouth; and will not the bird that feeds the sparrow feed us. Does not the Savior teach us that we are of more value than many sparrows?" These were words truly and truly spoken. They revived his drooping heart and inspired him to press forward with life's work with a resolution to succeed.

"Who hath despised the day of small things?" This silent sermon of the tiny bird was more potent to rally the disquieted emotions of his soul than perhaps the most eloquent minister.

As I have diverged from the line of thought proposed in the beginning of this article, please allow it a bit further. Sometimes it is easier in writing to be discursive than concentrative. I am reminded of a remark of Bishop Early, who, preaching on one occasion, spoke of the noble stream he was ascending, alluding to the rich train of thought suggested by the text. But he expressed himself as inclined to go up some of its tributaries, and in doing so he might find so many fine fish that he might fail to get back to the main current in time.

But let us notice the influence of one or two trifles as some would esteem them. Not a few of my readers doubtless remember an account given of the conversion of a bandit by a dove. It is said to have occurred in Florida. The poor, cullery man, wearied from wandering through its sands and pine forests, sat down to rest when he heard the cooing of a dove. Its plaintive tone carried him back to the time when in childhood he enjoyed the love and caresses of a mother. He recalled her pangs and tender admonitions, when he was so deeply affected as to bend his knees before God and to implore that mercy which he had so long despised.

It is recorded of Moody that he was sitting in his study when a stranger appeared and was admitted to a seat. He introduced himself as a convict, having just served out his time in the penitentiary. He was in the world without friends or employment, and he asked aid of the evangelist. His little daughter, coming in to the room, was told to go and kiss the stranger, which she did. Dinner being announced, he was invited by Mr. Moody to partake with him. Under a promise of his worthiness he declined, but finally yielded. The kiss of the innocent child and the Christy kindness of her father made, it is said, a new man of him, who, under harsh treatment, might have remained in "the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity."

A criminal loses none of his faculties at condemnation. The picture of freedom, as seen from his barred window, has new charms; the misery of a prison is increased by experience. So heaven will be dearer, and hell more terrible to the lost, than the heart had conceived.—Sermons for Silent Sabbaths.

It is very easy to forbear stealing other men's goods, but hard not to so much as covet or desire them; very easy not to bear false witness in judgment, but not easy to avoid detraction in conversation; very easy not to desire another man's death, but hard not to desire some inconvenience to him; easy to forbear demanding our adversary, but hard not to despise him.—Dr. Sales.

God framed this great organ of the world. He tuned it, yet not so that it could play upon itself, or make any music by virtue of this general composition, but that it might be fitted and prepared for the danger of God himself, and at the presence of his powerful touch might sound forth the praise of its Creator in a most sweet and harmonious manner.—Culverwell.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

OHAS B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. T. A. S. A. D. D., REV. J. T. SAWYER
REV. W. L. O. HENNING.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 7, 1886.

The twenty-fourth anniversary of Emperor William's accession to the Prussian throne was celebrated throughout the empire on Sunday last.

Lord Randolph Churchill has submitted a proposition for the reform of the administration of the government of Ireland. This scheme involves the abolition of the viceroyalty and the Castle Executive, and the placing of Ireland on the same footing as Scotland, with a Secretary in the Cabinet. That seems to be plausible and practicable. But whether or not it will satisfy the Parnellites is another question.

The Methodist Times, of London, continues its usual fight for Mr. Stead, the imprisoned editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, and the great cause for which he is suffering. This from a recent issue will be read with interest by those who have kept up with the history of the man and his trial. Why the Queen does not interpose a pardon and fling wide open the doors of Holloway Jail is very surprising.

"We have received numerous inquiries with respect to Mr. Stead. We are happy to say that Mr. Stead is in good health and cheerful spirits, and that the one and best thing that all who love him can do to promote his happiness is to come to the rescue of Dr. Heywood Smith. The iniquitous persecution of Dr. Heywood Smith is distressing Mr. Stead beyond measure. Nothing would give him so much joy as to know that the friends of purity and of justice are not going to allow the enemies of both to starve and ruin Dr. Smith. Many letters which have reached us, with generous offers of pecuniary assistance for the establishment of a hospital, indicate that something effectual may yet be done. It seems to us that the time is come to take definite steps. A committee should be formed, donatious for the erection of a hospital, and annual subscriptions, should be solicited. Many persons want to present Mr. Stead with a testimonial when he leaves the prison. The true and best testimonial would be to erect a noble monument in the form of a hospital for women, under the care of Dr. Heywood Smith. It would delight Mr. Stead more than anything else, and it would save one of the purest and most self-sacrificing philanthropists of our time from being the victim of a cruel conspiracy. The old subscribers to the hospital which has expelled Dr. Smith ought to transfer their subscriptions to the new hospital, and many churches would certainly be disposed to devote their collections on Hospital Sunday to Dr. Heywood Smith's hospital."

The following interesting item about the indefatigable and irrepressible Bishop William Taylor, we find in the New York Independent:

Bishop William Taylor loves royal as little as he does ecclesiastical red tape. He wanted to see the King of Belgium the other day, about his (Taylor's) proposed trip up the Congo, but he was informed that by official routine it would require ten days to secure the audience. So he took the matter into his own hands, and "walked straight to the palace, and in half an hour got the arrangement for an early meeting." The next day he went to the palace, and was met by the King at the door and given a cordial welcome. We "chatted," says this Bishop forty minutes. "King Leopold," he continues, "is about six feet four in height, well proportioned, high forehead, very open, pleasant countenance, social and communicative, and speaks the English language well; and has a high appreciation of America and of Americans. He expresses great pleasure in the prospect of my planting missions in the Congo Free State and will gladly co-operate with me in this great work by all means at his command. I also made acquaintance of all the heads of the three departments of Congo State, who have their headquarters in Brussels. I traveled with M. De Brazza from Africa to Lisbon, and learned many valuable lessons from him on African exploration, and met Lieutenant Wisman at Materna, and received the latest and best information about the Kasai, opening a water-way into the Fungue country. If we succeed by that route, we will extend our Angola missions east and south, instead of northeast, which will be better all round."

The Bishop, as a wise missionary, always gets the good will of the rulers of the country in which he contemplates mission efforts. He had visited the King of Portugal a few weeks before he went to Brussels, and reported his work in Angola.

"Newspapers and Religion."

This is the title of an editorial article in the Times-Democrat, of the thirtieth ultimo. As it announced the policy of that journal in its relation to religion, we read it eagerly and reread it carefully. The gist of the article will be found in the following extract:

The object of a daily newspaper is to give the news and reflect, as news, the changing or fixed opinions of communities or individuals. It expresses rather than directs public opinion. It prints the history of a murder on the same page with the history of a heroic action, and publishes the report of an ecclesiastical council in the same issue with the account of a Communistic orgy. It chronicles the discoveries of science, but also the escapades of charlatans. It is simply a regular record of events; and its policy must be confined to the manner in which those events are treated and arranged and commented on for journalistic purposes. It can not possibly have any religious policy; for, once such a policy is adopted by any journal, the journal ceases, ipso facto, to be a first-class newspaper, and becomes a sectarian print, the mouthpiece of a sectarian religious circle. No really thorough newspaper in the English-speaking world possesses any particular religious policy; no perfectly directed journal excludes one class of ecclesiastical news to admit another class of similar news, or needlessly devotes more news-space to one church than another. The charities, the missions, the evangelical labors, the congregational reunions of all churches receive attention proportionate to the importance of the ethical influence they represent and the social good which each one accomplishes. Religious news must, like all other news, receive more or less consideration in proportion as it is more or less interesting to the general public; and press courtesies are equally extended to Catholic or Episcopalian, Methodist or Universalist, Baptist or Jew.

As an inadequate conception of the mission and responsibilities of journalism the above is rather remarkable. We had not supposed that our enterprising contemporary put such an estimate upon its position and policy. And we can hardly believe that the language employed was written after calm forethought. In saying that a newspaper has "no fixed religious policy," the editor must have meant "no ecclesiastical policy." A secular paper should not be an ecclesiastical organ or apologist, but surely ought not to be neutral or indifferent as to its religious influence or convictions.

There are ethical relations and obligations from which journalism is not exempt. One of the most potential factors in conserving the morals of a community is a daily newspaper. If its tone is high and pure, the people at large reap the benefit. But if its mission is only to gather items without regard to public morals—if there be no thought of the poisonous effects of the garbage raked up from the alleys and slums for sensational reading—the land is made to mourn, albeit the journal may succeed as a financial venture. It is too true that the history of a murder is printed on the same page with the history of a heroic action, with the preference of space and display given to the former. Crime has the premium as an item of news. A graphic and realistic account of a hanging is a sweet morsel to an enterprising journalist, while the fact of some worthy philanthropic deed or the triumph of some great moral issue scarcely finds mention.

Our contemporary says that a newspaper "expresses rather than directs public opinion." Such is not the popular conception of journalism. And certainly it is a very low estimate of its mission and position. An ideal journal is a leader of public thought, clear in its convictions, honest in its purposes and unrepentable in its loyalty to the right. Most journals take pride in their influence as monitors of public thought—as the guide of the people in their political, commercial and moral well-being. It is the business of a journalist, sitting where all the lines of current news and influence converge, not only to retell the happenings of the world, but to give the people his own calm, matured conclusions. He ought not to be a mere gossip, telling what others have done and said, but a public teacher, duly conscious of his sacred responsibility.

But this is only another argument in favor of religious journalism, and an all-sufficient refutation of the statement sometimes heard that the daily newspapers give us ample religious news and a plenty of wholesome, Christian reading. A paper that has no "fixed religious policy" can not be a trusted religious teacher. And religious parents who have regard for the solemn, divine imperatives of parenthood can not afford to rear their children on such reading alone. Sad will it be for them if they grow to years feeding on the stories of murders, wife beatings and the escapades of charlatans. This is a call, loud and clear, for the circulation of religious periodicals. It comes from a new and strange quarter, and should, therefore, be the more earnestly heeded.

A Church Dedication.

A long-standing promise carried us to the good old town of Carrollton, Miss., to spend Sunday last and officiate at the dedication of a handsome new Methodist Church. Reaching Winona on Friday night, in the midst of a fearful rain storm, we found Bro. J. H. Bingham in waiting to light our way to the hospitable home of Col. O. J. Moore. During the long hours of the night the rain descended without ceasing. So we were informed, for it served only as a gentle lullaby to this weary traveler. In the morning the clouds were yet portentous and this floods voluminous. The neighboring streams were swollen to fury, and bore on their restless tides well-constructed bridges and causeways. Not until the afternoon did we venture on the fourteen miles of muddy distance between Winona and Carrollton. The morning gave opportunity, however, to meet some old friends and the new pastors of the town and adjacent precinct, Bros. Malone and Burroughs. They are safely and pleasantly installed in their parsonages and ready for the year's labor. Their predecessors had each served a full quadrennium and, rightly enough, were surrendered with regret. But it is well to shepherd such a people. In a little while the new pastor takes the place of the old, and he receives a like cordial, loyal support.

After "tolling in rowing" through mud and flood for five hours, including a detour of four miles to avoid a dismembered bridge, we reached Carrollton in safety and found a cordial welcome. The ladies especially had been anxious about Bro. Bingham and his friend, fearing, most of all, that we had ventured into perilous waters, and, unlike Jonah, without the "sides of a ship" to protect us. But the sense of relief when fear has passed is sweet to the soul, and the grateful heart is never so full of thanksgiving. By the bright family fire and around the evening board the incidents of our itinerancy were related and the prospects for the morrow discussed. The new pastor, Bro. Lewis, and his wife were also guests at Sister Bingham's, and added pleasure to this second visit.

Sunday morning dawned gloomily. The clouds were heavy and the sun refused to show his face. Friends from far and near who had expected to attend the dedication services were compelled to remain at home. A slow, cold rain continued during the forenoon; but, under umbrellas and wrapped in gossamers, the people came and quite filled the beautiful little temple. The ex-pastor, Bro. Smith, under the administration of the house was built, was present to participate in the joyous ceremonies. The building is well proportioned, handsomely finished and elegantly furnished. The pews are comfortable and well arranged, and the pulpit and platform of modern elevation and proportion. The new choir, with a new organ, rendered excellent music, and with good, old-fashioned Methodist heartiness. At the conclusion of the sermon the congregation was asked for $400, that the church might be dedicated free of debt. In a few minutes $164 were raised, and everybody looked well pleased. Great is Carrollton for liberal offerings to the Lord! We shall never forget her grand giving during our Centenary year.

To our dear friends, the Bingham's, we are indebted for many kind attentions. May blessings abundant rest upon that model Methodist home! In the afternoon we returned to Winona and, by appointment, preached for Bro. Malone at night. The evening was very cold and disagreeable; but a good congregation assembled and gave respectful heed to the gospel message. Col. Moore and his household will please accept a tired editor's grateful acknowledgments for appreciated courtesies.

Prohibition in the United States Senate.

The following account of a little discussion in the upper chamber of our national legislature we take from the Central Christian Advocate. It is well enough for the people to know how our great law makers talk and act away from home. Some of these merry-makers will soon be invited to stay at home.

On Tuesday of last week the subject of prohibition had an airing in the United States Senate, and some things were said that it is proper the people of this country should know. The Senate has a rule excluding the sale of spirituous liquor within that portion of the Capitol under its jurisdiction. But, like prohibition in some other places, it does not seem to have interfered in the least with the drinking habits of any member of the Senate. On the day we have named Senator Frye, of Maine, chairman of the Committee on Joint Rules for the Senate and House of Representatives, was engaged in battling his report against when he proposed that Rule 13, prohibiting the sale of intoxicants, should be stricken out. He gave as the reason for this retrograde temperance movement, that a majority of the committee thought that each body should decide this question for itself. Mr. Conger, of Michigan, asked for the yeas and nays, and immediately all was excitement. Riddleberger, of Virginia, evidently to defeat the rule, moved to amend, so that it would not only exclude the sale of liquors in the restaurant, but the use of them in the committee rooms, and called for the yeas and nays; but no one voted except himself. The vote was then taken on the proposition to strike out the rule, and it was lost by a vote of 20 yeas to 35 nays. The yeas were: Messrs. Beck, Brown, Calla, Cockrell, Coke, Eastland, Gray, Hamilton, Harris, Ingalls, Jackson, Kennam, Manderson, Maxey, Morgan, Ransom, Riddleberger, Vest, Walshaw and Voorhees.

The result was not satisfactory, and another effort was made to kill it by making sport of the whole affair. In which Senator Ingalls seemed to take the lead.

Senator Vest, of Missouri, is reported to have said: "Everyone knew that if a Senator wanted liquor in his committee room he would have it, and would visit the severest punishment in his power on any clerk who should 'inform' on him. The whole thing was simply an attempt to meet a fanatical spirit in the country on this question, to which he would not give countenance."

Objection having been made that the rule infringed on the domain of the Supreme Court, Senator Morgan offered an amendment that the joint rules are not intended to include the court-rooms. Senator Cockrell now got the floor. The report says: "Mr. Cockrell said he disliked drunkenness everywhere, but had seen more of it among the Senators than the employees of the Senate. Senators kept whisky in their rooms and invited their friends to go there. If the Senate was not fit to stop that, it was not fit for self-government. He had known of an appropriation to be occasionally delayed because of the intoxication among the employees; but he had known the Senate to be adjourned because of the condition of some of its members. He would not say that the Senate had to adjourn in consequence of it; but certain Senators had been in such condition that the public business could not have been carried on, as discussion would have been indefinitely prolonged. Senators knew," Mr. Cockrell added, "that his point was well taken."

This gave a serious aspect to the debate, and Senator Frye quoted ex-Senator Simon Cameron as authority for saying that such a condition was not uncommon twenty or thirty years ago, and even far worse than Senator Cockrell described; but things had greatly changed and the temperance reform had made rapid strides. He was fearful that the country would form a wrong impression from the speech of the Senator from Missouri. He had never seen such a condition of Senators as had been described. But Senator Cockrell reaffirmed his statement. His amendment was then voted on and lost. Then the clause providing for the dismissal of clerks who should be implicated in the use of liquors was stricken out, and the rule was carried.

The only Republican Senators who voted against the rule were Ingalls, of Kansas, and Manderson, of Nebraska. The Democratic Senators voting to retain it were Berry, of Arkansas; Blackburn, of Kentucky; Colquitt, of Georgia; Jones, of Arkansas; Payne, of Ohio, and Salisbury, of Delaware. One or two Senators "dodged" the question by saying they were paired with absent members—but this was not a political question.

Godliness Profitable unto All Things.

BY REV. J. D. A. ABBRENS, D. D.

The celebrated theologian and commentator, Dr. Tholuck, who departed this life in 1877, was as cheerful as he was pious. In 1837, when he had attained to the zenith of his popularity, he made a tour through Germany. His presence created a great sensation in every city which he visited. Thus he came to Strasburg. It was extensively placarded that the distinguished visitor would preach at the St. Thomas Church on the following Sunday. Desiring to be shaved, Dr. Tholuck entered the establishment of a tonsor in the basement of the hotel. Soon he was seated and submitting to the tonsorial operation. The knife used was not the best, and the barber, by way of drawing off the attention of the victim from the pain inflicted, voluminously produced the current town talk, which was that the gifted and eloquent man, Dr. Tholuck, would preach at St. Thomas Church on to-morrow.

"Yes," said the talkative tonsor; "the church will not hold one-fourth of the multitude who will flock to hear that wonderful man."

The victim writhed in agony, but found no opportunity to enter his protest against the use of that barbarous knife.

"I would like to hear him myself," continued the barber; "but I am one of the unfortunates who have to desecrate the Sabbath in order to accommodate their customers. Have you ever heard him?" he inquired, addressing the victim.

This gave Tholuck a breathing spell, and, sighing deeply, he replied: "Yes, I have heard him—heard him often, and, Providence permitting, I shall hear him to-morrow. If it will give you any pleasure, I will here introduce him to you."

"Pleasure!" exclaimed the tonsor; "it would give me the greatest pleasure in the world."

"Well, then," rejoined Tholuck, "I am myself the party whom you so highly praise."

The barber withdrew a few paces in utter amazement, and then exclaimed: "I feel, indeed, highly honored by your presence, and more so because I am privileged to shave you. Sure I will at once change knives and use the best one I have on hand."

Frequently in subsequent years, when Prof. Tholuck narrated this incident to his admiring students, he would add: "You see, young gentlemen, godliness is profitable unto all things."

Short Articles.

Do not bother yourself about the petty fancies and fine thoughts which flit in and out of your mind before you can utter them. If you could stop all the sunshine and rain-drops, you would never see the bow; and if the bow was chained in any set of drops, it would fall and be lost forever. But the bow is the divine expression of your relation to the cloud, the sun, the water drop, and the time of day. So many a thought which comes after some storm is over tells you where you are with reference to the trials of life, to your duty under God, and the time you have to live. He alone dies unwarned who watches no sunbeams and shadows. He alone lives to no purpose who thinks sunshine and shadows made for his amusement.

Young man, study geography. There is hardly one graduate in a hundred in the United States who is well versed in the geography of his vast E pluribus unum, about which he rants and jumps so when he is about to be called out to take his diploma. The study of geography is important in a variety of lights: 1. Geology, which points us to mineral supplies. 2. Topography, which has much to do with climate and productions. 3. Commerce, which directly affects our national wealth. 4. Ethnology, which indicates relative race possibilities. 5. Laws and manners, suggestive of what ours are, ought to be, or will be. The reason why we have statesmen of great altitude and attenuated understanding is that, instead of growing mentally to a situation, we have been brought up on balloonist's diet. Our gas bag is larger than our stomach.

The world is moving. The Gulf Stream moves; but no scientist has yet explained why or how. New islands are constantly being formed in tropical seas. Certain facts seem to indicate that the world pulsates. Other facts indicate semi-sensations or propagation of jars and sounds along certain lines that may take the place of nerves, and their collection at certain points that seem to serve as ganglia. There are known to be vitalizing forces acting on the earth; why may not some of them be in the earth? But this only to suggest comment on the words so often repeated in the first chapter of Genesis—"And God said, Let the earth bring forth," "and it was so."

Passivity is neither patience nor piety. It is frequently the religion of the lazy man, practically; of the fatalist, theoretically. The more Christianized the world becomes, the less use is there for the passive voice. "We are workers together with God." "The Spirit helps." We are never to be without Divine assistance; but Divine help is thrown away if we do nothing. The normal condition of man was ability to do all that was required or desired of his own God-given strength. When fully restored by Christ, it will again be his normal condition. There was a time when man was able to do all that was required in his favor. His moral stamina needed such as braces, as weak-backed men want porous plasters and liver pads. But strong, vigorous Christianity does not want these straight jackets and artificial supports to dignity. The nimble body of the cruel land man lacks not strength because it has litherness, and wants no imputed righteousness since it has a growing and fruit-bearing kind within which is infinitely better. The one may be a splinter of the mast of Zion's ship; but the other is an acorn from which a forest may grow to build a navy.

The Episcopal mission began in this city on Saturday last in charge of Rev. Wm. E. Altken, the "missioner" from England. Large congregations attended the several services on the Sabbath. There will be a noon prayer meeting at Werlein Hall each day, conducted by Mr. Altken. We invoke the divine blessing upon this evangelical movement. That souls may be converted and a new spiritual life awakened in all Christians, should be our constant prayer.

—Dr. David Morton, secretary of our Board of Church Extension, spent the Sabbath in the city, preaching in the morning at Carondelet Street, and in the evening at Felicely.

—Rev. M. B. Chapman, at Columbia, Missouri, has just closed a successful revival meeting in his church. There were 25 conversions, and 21 additions to the church membership.

—Bishop Foster is visiting the missions of the Episcopal Church in South America. He will preside at the Annual Meeting of the South American Mission, at Montevideo, Uruguay, Feb. 10, 1886.

—We find this item of news in the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist: "Mr. Hora, of Atlanta, Ga., has just given $10,000 to the superannuated preachers' fund of the South Carolina Conference, to be paid at the death of his wife."

—Rave. T. J. Upton, R. S. Trippett, J. T. Sawyer, H. O. White and R. T. Collier, of the Louisiana Conference were welcomed callers at the Advocate office, on Monday, en route to the Conference session at Baton Rouge.

—The closing sermon for this Conference year, at Moreau Street, last Sunday night, was signalized by the reception of four new members, on probation of faith. Rev. R. S. Collier, of the Louisiana Conference preached for the pastor on the occasion.

—The Board of Pardon held a meeting in this city last week. Some minor cases were disposed of, but the Ford and Murphy case was not considered. Having already refused to make any recommendation to the Governor, they will not reopen it, unless "a petition pertinent to the issue" shall be presented.

—The Rev. E. P. Palmer, D. D., has been installed as pastor of Canal Street Presbyterian Church of this city. He came directly here from Texas, where his labors have been abundantly successful. Dr. Palmer is a brother of Dr. B. M. Palmer, the distinguished pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of this city.

—An editorial in the Catholic Mirror, has this to say of the Pope's encyclical letter: "Impudent sects of heretics, infidels, atheists, claim to be treated by States on equal footing with the one true church. How shall we view this deplorable and perplexing problem?" The Romish treatment of the "problem" is the one fear of the thoughtful patriot. We may be assured that they will control in civil affairs if possible.

—This sad paragraph we find in the editorial columns of the Woman's Missionary Advocate. Our sincere condolence is extended to our heroic young missionaries so far away from home: "Who will not grieve with our dear missionaries, Misses Lochie and Dora Rankin, when it is known that their blessed father has entered into his everlasting rest? About the time that Miss Lochie arrived in China he reached the heavenly city. May the Comforter abide with them and their bereaved mother, is our most earnest prayer."

—We regret to chronicle the death of Dr. B. B. Hamilton, of Minden, La. Not many days ago he was in this office, renewed his subscription to the Advocate and talked pleasantly of church and other matters. He was an honored Methodist, of many years, and was fond of talking about the great men whose ministry he had enjoyed in other days. He died on board a train, coming to this city, near Montgomery, Ala., bringing the remains of a little grandson for interment. About an hour before his death he had a fall from the car platform at a depot, which it is supposed resulted in fracturing the skull. This is a great sorrow to a large circle of relatives and friends.

We find in the South-Western Methodist, of St. Louis, the following which will be read with painful interest by his many friends in the South. It is feared that the Doctor will have to intermit pastoral labor forsome time:

Dr. Felix R. Hill, pastor of First Church, is slowly recovering his general health. He is still however, under treatment of the oculist, Dr. Green, and there is no probability of the perfect restoration of his eye, and much danger that he may lose it altogether. A short time ago, believing that the eye would be restored in a few weeks, and that his system would recover its tone and strength more quickly in a Southern climate, Dr. Hill solicited a transfer to the Alabama Conference and was transferred and stationed at Tuskegee. Dr. Hill had not consulted the oculist in regard to this change and when he informed him of his purpose, he was assured that he would require the attention of an oculist for months to come, and that his perfect cure under the best conditions, was extremely doubtful. On account of this protest of the oculist, and also Tracts, Books and Colportage.

Secondly, we need books that will teach us the history of God's people from the creation down to the present time. The past teaches valuable lessons, of how men and nations became victorious, and again of how they were "mishled and brought low." It is the way the Holy Ghost has taken, as it were, to repress the truth upon us that we may escape the transgression's hard ways and obtain the rewards of the righteous. We should begin soon with children to cause them to understand the Bible, its doctrines, its chronology, and its geography, even down to where the mountains are in Palestine, and the fords on the Jordan. This can be done by a graded series, beginning with line upon line, and precept upon precept, that the House is now issuing, and ascending on up through Forest and Galaudet into the elaborate works of Dr. Wm. Smith. Then we want to know something of the history of the church since the close of the Scripture narrative. The Arian controversy, the rise of the Papacy, the reformation of the church in its doctrines, under Luther, the reformation of its members in guilt living under Wesley, and the progress of American Methodism, are events that ought to be familiar to all. And there are hundreds, yes, thousands, of country boys that, if given a fair chance, would go through with even the standard works on these subjects; and, as they read, would begin to understand the value of sound doc-

It rarely happens that books like these are well taken care of, well bound in a good deal in their chances of preservation. In too, there is something inviting to readers in good paper and clear and if you will add illustrations, temptation to read becomes irresistible. See the superb engraving of the narrative of travel in Harper's Magazine, making it a real pleasure to turn their pages. Oh, that I could give you such a book as the work in China, and Kennedy's work in Mexico, and the India Territory; incidentally, and aesthetically, making it a gem of the book-market. Then it would no longer be nearly two-twelfths of four per cent and will not read hark back to any said that history can be as interesting as a novel, and exemplify it himself. I believe the experience of missionary work as attractive as the articles in our best magazine, though whether I will live exemplified or not, is a question readily to inquire. Are there difficulties? Yes, Are they movable? And I discern nothing but the pathway pointed out that will save and energy, with God's blessing, not remove. In a word, a strong link that links itself in with the plans and purposes of the Most High will bring me triumphantly though into a promised land of light where all will know the Lord "from the least to the greatest." In this promised there is nothing that will hurt or destroy, but abundance of peace and righteousness. Hence they that there grow strong, wax valiant, turn to flight the armies of the Lord. Why the difference? Is it proper? By the above inquiries I mean to draw out the mind to a point of inquisitiveness on a subject of no small importance as vast as to step all quibbling and demand candor, revelation and reason. The history of the doctrine of redemption is full of interest, of such interest as affects the future as well as the present. By some writers the whole scheme is included in the idea of Christ's death with reference to both actual and original sin; while by others the work of redemption is considered in their arguments as to partake of a twofold application to man, i. e., to original sin as a redemption, to actual sin as an atonement. Augustine, in his opposition to the arguments of Gregory, to the effect that all men (excepted such as Moses, Elijah, Isaiah, Paul, etc., who were good men), did not need redemption, insisted that all men did need redemption, but all did not need atonement. Irenæus, who argued the question of atonement (as of the necessity of redemption), found it necessary to divide the subject and argue for the positive and the negative aspects of his subject. This feature was added to some extent in almost every age of the church. Even Dr. Rolleston speaks of the economy of salvation "redemptious through the atonement of Christ." Binney is much more decided, and so divides the economy of salvation as to speak of "redemptious from and atonement for sin." It is proper to say, however, that Dr. Rolleston treats the subject as if the two aspects of the question were one. He says, "By the atonement we understand for sin by the suffering and death of Christ, whereby salvation made possible to man." Thence he argues the question as having only one bearing. Now the question arises, Is it no part of Socinianism either, to the effect of the death of Christ, that same for actual as for original sin, and if so, how can infants be saved without faith? I know the answer ready to the effect that "they are saved by the death of Christ and through the merit of his death without faith." This is saying too much, if his death had the same effect on actual or personal sin that it had on original sin. For if it did, then men, it seems to me, would be saved from their actual sin without faith, which would be a direct contradiction of the Bible. I should it be said that personal sins are forgiven only by faith, or the salvation of an adult from actual sin is to express declaration of holy writ, to be "by grace through faith," we contradict the assertion that the effect of Christ's death was the same to personal and original sin. For there is no condemnation for sin on account of original sin even in absence of faith, and there is no condemnation for actual sin in absence of faith. It follows that the two—personal sin and original sin—are quite differently related to the death of Christ. I doubt not but the fallacy properly discriminate between the effect of the death of Christ as to actual and original sin raised a theoretical necessity for the doctrine of baptismal regeneration. For inasmuch as actual sin could not be forgiven and saved without faith, and for as much as infants could not exercise faith, it was necessary to provide a means of forgiveness.

If we go back to the necessity of the death of Christ and to the facts that to that necessity, we may obtain some additional light. I understand that Jesus "came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." All were sinners; all were under the law; all were "under the trespasses and in sins." That Jesus came to "call" and "redeem" without him "no flesh living or justified." But he "died—the unjust." "He was bruised for our iniquities, and by his stripes we are healed." He came "to destroy the works of the devil;" to satisfy and buy man back; to redeem him from the deficiency of the price. It was our satisfaction; fully adequate to the demands of the law. Hence, when Adam died, even so in Christ, shall all be made alive. But the law was satisfied—after man had been redeemed—human nature was depraved and man would be evil dispositions into sin, "so that the guilt of those actual sins must be provided for, lest, after all, the death of Christ should be in vain. I therefore, that if there was a necessity for the retrospective effect of atonement for sins, there was a necessity for a prospective effect. Irenæus put it, its negative effect, to go to undo what was done while its positive effects must be the actual sin of life. This I stand to be the idea of Augustine as well as Binney and others.

"Atonement is for sin; redemption is from sin." That in while the death of Adam's offspring was involved was, as to its personal sin, "nailed to the cross" as an atonement without consulting redemption or any of his faculties redeemed from these by "the death of God that took away the sin of the world," and by this same death of redemption—the atonement

Christian Advocate.

ORIGIN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES BY THE METROPOLITAN EPISCOPAL CHURCH, BOSTON.

CHAS. E. GALLOWAY, D.D., Editor.

CORRESPONDENTS: Editors.

REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, D.D. REV. J. T. BAKER, REV. W. L. C. BERRY, REV. J. T. BAKER.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1886.

The Methodist Episcopal Church gave nearly $100,000 more for the year 1885 than in any former year of its history. A like forward movement is seen and felt in our Southern Methodist. Our offerings to this cause are three times larger than they were eight years ago.

Our neighbor, the New Orleans Picayune, does us the honor of making a liberal extract from our last week's "leader," on "Newspapers and Religion" and calls it a "magnificent article." We would be glad to know that the doctrine it preached was the creed of all secular journals.

It will be seen in the list of appointments published in another column that very few changes have been made in the New Orleans district. The preachers are laborious, zealous men, and we invoke special blessings upon their reappointment to this important, but difficult field.

Now that all of our patronizing Conferences have met and cordially endorsed the editorial and business conduct of this Advocate, we bespeak the co-operation of pastors and friends in extending its circulation. It is no small satisfaction to us that the paper meets the approval of the Conferences and with renewed energy we will endeavor to make it more and more worthy of commendation.

From far and near we have received commendations of this Advocate's utterance on "Dawdling with Justice." For these kindly endorsements we are profoundly grateful. It shall be our effort to speak forth words of truth and soberness on all great living questions, to the fear of God, with charity for all and with malice toward none. Believing that good morals are the very bulwark of our social order, we shall not hesitate to discuss issues affecting the same.

The action of the faculty of the Ohio Wesleyan University in enforcing the rules against the going is generally approved. It caused some friction at the time, but with restored quiet there is higher regard for the rule and the spirit that framed it. Church institutions find the reasons for their existence and the secret of their success in conserving the moral and religious life of students.

The London Methodist Recorder, of recent date, contains this graphic sketch of Mr. Parnell, the Irish political leader:

"Louis XIV.'s proud boast, 'L'Etat—c'est moi,' may be parodied by this man without a palace or a throne: 'Ireland—that is myself.' This 'leader of the Irish people,' as his admirers call him, a nominal Protestant, destitute of Celtic characteristics, without the eloquence, imagination, humor, blarney and pathos of O'Connell, a-tute, calculating, cold-blooded with his Anglo-Saxon dissent and name, wields a power greater than the 'Liberator' ever wielded, and is, perhaps, a greater danger to the state than the armed insurrectionists of former times. Indeed, the so-called 'leader' is a driver and dictator, and brooks no crossing of his will, as Mr. Callan found to his own cost in the Louth election. In that contest, if Greek did not meet Greek, Celt met Celt, priest met priest, curie met curie, and but for the strong force of police shillalah would have met shillalah; but the Parnellite nominee triumphed over the Independent Nationalist."

The "Successful Merchant," by Rev. William Arthur, has passed through forty-three editions, and yet holds a place in the literature of practical religion. But so innocent of its authorship and history is the Christian Commonwealth as to make the following verdant notice of it, which we find in the Methodist Times, of London:

The author of this volume is showing himself capable of writing on a variety of subjects and writing equally well upon all. The present volume is likely to become popular. It is certainly worthy to be read in every household, and is especially valuable to young men. It is one of the books that we can heartily recommend for a holiday gift from parents to their sons.

The Times very aptly says: "To be told that the Rev. William Arthur is showing himself, capable of writing on a variety of subjects is something like saying that Lord Tennyson is showing himself capable of writing poetry."

Louisiana Conference.

This body met in Baton Rouge, the capital city of the State, on Wednesday the sixth instant, with Bishop J. C. Keener in the chair. Rev. Dr. C. E. Evans was elected secretary and Rev. A. C. Coney assistant secretary. There was a full attendance the first day, and the preachers were in the most cheerful spirits of the typical itinerant. What a joyful, inspiring reunion is afforded by an Annual Conference! There is nothing like it, for no other body has the esprit de corps of a Conference of Methodist preachers. From different parts of the field these brave soldiers come up to report, exchange experiences, and are recommissioned for another year. And from these sessions they carry away a baptism of fire that cheers and inspires them through all "dangers, toils and sorrows." To have membership in such a heroic legion—to be counted worthy of such comrades—is surely high honor. And in no home field of our church is the military feature of the military more signally displayed than in some parts of the Louisiana Conference. Chivalric souls are many of that noble rank and file!

At the roll call three veterans failed to answer. They had been discharged from the church militant and have gone to join the shining hosts of the church triumphant. Revs. John S. Davis, R. M. Crowson and R. T. Parish had fallen upon the field, with swords "still warm with recent fight."

Committees were appointed on church publications, temperance, Bible cause, Conference relations, Conference records and memoranda.

Communications from Rev. W. C. Dunlap, agent of Paine Institute, Rev. Dr. J. B. McFerrin, agent of the Publishing House, and Rev. Dr. David Morton, secretary of the Board of Church Extension, were read and referred to appropriate committees.

Quite a number of visitors were present and seemed to enjoy the Conference sessions. Drs. Young and Morton and Bro. Dunlap, our Connecticut men; and Revs. J. A. B. Jones, J. W. Chambers, L. S. Jones and D. A. Givens, of the Mississippi Conference, and Rev. Dr. T. A. Adams, president of Centenary College, were welcomed within the bar of the Conference.

On Thursday report No. 1, of the Committee on Education was presented endorsing the Paine Institute, and accepting the assessment made upon the Conference for sustaining that enterprise. Rev. W. C. Dunlap was then introduced and spoke and sung to the Conference. The full assessment was not quite reached, but we hope will be realized in due time. (On Thursday night the Church Extension anniversary was held, with addresses by Dr. Morton and Dr. R. A. Young. There was a large congregation and a rather small collection. We are not sure but that the growing sentiment of the church against the collection at the Conference anniversary is wise. The preachers all give at home with their congregations, and thus become examples to the flock. The anniversary should be held by all means, and addresses delivered, packed with facts and principles; but the collection might be omitted. Most of the money is given by the preachers; some of whom give unwisely.)

On Friday morning came the cold wave, which affected much the attendance upon the public services. Preachers and people were diligently engaged in keeping warm. The "oldest inhabitant" had never seen it on that wise. In the land of the orange and magnolia the mercury stood at eleven degrees above zero. But the Bishop held the Conference to its work and business proceeded with about the usual dispatch. On this account, however, we failed to hear many of the reports. Of two things we were assured: 1. The preachers had done faithful work during the year and received hundreds into the membership of the church. 2. There had been a rather excessive use of the printing knife. In some places the church Conference gives too liberal an interpretation to those disciplinary words, "lost sight of." After all their large gatherings there was reported a slight decrease of membership.

The report on church publications was presented by the chairman, Rev. Beverly Carrairie. It was an admirably written paper and a terrible, but just arraignment of the poisonous, popular literature of the day. By resolution of the Conference it will be published in the Advocate next week. We are most grateful for this very cordial terms in which this paper was endorsed and for the hearty, unanimous vote of the Conference in its adoption. The editor has found warm friends among the Louisianians, both in his personal and official relations to them.

The election of delegates to the General Conference was held on Saturday, resulting as follows: Clerical—C. W. Carter, J. T. Sawyer, T. J. Upton; alternates—J. B. Walker, R. Randle, Lay—A. C. Mitchell, W. H. Godale, T. C. Stauder; alternates—L. R. Lay, Dr. A. S. Helmick.

The vote on the change of name stood: yeas 1; nays 67.

The report of the Committee on Temperance presented by R. V. J. T. Sawyer, elicited warm discussion. Resolutions accompanying the report were adopted as follows:

Resolved, That we hereby urge upon our pastors and people fidelity to disciplinary requirements as to liquor selling and drinking, and deem it important that there should be uniform administration on this vital subject.

Resolved, That while we should keep aloof from partisan politics, we nevertheless deem it the high duty of all Christians to labor in all legitimate ways for the suppression of the liquor traffic.

A resolution was passed requesting the pastors to take up collections in their several congregations on the last Sunday in March and the first Sunday in April, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the delegates to the next General Conference.

The report on education gave hearty endorsement to Centenary College under the presidency of Dr. Adams and to Mansfield College in charge of Dr. F. M. Grace.

The first Friday in March was set apart as a day of fasting and prayer.

The Conference was delightfully entertained by the good people of Baton Rouge, and there was unanimous agreement that Bro. Fannin Leloy makes a capital Conference host. Our home was with Bro. Holmes, to whose household we are indebted for charming hospitality. We very much regret that the exceedingly cold weather and an engagement to return to the city to preach on the Sabbath prevented our accepting many appreciated courtesies. Another time we will return and make the rounds.

The next Conference will be held at Ruston, the new town that has sprung up like magic in North Louisiana.

The Episcopal Mission.

We are now in the midst of the second week of the New Year's mission in New Orleans conducted by Rev. W. Hay Alken, a "missioner" from England. His great work in England, in connection with the Church Parochial Missionary Society and his recent labors in New York, led our people to expect much from his coming. It has been our privilege to hear him on several occasions and to study his methods. He impresses one as a profoundly spiritual man, bent on the conversion of souls. His manner is entirely unaffected and his movements somewhat awkward. He evidences a refreshing forgetfulness of himself and wins upon you by the warm solicitude of his divine zeal. There are no displays of the grace and charm of the popular orator, but he commands rapid attention and holds his audience under the pleasing sway of his thought and theme. He has a rich vocabulary, and the proper, forcible word never fails to come at his bidding. He preaches without notes and generally in an easy, conversational style, but at times becomes impassioned and soars into the realm of real eloquence.

His methods are according to Methodist traditional orthodoxy. He makes direct appeal to sinners, urges immediate decision, and gives them opportunity, under various propositions, to declare their allegiance to Christ. One evening at Trinity Church we heard with delight his powerful appeals, and in the "after-meeting" observed him walking down the aisle pressing home the importance of immediate decision. He insisted earnestly upon the possibility of instantaneous conversion and a clear, inspiring knowledge of the same. How vigorously he assailed a religion of mere form and profession! And with merciless hand did he expose the falsity of professing Christ and yet loving sin, and indulging in worldly vanities.

The preaching of this man of God can but do good, and we rejoice that our sister denomination in the city is favored with his mission gospel and methods. If his labors here much fruit among them, a more evangelical spirit will pervade the church and a higher spiritual standard of church membership be required. If space permitted, we would be glad to reproduce many of his striking sentences.

The Annual Conferences have all been held except the Baltimore, which meets in March, and the volume of another ecclesiastical year in Southern Methodism has been written. Upon the whole the results are most gratifying. Our membership has considerably increased—probably reaching a round million. Missionary offerings have advanced and will closely approximate two hundred thousand dollars for foreign missions alone. Interest in church extension is growing, that department of conational service having already become very popular. Work among the negroes is being revived with something of our antebellum missionary zeal, and Paine Institute is an established, concrete expression of the same. Altogether the retrospect is grateful and the prospect hopeful.

Pastors who take their foreign mission collection early are requested to report the same to this office.

Bishop Bowman on Prohibition.

Bishop Thomas Bowman, the senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has written a short letter to the Central Christian Advocate, giving his observations on the operation of prohibitory laws in certain States and some words of wise counsel to the friends of reform. While secular papers, with a decided leaning toward rum, are publishing statements to the contrary, it is well to keep the facts before the people. He says:

"During the last six months my duties have called me into twelve of the States of this Union. In addition I have met with men of intelligence and wide observation from nearly all other States. I have thus come in contact with persons of all classes and representing all the sections of our country. With many I have conversed freely and fully on the various questions relating to the general subject of temperance. From all this I am convinced that the sentiment in favor of temperance and the final prohibition of the liquor traffic is gradually and surely growing. However the wise and good may differ as to the best methods to be employed in order to secure the desired end, all are hopeful, and have strong faith in the ultimate triumph of the cause of prohibition.

I also desire to say that I have had good opportunity to see the work of prohibition in Iowa and Kansas, and to gather the facts in regard to it, from those having ample means of knowing all about it. It gives me great pleasure to say that, in these States, prohibition does prohibit. I have seen no drinking in either of the States; and well-informed persons have assured me that the traffic in intoxicants has almost ceased in the larger portions of these States.

Will you allow me to give a word of caution? Should there not be a little more charity on the part of those interested in the third party movement, toward the friends of prohibition who may differ with them as to the wisdom and propriety of that method, for the attainment of the end desired by all? In some of the papers we find severe criticisms, not of method, but of men and their motives, and sometimes false reports are published, and thus the characters of good and devoted friends of the cause are seriously damaged. We think this is neither wise nor Christian, and would most earnestly exhort all the parties in this great cause to be kind and charitable toward each other and thus give their enemies no advantage over them."

Joy in the Joy of Others.

BY REV. J. H. A. ARKENS, D. D.

Sorrow and sighing, lamentations and crying every where. No joy. Is life worth living? Is the melancholy interrogatory of many. Sympathy with them induces me to point them to an unfailing fountain of pure delight. There is joy for each and joy for all, joy for the million: joy in the joy of others.

Many are happy, fortunate, full of joy. They prosper peculiarly, they are well-to-do, even wealthy. Their social and family relations are genial and satisfactory. They are respected; their children thrive. They occupy high positions in Church and State. Rejoice in their joy—and most of your sorrow will cease.

Here and there I've met with fellow-mortals so base, yea, devilish, that the joy of others gave them pain. Bitter, envious envy filled their souls. They deserve to be unhappy. It is the unhappiness of devils; an envious heart is a miniature hell. Rightly they reap what they sow. I weep not with them that weep because of the happiness of others. Those sorrowing because of others' joy are the same who are rejoicing in others' misfortune. "Serves them right!" you hear them complacently say, unthinkably indicating that it gave them great pleasure to witness the pecuniary loss, financial afflictions, bodily illness, official decapitation of their acquaintances. Flee from such as you would flee from demons. They are blood-relations of Satan.

To rejoice with them that do rejoice is apostolic, angelic, divine. The apostle deemed it his greatest pleasure to be assured of the happiness of others, by walking in the truth. There is joy in the presence of God over one sinner that repenteth and becomes a happy heir of eternal life. For the joy set before him, Christ made unheard-of sacrifices. Seated at the right hand of God it is now his supreme delight when sinners are saved from their sins. Upon earth God declares, "that not in the sinner's death, but rather in his salvation he has pleasure."

How seldom that the poor find pleasure in the wealth of the opulent, the unknown and unhonored in the celebrity and honor of others, the forsaken and unloved in the friendship and love in which others exult! If it pleased God to assign me my abode in a fog-ridden valley why should my bosom be filled with rancor because others dwell on sunny elevations? If the mind which was in Christ is in us, then the happiness of others will make us happy. If our income is small, it is gratifying to know that others have larger receipts. I may not be enthusiastically desired as pastor and preacher; but it gives me pleasure to learn that others are in great demand. I live in a small house, and wife and children have to exercise the strictest economy, yet do I find great satisfaction in finding that many others occupy palatial mansions, while wife and daughters, expensively attired, traverse the suburbs in an elegant equipage.

Your lot has fallen to you in pleasant places. Be happy. Love your neighbor as yourself and rejoice in his joy. This love conveys the joy of the joyous to your own bosom, makes it your own. The music in a gentleman's parlor delights even the tramp on the sidewalk. Find pleasure in the pleasure of others. The beautiful flowers in a neighbor's garden are certainly not my own, but they afford me much pleasure nevertheless.

A Preacher's House Burned.

The telegram of Friday morning last brought intelligence of a calamity that had befallen our friend and brother, the Rev. R. D. Norworthy, presiding elder of the Meridian district, Mississippi Conference. "On the morning before his house was destroyed by fire with all its contents, the family barely escaping with their lives. He had recently removed from the parsonage at Edwards to his own hired house in Meridian, to take charge of the district. This disaster coming on so soon after the expense of moving over a hundred miles and furnishing entirely a home in which to live, is especially distressing. Rev. W. C. Black, our pastor in Meridian, makes a suggestion to friends about replenishing the library of Bro. Norworthy which we doubt not will be heeded and broadened to other things. Bro. Black writes as follows:

"Rev. R. D. Norworthy has had a serious misfortune. Night before last his house was burned with most of his household goods. Some members of his family made a very narrow escape from the flames. His library and all his sermons and notes were destroyed. To a preacher the loss of a library is a serious matter. Are there not many brethren, lay and clerical, who have books that they can spare to replenish the library of our unfortunate brother? 'The Lord loveth a cheerful giver.'"

Historical Personalities.

Now that the Annual Conferences for the passing year are all over, except the Louisiana, Florida, and Baltimore (and they will effect no change), and having elected delegates to the approaching General Conference, a few facts will not be uninteresting to readers concerning the persons whose lives constitute a part of the official history of the church. We date back fifty years.

Of the delegates representing the Southern Conferences in the General Conference which met at Cincinnati in 1835 the following only survive: James McAfee, of Virginia; William Murrah, of Alabama, and G. T. Henderson and J. B. McFerrin, of Tennessee.

Of those representing the Southern Conferences at Baltimore in 1840 the following still live: T. N. Ralston, of Kentucky; William Murrah and J. B. McFerrin.

Of 1844 only two are elected to the approaching General Conference, namely—Andrew Hunter, of Little Rock, and J. B. McFerrin. These are living of the delegates to the General Conference of 1844, in addition to the two above named, the following brethren: Jesse Borling, of Alabama (now of Georgia); William Murrah; J. E. Evans, of Georgia; H. A. C. Walker, of South Carolina; and Jerome C. Barryman, of Missouri. Of the Convention which met at Louisville in 1845 only the following survive: T. N. Ralston, Wesley Browning, J. W. Hanner, Jesse Borling, H. A. C. Walker, James E. Evans and J. B. McFerrin.

Of the eighty-seven delegates and two Bishops, Soule and Andrew, who met at Petersburg, Va., in 1846, at the first General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the following twelve survive: T. N. Ralston, J. W. Hanner, W. M. McFerrin, William Murrah, Wesley Browning, Andrew Hunter, John G. Jones, of Mississippi; H. A. C. Walker, Whiteford Smith, of South Carolina; J. E. Evans, Jesse Borling and J. B. McFerrin.

JOHN KUNYAN.

BY W. J. JAMES.
"I was led home to prison,"—J. Bunyan.
"I had home to prison,"—thus he spoke,
Was it to be his lonely cell?
"I loved the Lord," (he for his sake,
And Jesus bore all things well;
And from men, while God is near,
The prison gloom I do not fear.
"How will thy wife and children fare,
If long I be from thee, my dear?"
"I can not tell," said every where;
He will get children's hearts to supply;
In bondage held I will be free,
And prison is a home to me.
"Thou canst not preach, thy work is o'er;
The world rejoices at thy fall;
God's messenger, mankind no more Shall hear from thee the gospel's call."
"God's purposes I can not see,
But he can make use of me."
And there for twelve long, lonely years
In Bedford jail the old man lay;
God kept his heart from earthly cares,
And made his darkness light as day;
And there the glorious prisoner's pen
Wrote living truths for dying men.
And now on Africa's distant shore,
In the far land of the free,
From east to west, the wide world o'er,
The "Prisoners" read by land and sea.
God works in ways men can not tell;
Bunyan can preach in prison cell.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

It has been justly observed that the literature of a nation is declarative of its intellectual and moral status. It is easy and perfectly natural to write about those things that are constantly thought of and practiced. Here is a fountain that must overflow and spread out before the vision, forming a sea of glass mirroring the celestial, or a very different sea whose waters are turbid and brackish, and over which no thing of life can fly.

The overflow of a nation's mind and heart is before us to-day in a nation's literature. And what an overflow! Here and there, indeed, have been noble utterances in book-form; but they are as islands in the ocean, while the great body of the printed matter offered to the public is that which inspires the regret and begets the mortification of every true lover of his race. To think that so fair a thing as the mind, so divine a thing as the soul should produce and feed upon the abundance and superabundance of idle trash and false sentiment and pointless fiction and God-forgotten science and open skepticism that line the shelves, cover the counters, creep into the homes, drip from the center-table and coil in the school-boy's satchel is the thought of sorrow and alarm to the church to-day.

We said this literature is declarative; it shows the inward life and history as the lava on the plain reveals the hidden heart of Mt. Vesuvius. But this is not all. Such literature is not only declarative, but formative. We know what influence it has, and we know what food does, whether it be provision for the body or poison for the mind. And we know the power of poison.

A gentleman in India was taking a book out of his library, and felt, as his finger entered the leaves, a sharp sting. He was poisoned by a reptile concealed amid the pages. He is not the only man stung and poisoned to death by a book. Voltaire said he was made an infidel by a skeptical poem memorized in childhood. Each of you know the hurt done you in mind and heart by certain classes of the world's literature. You have been poisoned, your boys and girls are poisoned; you see it in too many unmistakable ways, and great masses of the people are poisoned in thought and conscience and life. No trouble to tell when a mineral or vegetable poison has been taken; nor is it difficult to discover a more subtle and deadly poison that, taken in through the eye, enters the mind with blighting influence, deadens the heart and corrupts and destroys the purity and faith of the soul.

Naturally, the church, which God has always used as the instrument of conferring good upon men, as well as in checking evil, looks for a remedy and antidote. More and more we are impressed that the needed relief or remedy is to be found in a pure, sound and every way healthful literature. If the garden is filled with roses and useful plants, there will be no room for the nettle and noxious weeds. They will and must be crowded out. So crowd out evil literature with good.

Millions can testify to-day to the power of a good book, tract or paper to arrest thought and bring the soul to God. Why should not hundreds of millions feel the same mighty influence? Certainly God never intended the printing press to be owned by the devil. That, with all other great and useful inventions, is of God, is the gift of God and is intended of him to be wings for his gospel and helps for his people. Let us claim the press for Christ, and say to Satan, who would touch it, The Lord rebuke thee. I stand amazed at our timidity. We let the world and sin take the most beautiful and blessed gifts of God from us. And here the greatest force on earth, next to omnipotence, we permit to be turned against us—often with the faintest resistance—when the force itself was given us by the Almighty for our own good and the instruction and salvation of men. Why, sir, we ought to make the printing press cover every error with a pyramid of good books as high as the ancient monuments of Egypt, while under every throb and impulse of the heart of the church, the daily and weekly issues of that press should flutter over the earth like white-winged birds of peace or come down upon the souls of men like manna from the skies. We exhort the church to the production of the religious book—the history that recognizes God; the science that sees him in stones and brooks and everything. May God raise up authors by the ten thousand of this kind! We look to the church for the religious paper; more and more religious—attacking evil fearlessly, upholding the good and giving spiritual food in great measure. We exhort the church to the use of the tract. Tracts that will take ten, twenty and thirty minutes in reading; tracts on all worthy and desirable subjects; tracts on temperance, on the Sabbath, on education, on missions, on church building, on prayer, on giving, on every Christian duty and every doctrine of the Bible. Then distribute them as God distributes the dew and rain and sunshine, and then look to see as marvelous a result in the spiritual world as is seen in the physical under sunlight and moisture. We thank God that our church is realizing the danger and the remedy more and more and shows itself ready to combat the one and provide the other. May the Lord make us tenfold more diligent and faithful! May he raise up, for us a host of writers not only of intellectual power, but full of faith and the Holy Ghost!

Our various church publications have been laid before the committee. We most heartily commend the Nashville Christian Advocate to the people in and out of our church as a first-class connectional church organ and religious paper. We are equally pleased with our Sunday-school literature published at Nashville, and beg our preachers and superintendents to take no other in that line. We mark a steady improvement in our Quarterly Review, and impress upon the church the necessity of such a periodical.

We cordially endorse the business management and editorial conduct of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Fresh, vigorous, wide awake and religious, it evokes our interest, enlists our sympathies and engages our warm and constant support.

Mississippi Conference Notice.

Some time before the meeting of our Conference I published a notice, stating that certain reductions would be made by various railroad companies. Two of these railroad companies did not give the promised reduction. I then published a notice that the money would be refunded on presentation of the certificate of the secretary. It now becomes necessary for me to state that it is very doubtful whether the money will be refunded or not. In justice to myself I deem it proper to give a history of this matter in order that it may be known where the responsibility for this foolery rests. It being customary for the pastor of the church at which the Conference session is to be held to make arrangements for reduced rates, I made application to all the railroads likely to be traveled over by any of our members. The application to the Vicksburg and Meridian and the New Orleans and Northeastern roads was made through the agent at this city, Mr. W. M. Reeder. In his reply, dated November 10, Mr. Reeder says: "I have following reply from our general passenger agent, 'You may sell tickets to return at rate of one cent per mile to points in Mississippi on the New Orleans and Northeastern and Alabama (Great Southern) divisions, and at rate of two cents per mile to points on the Vicksburg and Meridian division upon certificate signed by the secretary.'"

Soon after receipt of this I published my article in the Advocate. The evening before Conference adjourned I was informed by a member of the Conference that he had tried to get a ticket at the promised rate, but failed. I immediately sent a responsible party to Mr. Reeder to make inquiry about the matter. Mr. Reeder said there should be no trouble—that his instructions from the general passenger agent were to sell tickets at reduced rates, and that he had so instructed the ticket agent. Notwithstanding this no reductions were given.

The morning after Conference adjourned I interviewed Mr. Reeder, and he promised that the money should be refunded. I then published my statement that the money would be refunded. Now I am informed by Mr. Reeder that the general passenger agent refuses to give an order for refunding the money. The reason he assigns for doing so is this: He says that after he had received my application and given the instructions above quoted to Mr. Reeder, Rev. R. S. Woodward made application to him for reduced rates for the Conference, and that he promised Mr. Woodward a better rate than he had given me, viz., a round trip ticket for half fare, and that he issued instructions to agents to sell tickets at that rate. He failed, however, to give notice to me or to Mr. Reeder. Hence the members of the Conference were never informed of this arrangement. Some of them found it out accidentally, but the rest paid full fare coming and going over both the Vicksburg and Meridian and the New Orleans and Northeastern. Yet that same general passenger agent says in a letter to Mr. Reeder that if the members of the Conference did not get the reduction, it was their own fault. "Their own fault," when he authorized a notice to be published promising reduced rates on the return trip on the presentation of the secretary's certificate, and then changed his programme and required round trip tickets to be bought at the starting-point without giving any notice to me or Mr. Reeder of this change. Mr. Reeder did not know until after Conference had adjourned that any more instructions had been given.

Hereafter, when our Conference is to be held, I suppose it will be well for some one to communicate with the aforesaid general passenger agent every day for two weeks before the session to know what his latest programme is.

The Vicksburg Sunday-School.

MR. EDITOR: The facts and figures as to our Sunday-school, presented by you about a year ago, elicited so much interest that I am tempted to give you some details as to another. We strive to improve and are always more than ready to test new ideas and new plans, and it may be that in our system something may be found that will be of value to others. Gross enrollment, 200—officers and teachers, 24; scholars, 176. Average attendance, officers and teachers, 20; scholars, 96-116. Of this number we have in infant department: Officers and teachers, 6; scholars, 81-90. Eleven scholars were present every Sunday in the year 1885, and of these one has completed her fifth of unbroken attendance.

The Exposition of last spring was generally attended, and is responsible in a large measure for the small average attendance, and not less so for the fact that no officer or teacher is reported present every Sunday. Though of these some of them did not miss a lesson, as they attended the New Orleans schools. Collections for the year aggregate $351 55—regular weekly collections, $150 88; missionary collections, $108 50; birth-day box, $21 88; egg breaking, $20 37; Christmas Eve collection, $13 35; sundries, $36 88. These amounts indicate that the school is financially prosperous and entirely self-sustaining. The first item of the above is the weekly class contribution by envelope, averaging about $3 per Sunday, and is used in meeting the regular expenses.

The several classes are assessed at the beginning of each year and a monthly collection taken for missionary purposes. Of amount so collected $96 is appropriated to the support of a native preacher in China, no failure having been made in this payment for some eight or ten years. The remainder of this collection is devoted to the maintenance of a mission school established some months since in south Vicksburg. This school is officered and taught by volunteers from the main school and has already an enrollment of fifty scholars and comfortable and reasonably furnished quarters. Its prospects of success are most encouraging. The third item of collection is at least somewhat new and consists in a nice box, appropriately inscribed and easy of access. In this it is expected that on their several anniversaries each member of the school shall deposit one cent for each year of life.

As even little folks can see the necessity of improvement and have a desire to lend a helping hand, the infant department, whilst meeting their full proportion on other calls, started an egg collection, and at the breaking turned in $20 37 for church repairs.

The Christmas season was remembered by an entertainment on Christmas Eve, beginning with appropriate exercises by the school in the church and ending with an excellent supper. This last, intended originally for the children only, proved to be of such abundance that the entire congregation was invited and took part. As no Methodist assembly is complete without the usual collection was taken up, and this, with a portion from the birth-day box, aggregating $33 35, was sent as the gift of the children to the Natchez Protestant Orphan Asylum.

On Christmas Day, with appropriate exercises, added by the pastor and the singing-school, a beautifully hewn Christmas tree was presented to the children of the mission school. Whilst thus financially blessed there is abundant evidence that spiritual blessings have not been wanting, some twenty of the scholars having been received into full connection on profession of faith during the year 1885. "By their fruits ye shall know them." And these fruits indicate that our teachers have striven to teach with a purpose and that they believe the Sunday-school is and should be the nursery of the church.

The school is fully supplied with the literature issued by the Publishing House at Nashville. A young people's meeting, occupying the hour preceding Sunday night service, organized something over a year ago, and having an average attendance of about thirty, is an outgrowth of the Sunday-school.

A singing-school, composed of some of the teachers and older scholars, meets once a week to practice and learn the songs used in the Sunday-school.

The most perfect harmony exists in the corps of teachers and officers, and among them is no rivalry save "that generous emulation as to who can best work and best agree." We feel that God has indeed been with us, and we thank him for his abundant mercies.

Watch-Night.

BY MRS. L. CARY SADLER.

A few ladies proposed to keep "watch-night." How we kept it might interest some of the readers of the Advocate. To some of those present it was "a new thing under the sun," while to a few it was as common as the end of the year. Having no church near we met at the home of the eldest lady. She opened the meeting by reading St. John III. Then gave out the hymn,

"And now, my soul, another year
Of thy short life is past.
I can not long continue here,
And this may be my last."

After offering a prayer, all sang, "How firm a foundation!" Then followed other hymns, interlarded by conversation. Only one gentleman was present, and he and one little girl were the only ones not members of the church. There were but three married ladies present. To keep up the interest of the young ladies each one present was asked to read an article or poem selected by the eldest lady from religious papers. Only one young lady refused to read on account of having a sore throat and the young man declined also. After all had read at intervals, interspersed with singing, the leader very unexpectedly asked one of the young ladies what it was that she had read. Then they all had to put on their thinking caps and comment on the articles which each one read. This proved instructive and interesting. As the hour hand of the clock pointed to eleven o'clock for the last time in 1885, the leader took a sheet of paper and wrote a sentence, turning the edge down and requested each one to write a sentence with the word "watch" in it and sign their names. This was done, and one read the following: "Can you not watch one hour?"—Mrs. S.; "Will you watch and pray?"—Miss Anna; "Why do we thus watch?"—Sarah; "We are watching for a blessing!"—Mrs. D.; "Will you pray for me while we watch?"—Miss Martha; "We will sing and watch!"—Miss Louisa; "We have been watching the hours!"—Mrs. C.; "What is watch-night for?"—Miss Lizzie; "Will you watch your bad habits and try to improve them?"—Miss Rena; "Watch and pray!"—Miss Ellen; "What are we watching for?"—Miss Nellie; "Watch for Jesus!"—Miss Emily; "Watch for the new year!"—Ida (a little girl). After more singing another paper was passed around on which each was to write the dearest, sweetest or best word. It was read with this result: Heaven, 1; home, 2; love, 1; mother, 6; our Savior, 1; Jesus, 2. We then all sang that good old hymn, "A charge to keep I have." Another prayer, and the old year, with all its joys and sorrows, was gone, and as the bells "rang out the old and in the new" it found us singing,

"Come, let us anew our journey pursue,
Roll round with the year,
And never mind's all that the Master appear,
His mercy will let us see."
And our own hearts true,
By the patience of hope and the labor of love."

Wishing each other a "Happy New Year," we separated, knowing not what a day may bring forth.

—How quick is the succession of human events! The cares of to-day are seldom the cares of to-morrow; and when we lie down at night we may safely say to most of our troubles, "Ye have done your worst, and we shall meet no more."
—God warns the earth with snow; can he not also warm the soul with grief?

What an American Should Be.

In the initial number of the New Princeton Review Dr. McCosh discusses this question. Some extracts we give as follows:

The time has come, I believe, for America to declare her independence in philosophy. She will not be disposed to set up a new monarchy, but she may establish a republic confederated like the United States. Certainly she should not shut herself out from intercourse with other countries; on the contrary, she should be open to accessions from all quarters. But she should do with them as with the emigrants who land on her shores, in regard to whom she insists that they speak her language and conform to her laws; so she should require that her philosophy have a character of its own. She had better not engage in constructing new theories of the universe spun out of the brain. The world has got sick of such. Even in Germany, where they summarize, expound and critically examine all forms of speculative thought, they will not listen to any new philosophical systems, and the consequence is that none is now offered—the latest being pessimism, which startled young thinkers by its extravagance, and by its containing an element of truth in bringing into prominence the existence and prevalence of evil which the philosophy of last century had very much overlooked.

A new region has been opened to the modern. A keen interest within the last age has gathered round the relation of brain and nerves to the operations of the mind, or what is called physiological psychology. It is a difficult subject, but this only makes it more attractive to the adventurous explorer. It is full of the promise of discovery, and youth will rush into it as to a newly discovered mine. We know much now of the laws of the mind, we know something of the physiology of the brain—careful experiments are being performed by competent men in various countries. We seem to have come to a position at which we may unite the two lines of inquiry, and they will be found to throw light on each other. The physiologist in his department will insist on proceeding only in the method of observation; let the psychologist do the same. Let each require of the other that he restrain premature hypothesis. As the result, we shall have an immense accumulation of empirical facts, rising according to Bacon's recommendation, to "minor, middle and major axioms," promising in the end to reach some grand laws which, while insisting that mind and matter are different substances, will realize the sublime conception of Leibniz by uniting them in a pre-established harmony.

They who start this realism are proclaiming a rebellion against all modern schools, a posteriori and a posteriori, and if they persevere and succeed are effecting a revolution. In doing so they are not overturning but settling fundamental truth on a surer foundation—as the reformers in the sixteenth century did not destroy religion, but presented it in a purer form. Fertility will be produced by this new upturning of the soil.

This attempt, if it is nolleed at all, will be assailed by the modern systems of Europe. The monarchies of the old world will look with doubt, perhaps with scorn, upon these republics of the new world which acknowledge no king. The Hegelians will not deign to look at us, because we do not proceed by dialectics and put the world into trillities. The materialists will represent us as following illusions, because we claim to be able, by internal observation, to discover high moral and spiritual truth. But in spite of all efforts to keep it down, realism, which is the obvious and the naturalistic philosophy, will ever, will again and again, come up and assert its claims. Meanwhile we keep our place, we mean to carry on and consolidate our work, and we may in the end secure attention and recognition. Acting on the Monroe principle, permitting no foreign interference, and allowing the old systems to fight their battles with each other, we hold our position and may come to command respect, as the United States have done, after being long contemned by European countries; and they may be induced to seek our established truths—as they do our corn and cattle reared in our virgin territory.

—It is common to talk about the work of the school in making good citizens. The schools can aid in this work, but the homes of a country, far more than its schools, determine the character of its citizens. It is in the home that the foundations of character are laid.—George MacDonald.

—Nothing teaches patience like a garden. You may go around and watch the opening bud from day to day; but it takes its own time, and you can not urge it on faster than nature directs.

—If men are so wicked with religion, what would they be without it?—Franklin.

ORIGIN OF THE LITURGY, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, D. D. REV. J. T. SAWYER
REV. W. L. O. HURRICUTY.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 1886.

Brookhaven, Miss., came nobly to the front last Sunday with her missionary offerings. Instead of one-fourth of the assessment as was requested by the Annual Conference the entire amount was subscribed in a few moments, and will be forwarded to Nashville this week. It was the occasion of the first quarterly meeting and Presiding Elder Weems preached a missionary sermon, preparatory to the collection. We hope this will be a reminder to pastors in all our patronizing Conferences that the missionary offerings are now in order. The earlier the collection is taken the better it will be. And while pleading the cause secure the full assessment.

Bishop Granbury expects to make an Episcopal visit to our missions in Brazil shortly. He will sail at an early day and return before the session of the General Conference.

The Protestants of Ireland are alarmed at the growing power of Parnell in English politics. At a meeting in Belfast on Monday they proclaimed their unwavering loyalty to the throne, denounced the separation of Ireland from the union, refusing to recognize an Irish Parliament, should one be established. This is the momentous question in English politics, and by it the rise and fall of parties is to be determined.

One of our most wide-awake, aggressive exchanges is the London Methodist Times. And this is one of its sprightliest paragraphs: "When Constantine cursed the Christian Church with his political patronage, a voice was heard saying, 'This day is poison poured into the veins of the church.' It was too true, and that poison has never been expelled. It is swimming in her blood to-day, confusing her brain, chilling her heart, and numbing her conscience. That premature identification of the church and of human society did not make human society Christian, but it did make the church unchristian and worldly."

Some days ago we received a private letter from an enthusiastic temperance worker, which concluded as follows:

"Yours for temperance and the third party."

Our friend is mistaken. We are for temperance and prohibition, but not for the third party. The organization of a political party upon that issue we believe to be unwise and fraught with evil to the cause. Let us command the support of good men in all parties and of all political and ecclesiastical creeds, and put upon a platform broad as the brotherhood of man and repeat for a shibboleth the song of the angels the shepherds heard.

The frequency of change in the pastorate among the Congregational Churches is causing much and serious discussion. The number of "supplies" increases and the "settled pastors" are becoming fewer yearly. So true is this that the Methodist statute of limitation in many places shows a better record for stability. A writer in The Independent thinks the trouble attributable to lack of method in choosing ministers and want of agreement as to their qualifications. Just so. And for that reason the Methodist method of sending a minister is far preferable. Upon the whole our congregations are better pleased with their pastors than those who invite a visit, discuss merits and call by vote of a majority. But the writer alluded to makes suggestions in determining the choice of a minister that might be profitably considered by our people in their estimate of the pastor sent. If he has not these qualities, the stewards, his constitutional advisers, should see that he cultivates them:

- As to the preaching:
1. Is the tone spiritual?
 2. Is the matter scriptural?
 3. Is the aim direct?
 4. Is the manner attractive?
- As to organizing power:
1. Has he shown it?
 2. If so, was it amid circumstances like ours?
 3. Has he the method in him?
- Personally:
1. Is he studious?
 2. Is he judicious?
 3. Is he amiable?

Archdeacon Farrar on the Church.

The current number of the North American Review contains an admirable article from the pen of Archdeacon Farrar entitled "The Work of the Church in America." He evidently made good use of his opportunities during his recent visit to our shores, and writes with the clear discernment of an apostle watchman and ecclesiastical statesman. The great social, moral and political questions menacing the integrity of the church and nation he points out with candor and vigor. Not as a cold, carping cavalier does he write, but with the spirit and purpose of a true friend. It is not our purpose, however, to consider the trend of his article or the special points he raises for exhortation or caution. We desire to call attention to its broad catholicity. In that respect the Archdeacon of Westminster stands out in striking contrast to certain ecclesiastical circles of the Episcopal Church on this side the sea. He recognizes the existence and divine commission of other communions, while they pretend to be, ecclesiastically, alone the people of the Lord. He recognizes each as a branch of the church of God, while they ridicule them as "warring sects," without scriptural warrant or apostolic authority. The Archdeacon says:

"By 'the church' I do not, of course, mean only the Episcopal Church. It would be a mark of unworthy arrogance for any one religious body to claim the title of 'the church' as its exclusive badge. My remarks are meant to apply to the church of God in general; to any and every religious community in the midst of which (to quote the definition of our Article) the pure word is preached and the sacraments are duly administered. By the church in America, I mean all the churches in America: whether Papal, Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Congregationalist or Episcopalian. These churches are far less separated by differences of organization and opinion than they are united by common fealty to the Gospel of Christ, and common allegiance to the two ancient creeds of universal Christendom."

And that from a distinguished, scholarly minister of the Church of England. He not only recognizes the divine rights and validity of other church organizations, but denounces it as "unworthy arrogance" for any one religious body to assume to be "the church." If the good Archdeacon could abide with us for a season, he would hear and see no little of "unworthy arrogance." It is not uncommon for a diocesan here and there to announce ex-cathedra that he represents the only true church of Jesus Christ. Dr. Farrar calls such talk "unworthy arrogance," and we are quite inclined to agree with him. Surely the Lord has not been favorable to Zion if they alone preach the word of God and duly administer his sacraments.

But the Archdeacon, if possible, is even more emphatic and levels an exhortation against those churches most disposed to be exclusive. He says:

"There must be tolerance. It must be recognized, even by those bodies which are tempted to be most exclusive, that, though there is but one flock, there are, and to the end of time will be, and are meant to be, many folds. Until the various religious bodies are content to work together side by side in mutual respect and amity; until they are ready to sink the discussion of mind and exacerbatng differences and to combine on the bases of things needful; until they respect and refrain from invading each other's sphere of work; until they substitute the spirit of large Christian charity for that of ecclesiastical opinion-warfare, so long they will be weak. Infidelity and immorality will never prevail against the unity of differing bodies of Christians; but they can safely despise the arrogant self-sufficiency which reigns in the schismatical petty schisms."

Not from any pen have we read sentiments more Catholic and Christian. They are in perfect accord with the spirit of Methodism and the teachings of the gospel. While laboring with all diligence to win souls to Christ we have never claimed exclusive authority to preach the pure word of God and have ever hailed other evangelical Christians as honored co-workers in a common cause. There is but one flock, but many folds. And Dr. Farrar insists that these many folds will continue to the end of time, and are meant so to do. If so, alas! for those sentimental prophets who are looking for all religious bodies to be absorbed into their own. Their waiting time will never be over. We are glad to reproduce such utterances from one who is a firm believer in church order. If they could be adopted and practiced by his ecclesiastical kin-people in America, "mutual amity and respect" would ensue and this republic would "still be the enlightener of the nations, the beautiful pioneer in the vanguard of the progress of the world."

Religious Progress in Japan.

The wonderful movement in Japan toward Christ seems almost like a nation being born in a day. At the present rate of progress the whole empire will be under the influence of the Christian religion in a few years. A recent number of the New York Independent contained an elaborate and thrilling account of the third general assembly of the United Church of Christ in Japan. It read like the report of a great battle from the commanding general of a victorious army. The meeting was composed of representatives of the various churches in connection with the American Presbyterian and Reformed Missions and the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland. One thousand persons were present at the opening session, and sixty-one representatives from the several churches in the empire.

This assembly meets every two years. Since the last session there has been large and gratifying increase in all departments of labor. There was an addition of 70 per cent. to the membership of the church and a large increase in the number of candidates for the ministry. Thirty-six young men are now pursuing their studies in the Theological Seminary in Tokio. The largest church reported was one in Yokohama, which has 257 members. That was the first Presbyterian Church organized in Japan, which was in March, 1872, with twelve members. It is said to have embraced at that time nearly all the earnest Christians in the empire. The contributions of that church for the past two years have been about $1200, or an average of about $4 per member.

The officers of the assembly, moderator and clerk, were natives. Their conduct of business was after the most approved methods. Every indication was given of a healthy, normal development toward self-support. In this respect the meeting was most significant and suggestive. All of the churches are partly self-supporting and sixteen wholly support their pastors. That is rapid progress. Within a few years in a heathen empire the work develops so healthfully that sixteen of the forty-four churches are independent of foreign aid. This result will not suffer by comparison with the church at home. The total gifts for church purposes amounted to $15,119 94 for the two years.

These facts ought to thrill the faith of every lukewarm supporter of foreign missions. We need no longer hesitate on account of meager reports from distant fields. Other things being equal, their achievements are in advance of the church at home.

Positions Awarded According to Merit.

It was my privilege to be present a few days ago in the consulting-room, where a State official had appointed to meet the various youths who were applicants for a certain position of some responsibility and of considerable profit. Two positions had to be awarded, and there were eighteen boys. The official spoke about thus to them: "Boys, I wish I had places for you all, but I have only two and there are eighteen of you, so sixteen must be disappointed. But I want to tell those sixteen disappointed ones beforehand, that you must not be discouraged, nor feel condemned. It may be that you are altogether worthy, and in the next trial you may win. I will consider all your cases impartially and make the award according to the merit of my ability. Before you go out I want to ask you some questions: How many of you chew tobacco? All who can say, I don't, hold up your hands." Up went eighteen hands. "Now all of you who don't smoke cigarettes hold up your hands." Up again went the eighteen hands. "All of you who don't swear hold up your hands." All eighteen went up again. One bright little fellow, who was very anxious to get the place, and who caught the idea that the award was to be influenced largely by moral qualifications, stepped forward with an air that seemed to indicate, though they may be even with me in the other three tests, I am sure I am ahead of them now, and said, "I haven't missed going to Sunday-school but twice in two years."

"Ah!" said the official, "that is a splendid recommendation for any boy."

It is to be hoped that all were sincere, and if so, it was a hard task indeed to make a decision between so many bright and winning and exemplary youths. But, doubtless, the award was just and discriminating. One was appointed because he was the son of a widow, and she was largely dependent upon his exertions for a support; the other, for a reason equally convincing. I felt very sorry for the sixteen whose countenances fell with the announcement of the award, yet I rejoiced at such an array of worthy, deserving applicants for a State position, and rejoice more than all that the State had a high official, who, in the dispensing of the patronage of his office, put a premium upon a boy who was free from habits so demoralizing, and, alas! so prevalent among the youth of the land.

PERSONNEL OF THE MISSISSIPPI LEGISLATURE.

The enterprising journalists of Jackson have sent circular letters to all the members elect of the Senate and House of Representatives, inquiring where and when they were born, where educated, their occupation in life, their politics, religion; whether married or single and other items. The published results are suggestive and interesting. Of the whole number all are married men except 21; widowers, 7; one is only 22 years old; another, 23, and another, 21. The farmers exceed any other class, numbering 59; next are the lawyers numbering 53. Nearly all occupations are represented: bookkeepers, doctors, merchants, dentists, stock-breeders, teachers, editors, and even one preacher. The column given to their religious proclivities furnishes food for thought to a mind inclined to philosophize upon politico-ecclesiastical relations. Evidently the Baptist and the Methodist are the representative churches of the people. There are 50 of the latter, and 39 of the former. Presbyterian came next, having 15; then the Episcopalian, 7; 4 record themselves as Christians; 2 Cumberland Presbyterians; 2 Protestants; 1 Catholic; 1 Disciple; 1 Israelite; 6 write themselves down as friendly to all religions and 1 as kind to all; another that he is liberal; 3 write that they have no religion; 1 that he is undecided; while 6 make no expression at all. Although there is a column calling their attention to the item of religion, these 6 either think that religion is of so little importance that they simply leave it out, or else they decline to tell what their religious views are.

No expression of opinion upon the temperance question was asked for, yet one member is so loyal to the cause that he owned himself a thorough prohibitionist. It is believed that a large majority are in favor of local option upon the temperance cause, but whether they all mean local option by counties, has not yet transpired. If they mean only local option by corporations or supervisors' districts, the friends of the temperance movement do not consider this any improvement upon the temperance law already upon the statute book. What they want is to get a law authorizing a vote by counties, so that the healthy county sentiment may counteract the vitiated influence of whisky rings in the towns and cities.

Both Houses are composed of fine looking men and in point of intellect and influence, they are said to surpass former legislatures. Both Houses have invited the clergy of the city to open the sessions with prayer. There were many applicants for the other positions, pages, door-keepers, postmasters, secretaries, clerks, and they pressed their claims with earnestness, but the clergy did not electioneer at all, only was respectfully invited to fill the place. The former place hunters were seeking to lay up treasures upon earth, while the clergy were offered the privilege of casting their bread upon the waters to find it after many days.

C. G. ANDREWS.

Evil Nodding.

There are some among us who have laid aside evil speaking in words, but they are still given to evil speaking by signs, nods, winks, grimaces and queer looks and ways. Of these two kinds of evil speaking the last is, perhaps, the worst. A sign, a nod or a look may be interpreted to mean more than was intended, to stand in place of some inexpressible something, which, after all, is hardly worth a row of pins, and not of a feather's weight. I have known some people who have given over, or professed to have given over, the habit of evil speaking, and yet they had fallen into the more reprehensible habit of evil nodding, winking, looking. The last state of such persons is worse than the first, and yet they flatter themselves that they have attained a very high state of grace when in fact they have only changed the form of the same sin. They do with the head, eye, face and hands what they had formerly done with the tongue. Some persons who have ceased or profess to have ceased, to speak evil of their fellow-men allow the disjunctive conjunction "but" to stand far what they formerly said. Each hearer is left to conjecture with this disjunctive form of speech ac-ording to his own fancy, imagination or prejudices. The speaker said no evil, but suggested any or all evil known in the catalogue of crime. It would have been better for the speaker, for the person spoken to and for the one spoken of, to have stated specifically what was to follow "but." If there are many hearers, one may fill in the sentence with one thing and another, with another thing, and still another with something worse. It is impossible to foretell what may be disconcertingly conjured. Whatever good may have been said may be "batted" all to flinders by that which follows, or is supposed to follow, "but." In this way some people who speak evil of no man suggest some evil concerning every man. They charge nothing and yet suggest everything. To "speak evil of no man" includes suggestions as well as actual charges. We are accountable for our suggestions as well as for our words.

Rather than intimate that some thing is wrong with your neighbor say plainly what it is. The better way, the scriptural way, is neither to say, or suggest evil of any man. The human heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. Who can know it?

O. L. DEFOY.

Of all the desperate devices to which a whisky thirst will resort this takes the premium. When a man will pawn his wife's leg for a drink, the case is hopeless. But this is only the exaggerated condition of every drinker, and that wife is a sad representative of the victims of intemperance. We find this in the press telegrams from New York:

"Mrs. Mary Johnson, who lives on a rock in Shantytown, in the suburbs of the metropolis, has a cork leg. She spends considerable time hunting for the artificial limb, for when the genial Mr. Johnson returns to the bosom of his family, after one of his raptures, he invariably detaches the appendage and pawns it for the price of whisky, and as soon as she can get money enough she reclaims the 'hung up' article. It was a shock to Johnson when he returned from Blackwell's Island and beheld for the first time the cork leg gracing the mantelpiece. He imagined it was the plaster fac simile of a ballet girl's implements, and asked his gentleman friends to step in and admire it. Then he wrapped it carefully in a newspaper and left it at a pawnshop, and went over to the island that night. It cost Mrs. Johnson the proceeds of two weeks' washing to redeem it."

The Richmond Advocate has a facetious article entitled "More Giraffes than Stalks." A few paragraphs will indicate the use made of the subject:

"The Giraffes are multiplying at a fearful rate, and at a rate very embarrassing to those in the high places of our Zion. The average preacher seems to be on the decline. Ordinary men are becoming so scarce that our Bishops and their associates in the cabinet would be able to attend the missionary meetings, the church extension meetings, the Sunday-school meetings, and a good deal of the preaching at the Annual Conferences, and then have the appointments ready for an early adjournment, if their business involved no other class of preachers. But there are the Giraffes, the Camelopards!

"They are so tall, and it requires such a stretch of the muscles to fit collars on them; they are so long, and the work of placing the harness so as to suit them is so tedious; they are so huge in circumference that so much patience is needed to lengthen the girths, and cut new holes for the buckles; and when it comes to arranging stalls for them, such large timbers have to be cut, hewn, polished, adjusted, that it really seems like a miracle has been performed when the portfolio opens and its contents are made known."

Rev. C. L. Pattillo, who transferred from the North Georgia Conference to the Florida Conference, reached Volusia county, of the latter State, on December 12, built a three room house, planted out an orange grove, and reached the Conference on January 6, ready for work.

Rev. R. L. Wiggins, who transferred from the South Georgia Conference at its last session, had his orange grove planted out ahead of his going, and has been trying to keep it from dying.—Wesleyan Advocate.

Enterprising brethren. But they will have to keep their itinerant consciences with all diligence, or the orange groves will command them and thought that should be given to the flock of Christ. We have no objection to preachers purchasing homes, but they should fear to live at them. They may shelter the widows and orphans when the men of God have fallen on sleep, but while able to work they should dwell in houses provided by the church and within the bounds of their charges.

—The Baptist Record has removed from Clinton to Jackson, Miss.

—Mrs. M. L. Wells, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, is lecturing in Mississippi.

—Rev. W. B. Godbey, of Carlisle, Ky., has written a book entitled "Christian Perfection."

—Bismarck and the Pope have been exchanging love letters. What strange bed-fellows politics does make.

—Rev. J. J. Billingsley preached at Felicity Street last Sunday evening. His excellent discourse was well received by the large congregation.

—Bishop Fowler, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, preached to an immense congregation in City Road Chapel, London, on Saturday evening, January 9.

—Mr. Moody expects to be in New Orleans this winter to conduct evangelistic meetings. Rev. G. A. Hall is in the city to aid in making arrangements for his coming.

—The Boston people rightly esteem the compliment paid them by the Louisiana Conference in selecting that as the next place of meeting. The Conference will be royally entertained.

—John B. Gough, the great temperance lecturer, gives this humorous reason for his three months' absence from the platform: "I have been buying and learning the pitch of a set of false teeth—my first set."

—The Central, Western and North-Western Advocates have changed form and dress. We miss the old faces, but the voice is the same. It gives us joy to see how grandly our sister church sustains her official press.

—Rev. B. B. Rayner, presiding elder of the Seashore district, requests us to say that the first Quarterly Conference of Spring Cottage mission will be held at Wesley Chapel, and not at the place heretofore designated.

—One of the Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church will visit our China Mission next fall. We regret that no episcopal visit to that vast field could have been made during the current quadrennium, as was suggested by the last General Conference.

—Mr. Stead, editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, who was sentenced to three months imprisonment in November, has been released. He addressed an immense meeting of his friends on the evening of his release. Just now he is the hero of the day. His efforts in behalf of social purity will be unabated.

—Dr. T. J. Harper, of Vicksburg, died in that city on Monday morning last, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. He was a distinguished physician and popular citizen. His warm personal friendship for the editor of this paper is among the pleasant memories of a four years' pastorate in Vicksburg.

—The Episcopal mission in this city, under the leadership of Rev. William Hay Aiken, continues with growing interest. Trinity Church was crowded on Sunday at every service. The afternoon meeting for men only was possibly the most powerful and fruitful of all during the day. He will conclude his mission here on Sunday next, and start immediately for England.

—At the election in Jackson parish last week prohibition was triumphant. The State Prohibition Executive Committee of Louisiana is planning an aggressive movement over the entire commonwealth. It, therefore, becomes every friend of the cause to prepare for action. A State convention will be held at Baton Rouge either preceding or during the session of the Legislature, and that body is urged to enact a general local option law. Every parish should be thoroughly organized, and at once.

—Miss Kats Bayard, daughter of the Secretary of State, a very lovable and popular young lady in Washington City, died suddenly on Saturday last. She was expected at the White House to assist Miss Cleveland in entertaining her guests at a reception when the news of her death was received. The night before she was quite well and assisted her mother at a reception at their own home. Retiring into her room to be called until noon, at one o'clock her room was visited, only to find her a corpse. It is supposed that she died of heart disease.

—The Florida Conference met in forty-second session in the town of Orlando, on the sixth of January, with Bishop Hargrove in the chair. F. Pascoe was elected secretary. The session was pleasant throughout, and the reports of the preachers showed a marked advance in all directions. The Bishop announced that the Conference had gained twenty-five members at that session. Amount received for domestic missions, $1,

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

COLUMBIA, Jan. 13.—The Senate and House met in joint convention at noon to-day and elected John Sherman to the United States Senate. It required 71 votes to elect. Sherman received 81 votes and Allan G. Thurman 62 votes.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 15.—Judge Hubbard, in the Circuit Court, denied the motions of attorneys in the pending cases, and they will be heard by the Supreme Court. These are the cases where saloon men and liquor dealers in Opelika and Clanton were refused license by the prolate judges and they asked Judge Hubbard to compel them to issue the license, which he refused after hearing saloon men on both sides. The result of the decision is that the towns of Opelika and Clanton are "dry," and Troy, Andalusia and Greenville are also in the same condition. With all of these towns "dry" and the country districts all over the Black belt, by vote of the Legislature prohibiting the sale of liquor, wholesale merchants here will suffer materially in their business, and Montgomery's sales will be greatly affected.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 17.—The Tribune's East Saginaw special gives an account of a strange robbery that occurred at that place last night. Two daughters of Henry P. Fongler awoke to find that during their sleep someone entered their room and cut off their long hair. Nothing else was taken.

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 18.—A telegram to-day from Union City, Col., announces the death of John D. Freeman, formerly of Mississippi. Freeman, during his stay in Mississippi, filled many high positions of honor and trust.

FORT KNOX, Mo., Jan. 18.—Another cold wave has settled down over the Northwest. The mercury in thermometers was frozen up yesterday. The spirit thermometers were registered 32 below zero. There is no wind. Reports from ranges state that stock is doing well.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—Greece offers to demobilize her forces on condition that her claims for an extension of territory be considered by the Balkan Conference when that body reassembles at Constantinople.

The Porte has informed the powers that it is ready to disband the Turkish levies as soon as peace in Serbia and Greece is assured.

M. Melidoff, the Russian Ambassador at Constantinople, in an interview with the Sultan, stated that the Porte renounced the payment of a portion of the Turkish indemnity due this year.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—Mr. Stead, editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, who in November last was sentenced to three months' imprisonment for connection with the Eliza Armstrong abduction case, was released from prison to-day. Mr. Stead is well and will speak at a meeting of his friends and sympathizers.

Illinois Central Railroad Company.

The object of this circular is to describe briefly what has been and is being done by the Illinois Central Railroad to encourage emigration from the North to the South. In October, 1885, this company inaugurated a system of low-rate Southern Land Excursions from points north as far as St. Louis, with a view of bringing before the enterprising hard-working people of the Northwest the climate and other natural advantages of the South. Since that date twenty of these excursions have been run, over three thousand people have taken advantage of them, and as a direct result over three hundred northern families have settled in the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana. It is true this number of families scattered throughout these four great States will scarcely be noticed, and yet, with their improved machinery and northern methods of agriculture, they will be, to a certain extent, important factors in the material development of these States.

At the inauguration of this movement very few believed in it or expected any results from it; but the fact is, at the present time home seekers and real estate agents from every section of the United States are availing themselves of the many opportunities and many possibilities of the South. The Illinois Central Railroad, true to its own interests and the interests of its patrons along its line of road, proposes to use every honorable means to settle this vast army of home seekers on its line in the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana. To this end, and as a means of more thoroughly advertising this territory and of bringing together land seekers and land sellers, land owners and land tillers, an "Inter-State Industrial Convention" has been called to be held at Jackson, Tenn., on February 21, 22, 23, 1886. Gentlemen from the North, eminent in their calling and of practical experience, will discuss questions and methods, the adoption of which will be the initiatory step to a loss expensive and more profitable system of farming. The four Southern States, which are special features of this Convention, have been called, and will be represented in the addresses and discussions by their ablest men. Real estate agents from the North will meet those of the South, interchanging ideas of how this great land business can be handled to the best possible advantage.

To secure as large an attendance as possible at this Convention, the Illinois Central Railroad will not only name the usual low excursion rates from points north of the Ohio river, but will make a rate of one cent per mile for each mile of travel between St. Louis and New Orleans to Jackson, Tenn., and that the greatest gain may come in every point on the entire line south of Cairo, no matter how far the traveler of the Ohio river, and a local public meeting, to explain the object of the Jackson Convention and appoint delegates who will intelligently and enthusiastically represent the attractions of their particular locality. These meetings should be held during the month of February, and I am authorized to say that if desired these local meetings will be addressed by Col. Robt. Gates, of Jackson, Assistant Commissioner for Tennessee, who is giving his entire attention to emigration and agriculture, and whose recent extended trip throughout the Northwest emphatically qualifies him in present time not only to give advice and information to the North, but to give the object of the Jackson Convention, but the wonderful enthusiasm that prevails in the North on the question of permanently locating in the South. Believing you, with us, are interested in the agricultural, commercial, social and material development of the South, and that the Convention to which your attention has been called will inevitably result in immeasurable good to the South, I am, my dear sir, Very respectfully yours, J. P. MERRY, Gen'l W. Passenger Ag't.

SORROW.

Upon my lips she laid her touch divine,
And merry speech and careless laughter died;
She drew her melancholy eyes on mine,
And would not be denied.
I saw the West wind loose his cloudlets white,
In docks, careering through the April sky;
I could not sing, though joy was at its height,
For she stood silently by.
I watched the lovely evening fade away—
A mist was lightly drawn across the stars,
She broke my quiet dream—I heard her say,
"Behold your prison bars!"
"Earth's gladness shall not satisfy your soul—
This beauty of the world in which you live;
The crowning grace that sanctifies the whole,
That I alone can give."
I heard and shrank away from her at last;
But still she held me, and would not still abide;
Yon's blinding glories shone around and shined,
With slowly shining tide.
"Look thou beyond the evening sky," she said,
"Beyond the changing splendor of the day,
Accept the pain, the weakness, the dread,
Accept, and bid me stay!"
Turned, and clasped her close, with sudden strength,
And slowly, sweetly, I became aware
Within my arms God's angel stood at length,
White-robed and calm and fair.
And now I look beyond the evening star,
Beyond the changing splendor of the day,
Knowing the pain he sends more precious far,
More beautiful than they.

To My Younger Brethren in the Ministry.

Much of our religious education is derived, almost unconsciously, from newspaper and other incidental reading. Did it ever occur to you that more of your theology comes from conversation and newspaper, magazine and review reading, than from text book study? These writings are frequently gotten up very hastily. Sometimes a man has to write something, and sometimes he has something to write. More frequently the former than the latter. Sometimes these writers are careful to put in no blandering theology, and sometimes they are not. Theological opinions and theological blanders are not one and the same thing.

The blunder I wish to point out just here, and to warn young men against, is an incidental remark of the Rev. Young J. Allen, D. D., of China, in his No. 4 of a series of papers on China, recently published in most, if not all, of our church papers. He is calling attention to the civil history of that great empire in years and centuries past, and showing it to be of a character calculated to prepare the way for the introduction of Christianity about this time. This national preparation, he says, "finds its parallel only in the similar preparation with which Christianity was introduced into the world."

Casual reading might pass this over without serious thought, but looked into a little it is seen to strike a blow at the very root of Protestant Christianity. The doctor did not think what he was writing. It is very true that the same blunder has been committed scores of times by other writers. So much more the necessity that it should be pointed out.

Reference is here to doubt made to the ministry of Christ and the apostles. But where is the parallel? No two things can be more dissimilar. The missionaries to China had first to overthrow and extirpate an old false and false religion, and then introduce an entirely new and unheard of faith. The work of Christ and the apostles was wholly different in every particular. Their business was to inculcate, teach and establish more and more firmly the old religion in which the people were born and brought up. Their business was to make the people love and practice more faithfully the religion of their fathers without the introduction of a new doctrine or precept. Parallel indeed! In what is the parallel?

The extract supposes that the religion of the Jews was something different from and opposed to Christianity, whereas the two things were one and the same thing fortuitously called by different names in different periods. It is true however that after the resurrection of Christ the revealed religion was taught by more convenient and facile means and methods than before, though the faith and doctrines taught before and after, were exactly the same in every particular. The only difference between Judaism and Christianity, the two names commonly given to revealed religion, is not in doctrines, precepts and morals inculcated in the Bible, but in the modes of teaching them. It is apparent on a little reflection that before the incarnation and visible work of Christ religion, as held all over the Bible, could not be taught and enforced by the same methods, in many respects, as it is done since.

Young people, especially ministers—and possibly older ones, too—need to be cautioned against stray blunders relating to what is called the old and the new dispensation. This is as unscriptural as it is unreasonable. The word "dispensation," even without the capital D, is scarcely a Scriptural term at all. It is used two or three times in the new version, but in the sense of stewardship; never in the sense of a method of dispensing or dealing out divine favor, as it is frequently used in the old and elsewhere.

The notion of two dispensations, an old and a new, is one of the relics of Romanism still lingering among us and doing us harm. If I remember right, this point is elaborated in "Ecclesia," to which I beg leave to refer. Popery could never get along at all without the two dispensations, the old and the new. But what have we, who hold one church and one religion, to do with them? Here is the root of the error of Dr. Allen and the seeds of other men who write that way. There is not only no antagonism; there is no difference between Judaism and Christianity. These modern Jews, as they are falsely called, are a square apostasy from Judaism, with scarcely a remnant of the old ancestral religion remaining. They repudiate the Christ of their ancient faith. And if you take Christ out of Christianity, you have very little left of any value.

And so I caution against blunder, though it be sometimes found in high places. Do not trust in any fallible name. Paley said the Jewish religion at the coming of Christ was "throughout a system of folly and delusion." Dr. Clark said the religion of mankind before Christ was "worldly, sensual or devilish, or all three." Soame Jenius, broadly endorsed by the Presbyterian Church of to-day and by Dr. Paley as well, said, "That from this book (the New Testament) may be extracted a system of religion entirely new, both with regard to the object and the doctrines, not only infinitely superior to, but totally unlike everything which had ever before entered into the mind of man." And Dr. Moses Stuart, in a Methodist quarterly, said of Jesus Christ:

"It was a bold undertaking to come out against the whole Jewish people, and especially the priesthood, on the subject of their religion. * * * But what did this young adventurer propose to do? Nothing less than to abolish the Mosaic ritual in the end and certainly change the whole face of the Jewish religion. A formidable undertaking most truly. Yet even this was not all. He proposed to teach a new religion, should pervade not only Palestine, but the whole world."

Calvin said, "The Old Testament contains nothing perfect." Again, "The Old Testament is the revelation of death."

Paley came up again. He says, "A Jewish peasant changed the religion of the world." And the whole

New Testament declares that the mild, loving, immaculate Jesus taught his people everywhere, and taught other teachers to teach them, to stand firm by their old religion, to understand it better and practice it more closely in every doctrine, duty and precept.

So you see that some of our best and ablest men somnambulate a little occasionally. And, after all, are these errors wholly evil? Perhaps not. Suppose, on the revival of letters and the introduction of Protestantism, the European divines had understood the Bible as well as "Duturny" teaches that it will be understood in coming years, then we would have a theology cut and dried to our hand. Then what would we have to stimulate a healthful labor? Would we not be, or soon become, what Drummond calls ecclesiastical parasites?

There is no good in evil, and so none to come out. But the arraignment of authors before the bar of simple truth that is palpable is at least a healthful and invigorating discipline. Errors are catching. And so I could by no means allow myself to complain if my younger brethren expect me to take my own physic. Do not take these teachings on trust. Dig out the errors and see how quickly and how thankfully I will correct them.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTRELL, D. D.

Our Legislature is now in session, and among other pressing reforms, questions regarding the treatment of convicts are being considered. A few weeks ago I wrote an article for The Capital, of Frankfort, touching this matter—a copy of which I inclose you, in which some general criticisms are ventured on the true genius of retribution. In an article from Dr. Shead, in the North American Review, several months since, the position was taken that penitentiary is singly and alone in respect of the satisfaction of justice, and that its infliction is not in order to recovery of the transgressor nor to restrain or prevent others from violation of the law. In opposition to this I would suggest that the paternity of the Divine government postulates retribution as of benevolent intent and utilization. Generalize all measures of retribution by the term "hell," and the proposition would stand thus: The Divine government is paternal. Paternity in government implies retribution even in love; therefore, hell is not in or of vengeance, but in benevolent security of authority. The question as to the duration of suffering from the retributive principles or law of a paternal government rests aside from the matter now at issue. The eternity of the operation of the law of retribution is aptly symbolized by quenchless flame and worm that is deathless. "Vengeance is mine, I will repay it, saith the Lord," but he does not say he will gratify himself in taking revenge. Penalty, except in conservation of government authority in benevolent administration, is only conceivable as in contravention of the highest and holiest rule of conduct enjoined upon us by him who "spake as never, man spake." The barbarities and savageries enacted in his name all along the highway of secular and ecclesiastical history are from out this poisonous root. Along this highway of history we may gather up enough bones that have been broken in the name of our Lord to build as many pyramids as are in Egypt and as high. But authority has softened its methods and measures gradually, until now it is hardly conceivable that men anywhere in Christendom can be found who would elect to burn a heretic with green hickory wood, as the saintly Calvin did in the case of Servetus for suggesting a theological view differing from his. In verification of the claim that hell is of benevolent intent and utilization, let it be considered that heaven once was not secure. Angels fell. The devil is to be accounted for alone upon the hypothesis of angelic apostasy. And man, in likeness of Jehovah and "in righteousness and truth," made forfeit of paradise. If the simple power and wisdom of God, operative from promptings of infinite love, could have sufficed to secure bliss to these, certainly they would have never experienced evil. Then of what can we predicate the ultimate security of the saints and of the unfallen angels? May it not be that retribution is the factor—that it constitutes one of the abutments of the arch upon which rests the structure of God's moral government? The world of mind is persistent in advancing the lines of theoretic, philosophic, governmental science; and just in proportion, as discovery has been made of the right principle or law of retribution, have there been reconstructions of society. But, alas! at what a terrible cost to those whose tongues and pens have "loosed the bands" and have bound upon the spirit of humanity an influence sweeter than are those of the Pleiades.

I have just read Mr. George W. Cable's new book, "The Silent South." The distinction he urges between civil rights and social privileges is a distinction that marks a difference which must be emphasized until our people realize it fully. He pleads for no social equality. That were an absurdity too bald for a fanatic to favor. The best elements of the South are striving now to do the very best in behalf of all. To draw properly the line which race prejudice has insisted on as being that which race instinct demands, dislodges the benevolence that comes alone from inspiration of the Almighty. When a boy I observed there were in our barnyard more conflicts between the individuals of the same species than between those of different species among the fowls. Race instinct is a law unto itself. No legislation can eliminate it; none can irrevocably fix it. One thing is irrepressibly urging itself upon the attention of the most benevolent and teachable of the South, and that is, as Burke puts it,

"A man's man for aye that, for aye that!"

There are some who have ever known it all just as it ought to have been and ought to be, who learn nothing and forget nothing and forgive nothing. A sectional snapping turtle of the South, or a serpent a-curl in any hedge that should be broken, as self-appointed guard thereof, is as repulsive as are those who, having sold us the negroes, pocketed the money and then advanced to transcendent heights of religion at our expense. Let the one snap and spring their rattles, and the others render nasal twang of thanksgiving in the great temple of American liberty that they are not as other men; the genuine loves of humanity in enthusiasm of life will work away philosophically and practically in reverent patience at the same old ever new task of furthering the kingdom. Such as have through all the fermentations been preserved in the qualities of their better being, may appear to those who have become pickled mere mushes of acquiescence; but there is a chivalry of right and love which prompts to quite else and other than attorneyship for any mere accident which has befallen a section or an organization.

Oh, these terrible fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the constitution of our climate! On Friday last I faced a snow storm for four miles right along the bank of the Ohio river to preach a funeral sermon at a house crowded with people who seldom heard a sermon—many of them Catholics. For an hour to see them stand and listen, especially the ladies that had trudged through the snow, was an inspiration. Then back home, with the pitiless wind against my right cheek and the pelting snow—my breath making a thaw so as to form icicles upon my brows and eyelids and mustache. The thought that I had reached the souls of my country audience with the words of life kept my heart warm, and the few I met in the storm seemed to salute me with another zest than that observed heretofore. A fellowship of suffering springs us into a nobler generosity.

I had begun a meeting, which was snowed under; but when it moderated I will be at it again. CLOVENPORT, Ky., Jan. 13, 1886.

Letter from Missouri.

Mrs. Editor: I have had it in my mind and heart to write to you and the "dear old Advocate" ever since Conference; but it has filled up all my time to adjust myself and keep up with all the demands of this new field of labor. Indeed, if a preacher succeeds in this live, rushing Western country, he must have a good stock of "legology" as well as practical theology, c. g.—we have over 300 members in about 200 families, and these families are scattered all over a city of 20,000 inhabitants. Then new members are moving into the city every day, and if the pastor is not on the move after them some other church may get them. In addition to all the regular work we have had a protracted meeting of six weeks, and it was a meeting of uncommon interest, i. e.—according to my experience. Nearly every member in the church was revived, a number of backsliders reclaimed, between eighty and ninety souls were converted and sixty-five added to the church. The weather was very unpleasant a part of the time yet our church was crowded from the first, and on many occasions from 200 to 400 were turned away from our doors unable to find even standing room. Our young converts nearly all pray in public and talk in class meetings. Yes, we have regular, old-fashioned Methodist class meetings here, and instead of having to beg people to witness for Christ we have to ask them to be very brief, so all may have an opportunity to speak. We have a general class that meets once a month, and two classes that meet around at private residences every Friday night. Nearly all of our new members, who are heads of families, have begun life by erecting family altars in their homes. On Thursday night last we suspended the extra services of the revival; but the Lord helping us, we expect to live in a revival all this year and look for results at every service. We have entirely outgrown our old church building, and God willing, we expect to have a new house before our next Conference. A committee is now at work trying to find a suitable lot, etc. So if you visit our next Conference at Kansas City, I will expect you to stop off and give us a message from the Lord. My reception by the brethren of the Southwest Missouri Conference was truly Methodist. There seems to be no prejudice whatever to transfers "who come to work and to stay." Of course, I felt a little strange at first, and this feeling was made more prominent because I had nothing to do but to listen and be quiet; but the brethren soon made me feel at home. My impression of the Conference may be summed up thus: A body of genuine Methodist preachers—men full of the Holy Ghost and love for souls—zealous for Christ and untiring in the work of the Master. There are many strong men in the Conference, and the body of older members show signs of having endured hardships as good soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ. Our Bro. Lowrance seems to be in great favor with the brethren of the Conference, and especially so with the membership of Centenary Church, Kansas City, for he was returned to them for the fourth year, and is now in the midst of a glorious meeting. Bro. Brown, at Lexington, is doing well; has had a revival since Conference, resulting in about fifty additions to his church. To us three the memory of other days and associations in the North Mississippi Conference are very dear, and hence we rejoice to get and read the organ of that Conference. The Lord bless every preacher and every charge in North Mississippi and give them a revival of greater power than any they have ever had. And upon the editor of the Advocate may Heaven's richest blessings constantly descend till he finishes his good began work and goes to the eternal reward.

J. M. MOON.

P. S.—My wife joins me in kindest expressions of Christian love for yourself and family, and says if it were not for the weekly visits of the "dear old Advocate," she would be homesick. You know she has been a constant reader of the Advocate since she was a little girl, and then she thinks its editor in some way belongs to her and she to him—since that time when he was a boy preacher on Black Hawk circuit.

Letter from California.

Mrs. Editor: In our Conference nearly three months of the new year has passed, while in yours it has just begun. You gave some account of our Conference in Sacramento. On the whole, it was a very pleasant session. Bishop Hargrove endeared himself to us more than ever. We propose to build an episcopal parsonage in San Francisco, and would be pleased to have him occupy it.

We sang the doxology when the Committee on the State of the Church reported a gain of four hundred in membership, just as we sang it last year when the same committee reported a gain of over two hundred. Really, there was a decrease last year, and this time a gain of only two hundred. However, there was a gain, and we should "praise God from whom all blessings flow." Committees should exercise greater care in preparing their reports. I have been voting for their reports without questioning their correctness, but—well, I suppose I shall have to continue to do so or move to dispense with committees. There was a considerable falling off in the receipts on salary of pastors and a small decrease in the collections for missions—accounted for by short crops and scarcity of money.

You speak of our vote on the change of name as being "significant." Pray, what does it signify? Certainly not that we are satisfied with our present name, but that we prefer it to the name proposed. A resolution was introduced favoring "Episcopal Methodist," but on account of some objection made by the Bishop was withdrawn for correction and was not again presented. It would have been introduced and adopted, but some of the brethren have despaired of getting a change and think it unnecessary to agitate further; while others, like Dr. Cottrell's Kentucky brethren, are of the opinion that a change would defer organic union. I have talked with some of the leading laymen of our Conference and several of the preachers who are confident that we must give up our sectional name or we will be driven to the necessity of confining our labors to the South.

The Winters circuit, to which your correspondent was appointed, is, on the whole, a very pleasant field of labor. I am situated in the Sacramento Valley, between the city of Sacramento and the coast range of mountains. The climate is most delightful, except in summer, when it is quite warm. The most of our territory is sown in small grain, though many carloads of fruit are shipped annually. In a little valley, a few miles from Winters, is grown the earliest fruit in the State. Many of your readers are perhaps not prepared to believe that oranges could be profitably grown for market in the latitude of St. Louis, and yet they are so grown within a mile and a half of Winters. It is true that only two families raise them; but the trees are rank and the fruit fine. Surely, this is a wonderful country! We have had a great deal of rain this winter—more than twenty inches—but it has been fair for several days. Grain is growing luxuriantly, and the mountain sides and other pasture lands are covered with green grass. This is a favorable time to visit California. Come out. Can you not?

My heart rejoiced while reading your account of the proceedings of the Mississippi Conference. The soil is good, and the fruits prove the diligence of the laborers. Then to have your ranks recruited by fourteen young men—"all of them of great promise!" I claim to have some interest in at least two of those young men, and glad am I that they have completed their preparations and have entered fully upon their life-work. May they gather many sheaves in the Lord's harvest ere they again embrace that staunch old hero, their father, who is now reaping a rich reward. I wish I could have been there! No more this time. Your brother,

W. W. ANDREWS.

"In the carefully formed judgment of your committee, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has no superior in the entire family of church weeklies of the whole country." (Report on Publishing Interests, Mississippi Conference.)

"We cordially endorse the business management and editorial conduct of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Fresh, vigorous, wide awake and religious, it evokes our interest, enlists our sympathies and engages our warm and constant support." (Report on Books and Periodicals, Louisiana Conference.)

Dr. Cottrell says that "Methodism, doctrinally, was a magnificent thaw from a stiff old Calvinistic freeze."

No questions are more difficult to settle by the General Conference than the boundary lines of Annual Conferences. And from some utterances in our exchanges we judge there will be some knotty problems to solve next May.

The Arkansas Methodist advocates the election of three new Bishops by the next General Conference. We agree with our contemporary in his estimate. That addition to our Episcopal force is quite sufficient for the superintendence of our work at home and abroad.

As we go to press another war cloud seems to be gathering in Europe. Greece is assuming a threatening attitude and proposes to resist to the death the union of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia. The powers have warned the plucky little kingdom that a more pacific policy must be preserved, but she is defiant and determined.

The downfall of the Salisbury ministry seems imminent. The Parnellites are evidently looking to Mr. Gladstone as Ireland's political Moses, albeit they opposed him so vigorously at the recent elections. It is admitted on all hands that Mr. Gladstone's speech on the Queen's address at the opening of Parliament is the most brilliant and able that has been delivered during the session. The "grand old man" is yet the most conspicuous figure among English statesmen.

There is a movement in progress in the English Presbyterian Church to modify the harsh Calvinistic declarations of the Westminster Confession. Several years ago a committee was appointed by the English Presbyterian Synod to frame a declaration in which the church accepts the confession. A draft of that document was submitted to the Synod in April last, which was generally approved, and sent down to the presbyteries. The presbyteries in the country approved it, with one exception, and the London presbyteries by a vote of fifty to seven adopted it. The first clause of the declaration reads as follows:

"That the doctrine of Redemption set forth in the Westminster Confession, particularly in its reference to the election of some among mankind to eternal life, is held and taught in this church, together with the other great truths which are vital to the gospel, such as, 1. That the love of God to mankind moved him to provide, by the gift of his Son to be a propitiation for the whole world, a way of salvation, which in his gospel is freely offered to all. 2. That God has no pleasure in the death of any sinner, but desires that all shall repent and live, and, 3. That every man who hears the gospel is responsible for his acceptance or rejection of the free offer of eternal life.

Here are contradictory statements without an attempt at explanation or reconciliation.

Clause II reads:

"That the teaching of the confession on the subject of man's total depravity since the fall, is not to be understood as denying his responsibility both under the law and under the gospel, or the existence and value of the natural virtues.

Clause III is as follows:

"It does not follow, nor is it required to be held either that any who die in infancy are lost, or that God may not extend his mercy to those who are beyond the reach of the ordinary means of salvation, as it may seem good in his sight.

A Church Dedication at Wesson.

We had the pleasure of spending Sunday last at Wesson, Miss., a thriving manufacturing and commercial town on the Illinois Central railroad, about 140 miles north of New Orleans. The occasion of our visit was the dedication of the handsome new church which has just been completed, and was in readiness to be set apart from all unhalloved or common uses. It will be remembered that in June last there was a dreadful fire in Wesson which destroyed much valuable property on the principle business street of the town, including this Methodist Church. This second temple is the successor of that, though on another and more eligible site, and is a much more commodious structure. Fortunately and wisely the old building was insured to the amount of one thousand dollars. With that as a nucleus, the heroic congregation, under the leadership of their enterprising young pastor, Rev. B. F. Jones, went to work, and in a few months built an elegant church and a nice, comfortable parsonage. The two buildings were erected at a cost of $3,649 and—strange to say—there was reported a cash balance in the treasury of $18 00.

The church is modern in style of architecture and in all its appointments wears an orthodox Methodist expression. It is seventy feet long by forty in width, and has a cupola eighty feet in height. Excepting one or two slight modifications a critical judgment might suggest, in all the arrangements we observed an admirable harmony of convenience and ornamentation. The pews are quite comfortable—a cardinal virtue—and capable of accommodating about four hundred persons. The handsome temple is an ornament to the town, and a worthy memorial of the liberality, taste and zeal of the congregation. This parsonage is a neat cottage of four rooms, well finished and nicely furnished, and a desideratum in all southern houses—is well supplied with galleries. The pastor is already installed in his new home, the comfort and hospitality of which, we had the privilege of enjoying.

The Sabbath was an exceedingly inclement day of alternate rain and sleet. Walking had to be done circumspectly, or the street crossings, glazed by the frosts, would ensure the fall of the most devout. But nothing daunted, the people came, and there was a fair congregation. Had the skies been cloudless and the weather pleasant, the eager multitudes could not have found accommodations within the building. At the conclusion of the sermon, which exhausted two fires in each of the well filled stoves, the officers of the church were summoned to the chancel. On behalf of the Building Committee, Dr. Sexton read a full, detailed report of their labors, and formally presented the house to the board of trustees. We quote its concluding words: "We turn over to the church and its guardians the property, unencumbered by any debt, the entire cost of which is $3,647. Our wish is, that this structure may endure for many years to come, a fit token of the love of loyal Methodists to the cause of Christ, and that the good here resulting may flow down the cycles of time into eternity, and that the heaven of the gospel may permeate the whole earth."

Capt. F. D. Wimberly, president of the Board of Trustees, then presented the house for dedication. At the conclusion of this interesting service, the sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered, and there were many devout communicants. An opportunity was then given for any to signalize the dedication day by dedicating themselves to God and his church, and three persons came forward.

Wesson is a flourishing town of about 3,000 inhabitants. It was founded by Col. J. M. Wesson in 1855, and bears his name—the pioneer manufacturer, of Mississippi, having the honor of turning the first spindle in the State. The "Mississippi Mills" are located there—a magnificent enterprise, and a demonstration of what manufacturing in the South can accomplish. The mills employ about 800 persons and use 4,000 bales of cotton and 1,000,000 pounds of wool per annum. Many colored goods are made, the dyeing department being quite extensive and admirably managed. These goods are sold in every State of the Union. And so popular have they become that the mills are hardly able to keep up with their orders. The amount of cloth produced per month is about 400,000 yards, 150,000 woolen and 150,000 cotton, besides vast quantities of rope, twine, sewing thread and yarn. Over three hundred and fifty styles of cotton and woolen goods are manufactured there. We had the pleasure of passing through the several departments and had the various machines and processes explained. Quite a number of small children were observed at work. How dexter are their little fingers!

Resides being a splendid financial enterprise this mill is a great benevolence. They furnish employment to many poor persons and make skilled operatives, with remunerative wages, of others who have neither taste nor ability for farm labor. Widows and orphan children have opportunity for making a respectable living, besides enjoying the best moral and religious training. Another recommendation also is, the town has a good and effective prohibitory law.

Our visit to Wesson makes us more hopeful for the South. With the development of our coal and iron mines, it is certainly cheaper to manufacture cotton in the section where it grows. When this shall result and these manufacturing institutions are multiplied, the wealth of New England so employed will be transferred southward.

Societies within and without the Church.

"The Guild of Kindness" is the name of an institution belonging to the Methodist New Connexion, of Great Britain. The object of this organization is to develop a spirit of kindness among brethren and sisters of the denomination especially, and among all Christians generally. It is certainly a significant commentary upon church relations that an additional organization is necessary to keep alive the brotherly spirit among the brethren. Has it come to this, that the vows of church membership are so lightly esteemed, that other and more binding obligations must be assumed to preserve the law of kindness? But is there not another suggestion in it? Do not the multiplication of societies, within and without the church, cheapen the authority and sanctity of the church itself? We are not sure but that alarm is to be felt at this point. Societies are claiming the pre-eminence, and the church becomes secondary. We have known members to have more regard for the "guild" than the Sunday-school—for the "club" or "union" meeting, than for the prayer meeting or Sabbath service. Alas! for the church of God, when members have to run after other guides and guards to keep them straight. We have no objection to organizations designed to reach the world and advance moral reform, but these must be subordinate to the church. And reform specialists should be careful not to direct the entire living force of the church into one line of action.

The church must educate, but every chapel can not be a college or university. She must provide wholesome, religious literature, but every preacher can not be an editor nor every Conference have a separate Advocate. She must preach and practice temperance, but that is not the only work of pastor and people. We must guard against these growing appendages or we will emasculate the power and authority of the church of God.

Speaking Well of Ministers.

There is reason to remember the warning of our book of discipline against "speaking evil of magistrates and ministers." The reputation and influence of pastors are largely in the keeping of the church. If they are criticised and complained of in public, much fruit of their labor is not to be expected. Ministers are sometimes said to be unpopular with the young people—"the children don't like him"—when probably the criticisms of the "old" have caused it. Parents do much harm in discussing preachers unfavorably before their children. In not a few instances the want of pastoral success is chargeable to carping, complaining parents. Speak kindly to and of your pastor. His character has undergone examination at Conference and he has been accredited to the church as blameless in life and official administration. Cheer him, and he will render you better service.

On this subject we find some well-considered thoughts in the Richmond Advocate:

"We shall never forget, though years have gone by, the weighty and just judgment of a wise and devout layman on an afternoon visit of his pastor. The venerable steward told that the evening of the first call of the new minister was spent in listening to the opinions of his guest on the brethren of the Conference. When bed-time came the preacher had recounted their infirmities and imagined faults. Alas! the good layman added, 'He had also ruined himself.' We recall one allusion. Duncan was dismissed 'as always telling anecdotes.' The seraphic eloquence, the unselfish heart, the labors more abundant, were not mentioned. With righteous disgust and pleasure the noble old Christian gentleman saw his unloving and uncharitable visitor depart.

"Let us not forget that we are ourselves on trial when we sit in judgment on our brethren. And how unchristian to wantonly hurt any man's influence! Who, by look, act or word, would demagnetize the power of any preacher for good? Who can by shrug of shoulders, inuendo, 'faint praise,' or unfriendly silence, cripple a centurion of Christ and not wound his own conscience and the holy cause?"

"If a preacher is worthy of our ranks, he is worthy of our sympathy, countenance and championship. Invite men to hear his message. Open his way. Endorse him in private as well as compliment him in public.

"And so of our College and Press. They work the work of the Lord. Commend their mission. Let them have free course. Help to new friends and families—to new students and new readers."

Moody and Sankey's Meetings.

The Record of Christian Work announces the following as the programs of meetings to be conducted by the great evangelists, Messrs. Moody and Sankey. We are glad to know that they are to devote so much time to the South and to many smaller places heretofore unvisited by them. They are to be in New Orleans on the 11th of February. After they leave we shall have Sam Jones. The "mission" conducted by Rev. William Hay Aitken has been greatly blessed. Large congregations have attended his ministry and he has preached an earnest, pure gospel. The Moody and Sankey meetings will be conducted as follows:

Knoxville, Tenn., Jan. 20-31; Nashville, Tenn., Feb. 2, 3 and 4; Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 5-7; New Orleans, Feb. 9-21, inclusive; in second week there will be a Christian Convention of three days; Houston, Texas, Feb. 26-28; Mobile, Ala., March 2, 3 and 4; Oxford, Miss., March 6-7; Selma, Ala., March 9-11; Atlanta, Ga., March 16-18; Savannah, Ga., March 21-23; Jacksonville, Fla., March 25-28; Charleston, S. C., March 30 to April 4; Columbia, S. C., April 5-7; Norfolk, Va., April 9-11; Lynchburg, Va., April 13-15; Charlotte, Va., April 16-18. "We feel sure," says the Record, "that Christians all over the country will follow them with prayer for the blessing of God upon them in this important campaign. It is the winter season, and men will have time to give to their meetings. Probably tens of thousands of people will listen to their voices for the first time, and may we not look for the gathering of thousands upon thousands into the church, and the quickening of all the churches, where these meetings have representative.

The Episcopal Mission.

The "mission" conducted in this city for three weeks past by the Rev. William Hay Aitken, of England, has been an epoch in the history of the Episcopal Church hereabouts. We hazard nothing in saying that those congregations haven't heard so much direct, heart-searching appeal, and such earnest exhortations to seek "anxious-bench religion," in years, if ever in life. Nor do we intend to intimate that our Episcopal clergy in New Orleans are behind their brethren elsewhere in evangelical spirit. But it is a fact "known and read of all men" that heretofore the ministrations of that pulpit have not dwelt upon the urgency of present salvation and the "experience" of religion. On these subjects Mr. Aitken has given no uncertain sound. He has exposed a formal religion which contents itself with mere church-membership, and with great earnestness has pleaded for deep repentance, justifying faith and a consciousness of Divine forgiveness. If this "mission" is to mark a new era in the pulpit of our sister church, all evangelical Christians will thank God.

Mr. Aitken is much pleased with our people and greatly gratified at the results of his labors. He said that the proportion of sincere inquirers after salvation in New Orleans was larger than in any "mission" he had conducted in the United States. The members of other churches attended his preaching and were delighted as well as profited.

As a specimen of Mr. Aitken's direct, hortatory style we give some extracts from one of his sermons on the "Prodigal Son." He said:

"It is the 'I will' that leads to the return. Nothing is done without decision. Man has been given, by the Almighty, the power to say yes or no to everything, even to his own omnipotence. There are some things God can not do. He can not lie, he can not stultify himself. He has created man in his own image and given him a will to do as he pleases in order that God may enjoy delightful relationship with his creature. If he should turn man into a machine, say a watch, to go just as God chooses, then a man becomes a machine. Yes, a poor, frail child of clay can say to God: 'I will,' and when he urges us to yield to the Holy Spirit: 'No.' But when a man decides and says: 'I will,' to God, then there is behind the man the force of the great God and within him the power of the Holy Ghost.

This is the important matter, dear brethren, for us to consider as the mission draws to a close. I have never held a mission in the United States where the proportion of persons interested about their souls' salvation was so great as here in New Orleans, and I want to say to you that it is very important that you decide the matter at once. The question is life or death, heaven or hell. Which will you choose?

As I have gone from pew to pew in these meetings I have found many who had chosen Christ for their Savior, probably hundreds, but there are still many halting ones.

If such do not decide for Christ, the scar of the blessed wound made by the Holy Spirit in your souls will clearize, and you will be hardened in sin. The minister of God is either a savior of life unto life, or of death unto death. The longer you waver, dear friends, the greater the danger. All men and women, your souls are too precious to trifle in this matter. One thing only is necessary for you to do, Decide.

A decided will cleaves its way through opposing forces, and with God's help he becomes irresistible. A man begins to be a hero when he says, 'I will.' The saying, 'I will,' over thirty-three years ago was the turning point in my life, since when I have not failed of the grace of God. If a man resists the pleadings of the Holy Spirit he plunges deeper into sin and the graven Spirit may never return. No one need say, 'I can not decide; this is not so; all can say yes or no.

O God, bring these precious souls here present to-night to say, 'I will.' My brother, never mind your heart. Decision breaks hard hearts and makes men sorry for sin. Only yield to God, and he will come with his Divine power into your souls and save you.

Palmer's "Aid and Guide to Family Worship."

No more excuses may now be offered by our people for neglecting family worship. Bro. L. D. Palmer has furnished every needed assistance to the inexperienced and the diffident in a beautiful volume just issued from the Methodist Publishing House at Nashville, styled "Aid and Guide to Family Worship."

Here are Scriptures, lessons, hymns and prayers, eight of each—four for morning and four for evening—for every day of the week, all brief, simple and appropriate, clearly printed in large type and neatly bound in a small and not costly volume. The same form is intended to be used but once in a month. Here is aid and guidance sufficient even for those least accustomed to pray. The Methodist who will not pray with his family when he can get this book, simply does not wish to do it.

Surely if men ought to pray "always" and "everywhere," they ought to pray regularly in their families. The strength and hope, the abiding vigor and growing power of the church lies in the maintenance of family religion. Parents, as such, must receive the grace of God in vain if they fail to transmit its saving energies to their offspring. The father is by Divine appointment the priest of his household, the prophet of his family, the king of the domestic realm, responsible for ordering his house and instructing his family according to the laws of the heavenly kingdom. The neglect of family worship is a great cause of weakness in the personal piety of Christians and accounts largely for the scarcity among the rising generation of those "good and honest hearts" in which alone the gospel seed find the conditions of their reproductiveness. The sovereignty and responsibility of parents has never been recognized as they should be. The failure of parents to teach God's commandments diligently to their children as God's law requires them to do, robs their posterity of heavenly bestowments which neither the pulpit, nor the Sunday school, nor any other church agency can adequately supply. Proper transforming and empowering nutrition being withheld from the shrub, scantiness or faultiness of fruit shall characterize the tree forever.

We can scarcely overrate the importance of any agency which promises to secure Christian nurture to childhood and infancy. Hence we welcome this timely contribution to the devotional literature of our church. There are other books similar in design and character to this one, but none of them perhaps is so simple, appropriate and easy to use. Even those who may not wish to use the prayers here printed, will find the Scripture lessons and hymns so appropriate and ready as greatly to facilitate the conducting of family worship. No preconceived form of prayer can express at all times the ever-varying cravings of the soul; yet whatever of assistance may be desirable under ordinary circumstances is here found in a most convenient form. Oh for a revival of family worship! Surely there is no place nearer heaven than the family circle where parents and children all—or the survivors of those who have gone before—bear the word of God together, and mingle their voices in his praise and their hearts in supplications at the throne of grace. The Lord is very high unto such a family at such a time. I trust the little book is destined for extensive usefulness.

—Rev. Dr. George R. Bristor, of the Newark Conference, and well known in New Orleans, has been suspended from the ministry. His case will come up for trial at the next session of his Conference. We quite agree with the New York Advocate that he is either an extraordinarily guilty or an extraordinarily unfortunate man.

—Princeton College, it seems, has had a good record on the tobacco habit from the beginning. The Princetonian recalls that in 1757 a set of rules was prepared by Mr. Burr, father of Aaron Burr, and president of Princeton College. One reads as follows: "Every student shall pay four shillings per quarter for study rent, sweeping their rooms and making their beds, and such as smoke or chew tobacco, five shillings for incidental charges."

—Several Bishops and distinguished ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church have been in the city this week. On Saturday last the ceremony attending the "breaking ground" for the new Orleans University building on St. Charles Avenue were participated in by Bishops Bowman, Walden and Mallien, and Drs. Rust and Hartzell, together with resident ministers. Three hundred ministers filled the different pulpits of their church on the Sabbath. We called to see them on Monday morning and regretted their absence at that hour.

—The Rev. Philip Tugge, of California, is dead. For a number of years he was an honored member of the Memphis Conference, and in 1870, by the delimitation of Conference boundaries, became a member of the North Mississippi Conference. In 1871 he transferred to the Pacific coast, and continued in the native work until failing health compelled a location. The Pacific Methodist contains a beautiful tribute to him from the pen of Dr. Riddick. This notice will be read with regret by a host of friends in Tennessee and North Mississippi.

The following are the delegates elect to the General Conference from the Florida Conference: Clerical—J. P. DelPass, S. Woodbury, C. A. Fulwood; alternates—R. H. Barnett, H. E. Barnett, Lay—H. W. Long, J. F. White, J. Wofford Tucker; alternates—W. A. McLean, W. J. Barnett. The vote on the change of name stood: Yeas, none; nays, 74. The next conference will meet at Tallahassee.

A venerable and highly-prized friend of the ADVOCATE in Alabama, in renewing his subscription, writes a kind private note to the publishers, from which we extract the following: "Don't stop my paper on account of delay in renewing, and not while I live, unless so advised. I can't do without it. Its pages have cheered me, strengthened me, and done me good so long, that now in old age I feel the need of its supporting hand more than ever. Among the whole family of Advocates, while all are good; very good, to me the New Orleans is better—yes, best."

Death of Rev. C. W. Hodge.

We are pained to announce the death of this devoted member of the Louisiana Conference, which occurred at Baton Rouge, on Monday last. He was taken sick with pneumonia during the recent session of the Conference at the residence of Col. K. A. Cross, and was never able to leave his bed. The disease was partially relieved, when he was attacked with typhoid fever, from which he died after weeks of suffering. Bro. Hodge was a man of strong individuality, and a greatly useful preacher. He had the elements of leadership in marked degree, and was the trusted counselor of his people. He was urged once to accept a seat in the Legislature, and became an influential member of that body. During the war he raised two companies and did valiant service in the field. He is said to have been as gallant an officer as ever led a brave legion to battle. In all relations of life he was loved and honored, and attained gratifying success. He had a large family of sons and daughters, who loved him to devotion and revered him as a pure and faithful minister of the New Testament. Two of his sons, one of them a physician, were with him during his illness and ministered to him until the "weary wheels of life stood still." He received an appointment this year to Brushwood in the Homer district, but another must catch his fallen mantle and prophesy unto the people.

An admirable sketch of Bro. Hodge is found in the Louisiana Conference minutes of 1885, which outlines a rather remarkable career. It is as follows:

"C. W. Hodge was born in Jasper county, Ga., March 9, 1815. His father—J. E. Hodge—was a son of the Rev. James Hodge, of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and his mother was the daughter of Jeremiah Lumsden, who joined the South Carolina Conference in 1804; and he the son of Elijah Lumsden, who was admitted into the same Conference in 1785. The parents of Bro. Hodge were pious and thoroughly Methodist. He received his education in his native State. In 1836 he volunteered as a soldier and went into the Creek and Seminole War. In December, 1856, he moved to Alabama; and in 1843, at a camp meeting held in Green county, Ala., he was most happily converted, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Miss Aseneth M. George, of Perry county, Ala., in 1844, and in December, 1844, came to Union parish, La. He was licensed to preach in October, 1853, and admitted on trial into the Louisiana Conference in December, 1854; was appointed to Castor circuit in 1855 and 1856, to Harrisonburg circuit in 1857, to Vernon circuit in 1858 and 1859, to Farmerville circuit in 1860. In 1861 he was returned to Vernon circuit, during which year he came out with the first company of volunteers in the Confederate service from that parish and joined the Twelfth Louisiana Regiment, which was ordered to Columbus, Ky. Resigning from this command, he came home and organized another company, with which he joined the Thirty-first Louisiana Regiment. After the war he was elected to the State Legislature, where he served in 1863 and 1864. In 1861 he served the Dugdenona circuit, and located in 1867. He was re-elected in 1875, though almost every year of his location he traveled under the presiding elder. In 1875 and 1876 he traveled the Indian Village circuit, in 1877 the Farmerville circuit, in 1878 the Arcadia circuit, in 1879 the Centerville circuit, in 1880 and 1881 the Colony and Paulk's Chapel, in 1882 the Rayville circuit, in 1883 the Rochester Mission, and in 1884 the Indian Village circuit."

Death of Rev. Geo. Shaeffer.

A note from Rev. J. H. Scruggs, of Columbus, Miss., brings intelligence of the death of this venerable man of God on the twenty-third instant, after a protracted and painful illness of seven weeks. He was at the time of his death a supernumerary member of the North Mississippi Conference, and for many years had sustained that honorable and honored relation. A choice spirit and spotless character was George Shaeffer. In the strength of his years he was a devoted, tireless itinerant preacher, and in the evening of life was a benediction to the church and a wise counselor of his brethren. A more serene, peaceful, beautiful old age was never witnessed. He died in Columbus, where he removed when but sixteen years of age, where he was converted and joined the church, where he was licensed to preach, where he was married and where most of his life was spent when not abroad in the itinerant work.

George Shaeffer was born in Lancaster, Pa., December 12, 1803, and was therefore seventy-nine years of age at his death. His father was a German Catholic and his mother a sturdy Protestant from Ireland. She was a remarkable woman, and to her Bro. Shaeffer was indebted for his intellectual endowments and spiritual training. He joined the Alabama Conference in January, 1837, and spent his life preaching the everlasting gospel. When the North Mississippi Conference was formed in 1870, his residence in Columbus made him a member of that body. He was never able to do active work, but no name on that honor roll was called more tenderly and cherished more lovingly than George Shaeffer's. A more extended sketch will doubtless be furnished by some competent pen.

Important Notice.

By order of the Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, all applications for aid for churches must be made out on blanks which we furnish free to all who ask, and must be on file in our office by March 29, in order to secure attention at our annual meeting, which begins April 8, 1886.

Paine Institute.

DEAR BROTHER: The Board of Trustees have purchased grounds and buildings for Paine Institute in the city of Augusta, Ga., having secured subscriptions sufficient to warrant them in taking such action. It is imperative that we collect these subscriptions as rapidly as possible, and make the final payments on the property. If you can pay all your subscription, please send at once to the brother who represents us in your Conference; or, if you prefer, send direct to me by money order, registered letter, or by draft on New York, and I will send you receipt, and also notify your Conference representative. If you can not pay all now, send what you can, and indicate when you can pay the remainder. Heretofore the Board will be enabled to discharge intelligently the trust committed to it by the church.

Your brother in Christ,

Books and Periodicals.

The first number of Science, for 1886, is an attractive and inviting issue of this valuable paper. Its "Comments and Criticisms" are good and suggestive; its contributed matter is interesting and instructive; its correspondence is vigorous, intelligent and original. The supplement of this number contains very instructive reading. Science devotes itself to general scientific intelligence, and is worthy of a liberal patronage. Science Publishing Co., New York.

"Mind in Nature," Chicago, Ill., is a monthly publication, purporting to devote itself to the questions and subjects that lie along the border line of philosophy. Such a field is inviting and profitable, but should be ventured upon with intelligent caution and profound discrimination. This is a popular journal of practical, medical and scientific information. A good purpose and a good executive force, much good may be expected. "Mind Development," by Prof. John Fraser, deals with the question of originality, defining practically all originality as a reproduction of former knowledge in new combinations and devising new applications. He takes, perhaps, a too extreme view of originality. "The Open World," by R. W. Smith, is an earnest protest against the philosophical argument in assuming an egoistic philosophy dangerous if made common. "The Doctrine of Evolution," by J. L. Moore, exhibits no new phase of the subject, but is an endeavor to strengthen its evidences. "Was It All a Dream?" "The Philosophy of the Three Potities," by John Allen, M. D.; "Waking Dreams and Visions and Collocations Again," by Bishop A. Cleveland Fox, D. D., and "Thought," by Prof. H. W. Barker, afford readable matter.

PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

In a note announcing the death of Rev. C. W. Hodges, an account of which we published last week, Bro. Faint Lefroy says:

He is the only preacher of the Lugana Conference who went home from Conference. About the last thing he did in Conference was to read his report; went to the residence of Col. K. A. Cross, took his bed, from which he passed to his reward.

THE GOLDEN MILK STONE.

BY LONGBLOW.

Leaves are the trees, their purple branches
Spread themselves about like reefs of coral
In the Red Sea of the winter sunset.

From the hundred chimneys of the village,
Like the Afri in the Arabian story,
Smoke columns
Tower aloft into the blue of heaven.

At the window with the flickering fire-light,
He and there the lamps of evening glimmer,
Social watch-fires
Answering one another through the darkness.

On the hearth the lighted logs are glowing,
And, like Ariel in the cloven pine-tree,
For the freedom
Of the future what it can not give them.

By the fire-side there are old men seated,
Seeing round them all the things of olden time,
As the blind,
Of the future what it can not give them.

By the fire-side there are youth and dreamers,
Building castles fair with airy stairways,
As the blind,
Of the future what it can not give them.

A Word for the Woman's Missionary Society.

This organization, which has become an important factor in the mission work of the church, is the child of love and faith, the offspring of the "Trinity Home Mission," a society founded soon after the war by the ladies of Trinity Church, Baltimore, Md., its object being to minister to the spiritually destitute of that city. The name was afterwards changed, and the organization effected upon a broader basis, as "The Woman's Bible Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South." The earnest women of that church were soon followed by those of other churches, and the Bible Mission became wonderfully successful in Nashville, and other Southern cities, its members visiting, systematically, the destitute, and furnishing instruction in spiritual things.

The good work enlarged, the beneficent thought expanded, and in 1878 a number of the representative women of the church met in Atlanta, Ga., during the session of the General Conference, and, having been duly authorized by that body, organized the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This brief account of its origin may not be uninteresting to those interested.

Its results transcend, perhaps, the loving faith of the hearts in which it was born. The Lord of hearts has multiplied these planted a hundred-fold. In seven years of work are years of victory. We stand melted in love and wonder when we see what he hath done for us. The Woman's Board of Missions has sent seventeen missionaries into the field—seven of whom went during the past year. The number of pupils under instruction is 517. Our membership aggregated 43,095; and into the Lord's treasury for the year closing in June was poured from this source $52,452. These statistics are pregnant with meaning, and are but a suggestion of the blessed influences which have gone forth therewith.

Quoting the words of Dr. W. C. Wair, in a recent address, "Never, perhaps, since the days of the apostles has the church made more earnest and liberal efforts to enter the fields already white to the harvest than she has done for the last few years. Is not this renewed life and zeal, with its increase of results, due largely to the reflex influence of woman's work for woman, quickening the energies and stirring up the gifts of the whole church? Thousands have been enlisted and brought into the vineyard who, but for her missionary society, would have remained inactive and unemployed."

The call to this work comes in due time of succession, we might say, and assume divinely authorized when we remember that the first missionary was "a little maid." And along through the shining pages of gospel records we find, scattered like stars, the names of godly women, who did what they could "for the glory of God; who consecrated the powers of love and self-sacrifice, of aiding faith and abounding effort, which is their birth-right, to the cause of Christ and his church. Among these are Mary, the mother of our Lord; Elizabeth and Anna, the sisters of Bethany—once loving much, the other serving because she loved; Lydia of Thyatira, and Priscilla, who, Paul says, "Hail for my life laid down her own neck; unto whom not only I give thanks, but all the church of the Gentiles." Tryphena and Tryphosa, who "labored much in the Lord;" and Pernel, who "labored much in the Lord." And where can we find a stronger or a nobler picture in the annals of any apostolic church than that of the mothers of Methodism? They stand as electric lights in the philosophy of its history, serene and high, molding the wonderful workers for their marvelous work, by the incandescent power of the Spirit of God within them. That august and holy woman, the mother of the Wesleys, stands out clear-cut and strong, a type of the womanhood of Christianity. Her firm hand poised the mighty intellect and developed the grand soul of our founder. To Susanna Wesley the world owes Methodism, the most successful of missions.

To Barbara Heck is due the honor of planting the first seed of Methodism on American soil. As we know, this humble and devout woman assembled the first congregation, prompted the first sermon, and founded the first church on this continent. Thus on, through the growing decades, the son of Mary has honored the weaker vessel, and sent forth, not by might nor by power, but by his Spirit, a sisterhood of burning souls, serving his cause as best they might. And now to us upon whom the ends of the world have come is entrusted a commission, the responsibility of which might make an angel tremble; before us is set an open door which we dare not refuse to enter. Our missionary secretary has said: "No 'heavenly nation' will be converted until its women are reached; and this can not be accomplished without the agency of woman."

We are well aware that to some from whom we have a right to expect encouragement and support our efforts seem not only superfluous, but tending in the objectionable and unlovely direction of the so-called emancipation of woman. That such a thought, in such connection, could have place in any intelligent mind should be cause for humiliation. Was our noble exemplar, Mrs. Wesley, overstepping the bounds of her "sphere" when she dispensed the bread of life to the starving souls in her husband's parish? She "hore and nurtured children" also, and with unquestionable fidelity, accepting it as "her function," as a Rev. Doctor has recently suggested in gentle reminder of our raison d'être. Can these stand for us in the great day of account, if we must say: "Here, Lord, is my talent; my brethren advised me to lay it up in a napkin, and I was but a woman. The women of Asia called me; their voices came over the sea in pitiful pleading; there was no other help for them, but I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth?"

What woman's work means womanly or more Christ-like than this, of healing up the broken-hearted and giving sight to the blind? What mother's work more fitting than taking the children, crying for light, the Christless little ones, and bringing them to Jesus that he may lay his hands upon them and bless them. Our help is reaching out in blessing to the uttermost parts of the earth; we beseech you hinder us not. Let us anoint our Lord's feet with the little ointment we have, for he has blessed it hitherto and is blessing it still. Though so small a gift, he sees the love in it, and that in all humility and womanliness we would offer it. Rather go before us, pastors and friends, and prepare the way for the work we may do which you can not; let this work have the strength your support and co-operation can give. Our senior Bishop has said: "I have resolved to double the amount of my subscriptions to the Woman's Board of Missions." May many follow this example of practical and hearty endorsement.

We appeal to our pastors to espouse this cause, to foster the auxiliaries already formed, to organize others wherever five women can be found who will band together for the purpose of missionary effort in the name of him who has commanded "Go, ye;" and the experience of others proves that you will find a baptism of blessing in your midst, the windows of heaven opened unto you, returning in abundant measure of reward the labor bestowed upon the Woman's Missionary Society. The work lays in our States; others are moving on and will take the crown which might be ours.

Daughters of the church! the message is to you. Why should you wait for your pastor to take the initiative? The Master is come and calleth for thee. Our missionaries urge us to help them go up and take the land. Twenty-five hundred new members is the demand for the year; the urgent, imminent need of present assistance, as their opportunities are enlarging and the moment is passing like a word of command from the Lord of the vineyard. Let us arise from the lethargy which holds us as an evil spell, from the sinful sense of irresponsibility which is the sad pronouncement of spiritual death and decay, and realize that the world can not be saved without our individual aid, and we to be guiltless. The quota of time and money from each member is so small that we can not, honestly, make that an excuse for the neglect of this duty. We can render unto the missionary society one hour a month and one dollar a year without detracting from our children or our homes of a single needed care. And these monthly remittances may become a source of wonderful spiritual growth, as well as intellectual and social profit. May the call sink deeply into the hearts of those who sit at ease in Zion, and the new year have better things to record of us than have been heretofore.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

To Conference and Back.

MR. EDITOR: "To Conference and Back" used to be a theme full of interesting incidents to be detailed at length. Not so in these days of progress. In other days it took a preacher from North Louisiana to go to Conference in the Southern part of the State a whole week of travel by land and water, and by every imaginable sort of conveyance, and at an enormous expense. How different now! We left home January 6, after supper, for Baton Rouge, the site of the Conference, took a Pullman Palace Sleeper, with a Harpist on board, and in the morning, at our back, we went to Conference by next morning, ten o'clock, refreshed rather than fatigued. Progress marked the way, and progress was the theme after we got there. Among other things we heard Dr. Morton and Young make progressive addresses on the subject of church extension. Dr. Morton on physical development, in improvements in railroads and telegraphic facilities by which we could converse with each other at the remotest points on the continent. He had traveled from extreme points in the Eastern States to extreme points in the Western in a few days, when only a few years ago it took six months to make the same trip, and that with great fatigue and danger. If in the providence of God such avenues of communication had been opened up between Christian and heathen countries, ought not the church to avail itself of it and send them the gospel and houses of worship?

Dr. Young dwelt on another feature of progress. He said altars and places of worship had existed ever since the world began; and there was marked progress in the character of these altars and places of worship. The first being made of earth, the second of stone, and the third a tabernacle made of fine linen, wood, silver and gold; and next in order the temple was built, the most magnificent building ever erected since the world was created and out of the finest material the world could produce. Its beauty and grandeur beggared all description, the amount of gold in its construction was beyond the computation of arithmetic. All of this was only on the line of thought which leads on beyond and above to the city and temple of God, where gold is the meanest thing which enters into its construction. A collection of $200 was taken up to build churches in destitute places. While I listened to these grand and enthusiastic addresses I was in hopes that someone might be as much enthused on the subject of temperance. The subject is of sufficient importance, and incidents abound calculated to inspire the greatest enthusiasm. It is not that Dr. Morton and Young are greater than other men, but because they were absorbed with the subject. Let anyone be equally absorbed with the subject of temperance, and he, too, can make a telling speech. We can say the outlook for temperance is encouraging. Twenty-five years ago it was deemed out of place to have a Committee on Temperance in an Annual Conference—just as well have a committee on Sabbath breaking, wearing or gambling; but to-day it is a matter of course. Being too unwell to participate in the business of the Conference, I left before it adjourned, and before the Committee on Temperance made its report. I was sorry to learn that there was a heated discussion upon a resolution offered by this committee to endorse the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The discussion, as we learn, was about fermented or unfermented wine, and about the danger of innovation from said society. Such alarm we think altogether unfounded in Southern society. A lot of which was of small moment when compared with the main question involved—the prohibition of the drink system. It reminds me of men who agree on the division of their corn, and have a row when they come to divide the sheaves. The conservative element in the Louisiana Conference has always been well sustained. No danger of innovation.

However, progress in the temperance cause is going on; agitation has worked wonders. The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1874 resolved to change one of the general rules in our book of discipline, so as to prohibit the manufacture and sale in alcoholic liquors as well as their use. This resolution was sent down through the Annual Conference to be confirmed. Though it was not confirmed, it did agitate the question from the center to the circumference of the church. An Episcopal decision was brought out to the effect, that the law already existing in the book of discipline did condemn the manufacture and traffic in intoxicants; hence no need of change. It is now understood that we have law enough to prohibit the drink habit, and all we need to have a temperance church is nerve to execute the law. Early in the session of the Forty-ninth Congress there was three bills presented to the Senate and House of Representatives by the temperance folks. First, a petition from the National Temperance Society, praying for a commission of inquiry to investigate the liquor question in relation to the interests of the nation; another, praying for a prohibitory law to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, and another, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prohibit the liquor business in the nation. All of which shows that the temperance question, like Pharaoh's frogs, has infered not only the kneading-troughs, but every department of government, civil and religious.

At a National Convention of the temperance folks, a few years ago, held at Saratoga, N. Y., Dr. Nerin, of Philadelphia, a Presbyterian minister, said: "When I came I was opposed to woman's coming to the front and appearing in public; but, after hearing the addresses of Mrs. Foster and Miss Willard, I am converted and, being a Presbyterian, you know I can't backslide." Thus the work of conversion is going on. The watch-word among all temperance folks, with a few exceptions, is day is, absolute prohibition for the commonwealth and total abstinence for each individual. With this motto inscribed upon their banner, it is hoisted in well-nigh every civilized nation in the world. A vast multitude of young men and godly women are engaged in this work—many of whom have been bereft of everything dear to them in this world by the archfiend, intemperance; hence the destroying flood with them gets no quarter. It is idle and a waste of time to talk to them about the danger of mixing politics with their religion, becoming fanatics or extremists. New revelations in their progress are being made from year to year. Who knows what a day may bring forth! To think I was eight years old before there was a foot of railroad track laid upon this globe! If we in our moral and religious progress can keep pace with the physical progress which is being made, in less than another generation we may confidently expect the wilderness and solitary places to be made glad and the desert rejoice and blossom as the rose. Amen!

"Redemption and Atonement."

BY REV. J. A. PARKER.

In the paper published in the ADVOCATE, of January 14, several errors occur, which the reader might be at a loss to correct. In the lower third of the first column the words, "the same additional light," should read, some additional light, and a few lines lower down the words, "Therapy Jesus came to call," should read, Therapy Jesus came to call. In the last column, (p. 3, of the ADVOCATE), near the top of the column, the words, "the position and negative effects," should read, the positive and negative effects. "If, as Binney affirms," etc., in place of "Redeemer" in the clause, "without the co-operation," etc., it should read, without the co-operation of the Redeemer, etc. Other errors the good sense of the reader will correct, e. g., "Holston for Ralston. The manuscript has been so long out of my hands I can not say but that your printer may have followed copy. I can only say it is wrong, and ask this correction."

Examining further into this important question I wish to call attention to the views of one of our recognized authorities, not to review, nor to contradict, but for the purpose of obtaining light. "Bible Truth," (p. 45), lays down this proposition: "The benefits of the atonement extend to all mankind by purchasing for them life with all its concomitant blessings together with a probationary state of possible salvation. The atonement in the enlightening influence of the Spirit extends to all men, so as to impart a possible salvation, unless the influence of the Spirit and enlightening grace is resisted and rejected." Here are clearly put the positive and negative aspects of redemption. "Life and all its concomitant blessings" are purchased to all mankind, and "a probationary state of possible salvation." Unless the writer means by the term "life" a mere physical existence, he clearly affirms two aspects of redemption, viz., life from the death of the Adamite sin, and life from the death of personal sin. This is seen more clearly in the latter clause of the quotation, "The atonement in the enlightening influence of the Spirit extends to all men, so as to impart a possible salvation, unless the influence of the Spirit and enlightening grace is resisted and rejected." Evidently this refers to that phase of redemption which provides for the redemption of a sinner from his personal or individual sin. Otherwise redemption was not absolute, but possible only. But Dr. Ralston does not so teach. Our redemption is complete—the measure is full. On page 62, after quoting, "He gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity," he adds, "Then how could he leave us condemned under the penalty of the law?" And on the next page says, "The sins of all were laid on him." May we not now ask, Whose does this "possible salvation" come in, if not at the point where man incurs guilt and pain, from which he has not been redeemed? Still in both "Bible Truth" and "Elements of Divinity" in the latter expressly, and in the former implicitly, Dr. Ralston insists on the guilt of infants. If they be guilty, of what are they guilty? Certainly not of Adam's sin, for they have been redeemed from that; and not of their individual sin, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." But it is hard for Dr. Ralston to see where the guilt was taken away, as if the work of redemption was, itself, merely a "possible" redemption, or, at most, an act preparatory to salvation.

Page 21 we have what, had it come from a less reputable source, I would not hesitate to denounce as a begging of the question. "If God can fit the infant for association in heaven for centuries before it was born, can not the Holy Spirit do the same at any time before it leaves the body?" Such questions may be met with questions, and hence, if those that the Lord blessed were indeed "of such" as the kingdom of heaven and were not made fit "for association in heaven for centuries before they were born," then, in that particular case, the preparation must have been miraculous and special and without any bearing on the balance of the race. For if the death of Christ did not, by virtue of its unconditional merit, absolve them from guilt and make them fit for heaven, it is mere guess work as to how that wonderful change came upon them, seeing that they could not comply with the only condition of that "possible salvation"—"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned."

Dr. Ralston has a great deal to say about "human theories" and going beyond the plain word of revelation; but he, or anyone else, who will show, by revelation and not by logic, that these infants were guilty, and in some way other than "by faith" made "of such" as the "kingdom of heaven," except solely by virtue of Christ's death, we will have more light on this subject than has yet been thrown upon it heretofore. If Jesus bore our griefs, if he suffered for us, if he carried our sorrows, if the iniquity of us all was laid on him, if by his stripes we were healed, if the Lamb of God took away the sins of the world, he did it as "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," as he in whom we were called before the world began (II Timothy 1, 9), and consequently "centuries before" we were born. If it be objected that this is universalism, we say, Nay! For, as Dr. Ralston says—"Bible Truth," p. 19—"Salvation under this new probation is made conditional to all gospel hearers, so that they shall be pardoned when they repent of personal sins and believe in Christ." (Italics ours.)

On p. 15, "Bible Truth," Dr. Ralston says: "None need complain that they become sinners through Adam the redemption far surpasses the fall. This fact has ever been the glory of that most consistent phase of genuine Arminianism styled Methodism." And yet, on p. 19, he says, "God has made no revelation as to how or when infants are 'made partakers of the benefits of Christ's death,' so as to become fit subjects for eternal life in the future world." On the same page, speaking of redemption, he says: "At the same time (Italics ours) the atonement availed through this new covenant to extend to the whole of the Adamite race the boon of life." But salvation, under this new probation, is made conditional to all accountable gospel hearers," etc. Here is a differentiation of the accountable and unaccountable "hearers." Elsewhere he says infants and idiots are not accountable; but in his "Elements" he says infants are guilty. Here is a phase of theology bordering the phenomenal—unaccountable guilt—an unanswerable liability to punishment, and, still worse, guilt after condemnation. Is it not possible that somebody else may "strain a point to support a theory"? If the death of Christ "extended to the whole Adamite race the boon of life" and "at the same time" put the race "under this new probation" of "possible salvation," why not let the truth rest on the simple statement and recognize the fact elsewhere stated, "The redemption far surpasses the fall?"

"Bible Truth," p. 23, of the atonement, he says: "It is universal for all that have sinned. As to salvation, it is conditional." Here again is a forced recognition of the two aspects of redemption, or of redemption as differing from atonement, or personal salvation from personal sin. A universal redemption must include all, and to include all it must be without conditions, as there is a point in the life of every one of the race when conditions can not be observed, and that the point at which death is most likely to come. From the time it was said, "I will put enmity between his seed and thy seed. He shall bruise his heel, and it shall bruise his heel," this "universal" redemption was complete by virtue of a universal sacrifice for sin. "As in Adam all died; even so in Christ Jesus all were made alive. There could be no more sacrifice for sin, and as the tendency in man to sin was intensified by the fall, this stream of grace flowing out of Jerusalem must be prospective and retrospective—"half of it toward the former sea, and half of it toward the hinder sea." It must go by the second Adam to the sin of the first Adam—retrospectively—and from the second Adam to the sin of every son of Adam's race—prospectively—by faith in the sacrifice made for sin.

To-day and To-morrow. To-morrow is, like the rainbow which, in our childhood, we thought we could touch by simply running a short distance, but which, when we advanced, or, like the horizon, which we imagined our steps could easily reach, and we were able to touch the sunset glory gliding by. To-morrow we never see. To-day we hold in a strong grasp. Use it ere it passes away. Time whirrs rapidly on. All the to-morrows will be to-day, then yesterday, and pass quickly by, away into the past till centuries hide them from all the living. Time is for us to use. If we waste it, anticipating future good or future ill, we lose to-day and all the days as they go on, till our last day will find us barren and unlovely. —Louise Heywood Reynolds.

MR. EDITOR: With your permission I will continue my small criticisms. These lines are not written in a capricious spirit, but with the hope of benefiting someone. Some will be thankful for them; others, perhaps, may think them very small criticisms. I shall be gratified if by throwing a few crumbs on the wave, some may be picked up and nuzzled. Errors are found frequently in books of literary pretension and very often in newspapers, though newspapers are not held by the reader to such strict correctness as other publications. Books are expected to be published with care. I have read books which presented prima facie evidence of having been written in haste and without due consideration, and I must confess that to me the pleasure of reading such works is much diminished. I was reading a book a few days ago in which these words occur: "Many a good minister was installed because they did not admit," etc., "Which raised every hearer above earthly things and made them feel the power of the world to come." "You can tell when the element, or the pathetic, or the sublime are coming by their foreshadowings in voice, in gesture," etc. The young grammarian may make the corrections and fix the rule—which is often violated—in his mind. A few years ago I read a book in which there were many badly constructed sentences, and probably they were hastily written. The author must have expected the book editor to reconstruct it.

It is a pleasure to read some newspapers on account of their correctness and their beautiful typography. Among these I mention the Christian Advocate, published at Nashville. It is a model paper, and generally free from errors of any kind. But, as the geologist would say, one occasionally "crops out." The publisher must have an excellent proof reader, an essential attaché to a correct publication. I did hope that our connecticut organ, in entering upon a new volume, would have a new head—not editorial, for that is unexceptionably good—and omit the extras that flash about the letters and play a conspicuous part in an attempt at embellishment. Maybe they are intended to symbolize the rays of truth that emanate from its pages. The Christian Advocate, at New Orleans, has an appropriate head, ornate and beautiful. I do not think it can be improved. The fearlessness with which the editorial pen is wielded in meeting error is commendable. I have thought several times of sending you a few words of cheer and approval for leaders that have appeared, and I join those who have spoken in reference to your leader of January 7, "Newspapers and Religion." The Advocate is an excellent paper, of good typography, and is ever a welcome visitor.

For the benefit of your young readers let me say that there are only three exceptions to this general rule about the article, so-called, that "a becomes an before a vowel and before a silent h." By remembering these, errors will be avoided. They are: A is used before one, as it is pronounced won, or has a consonant sound, and before long; an is used before words of more than two syllables beginning with h, as counted on the second syllable, thus: Such a one, a union, a unanimous vote, a hundredfold, a hypocrite, an historical account, an hypothesis. If hypotheses were accented on the first or third syllable, it would take a. The term "widow woman" is in common use. It would be as proper to say "bachelor man." "Past history" is found frequently in books and periodicals. "New beginner" is likewise incorrect; they are tautologous. Some preachers say and for on and ind for in, which utterance is not very pleasant.

The title "God Almighty" appears irrelevant, and it can scarcely be used, in ordinary speaking, without seeming irreverence, which appears almost like blasphemy. A too frequent use also of God's name has the appearance of irreverence. "Almighty God" can be uttered with profound reverence. In prayer-God is addressed, and yet I seldom hear a prayer in which God is not spoken of in the third person, and often the brother leading in prayer seems to forget that he is addressing God, and addresses the persons present and exhorts them in some form.

The expression "preaching a funeral" is often used for "preaching a funeral sermon," and yesterday I saw it in a volume of sermons. The pronoun it is often improperly applied to the Holy Spirit.

Bibles and hymn books of pulpits are often defaced. I have seen divisions of a sermon or leading words of suggestion written on the margin, the verses marked and the initials of the preacher's name near the text from which he had preached, also the leaves of the Bible stained by soiled fingers from saliva and tobacco. And I have seen the hymn book marked in various ways, the stanzas numbered, and those omitted scratched with penoils. I heard of a preacher who preached from the same text on three successive times at the same place. To avoid such occurrences it would be well for the preacher to keep a note book of texts, verses and places. It is neither in good taste nor is it proper to deface the pulpit books.

The word not should always follow either, or or should always follow either. They should never be interchanged; it is sometimes incorrectly done. Rev. A. B. conducted the mor-

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1886.

ONE-FOURTH OF THE ASSESSMENT.—All of our patronizing Conferences accepted the proposition to send one-fourth of the assessment for foreign missions for 1886 to the treasurer at Nashville, by the first of March or April. The pastors are at work, and some churches have already responded. We hope the matter will receive prompt attention. We would be glad to receive postal reports from the pastors about their collections. This week we have four responses—one from an entire district.

Rev. J. W. Hoppell, presiding elder of the Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference, writes: "The Greenville district has sent her one-fourth to Dr. Kelly as promised at Conference."

Carrollton and Greenwood station, Winona district, North Mississippi Conference, Rev. T. W. Lewis, pastor, has forwarded one-fourth of its foreign missionary assessment to the Conference treasurer.

Silver Creek circuit, Mississippi Conference, Rev. J. A. Newson, pastor, has paid its assessment for foreign missions in full. Our liberal friend, Bro. Peter James, lives there.

John W. Chambers writes: "Candlen circuit, Mississippi Conference, has a little overpaid one-fourth of its assessment for foreign missions."

Joseph Cook's lectures began in Tremont Temple, Boston, on Monday of this week.

The Preachers' Meeting on Monday morning was unusually interesting. Dr. Atkins read an admirable paper on "Preaching," which was followed by remarks from Bishop Keener and other brethren. An essay once a month will hereafter be a feature of the meetings. On the first Monday in March, Rev. Beverly Carradine will read a paper on "Pastoral Visiting."

Preparations for the Moody and Sankey meetings are about completed, and expectations are sanguine for a glorious season. Preparatory union services will be held in several of the churches during this week and up to Thursday evening next. Mr. Moody will arrive in time to commence work on Tuesday morning. A choir of over a hundred voices, and from the various congregations, has been organized under the direction of Mr. Philip Verlein, chairman of the Committee on Music. The time is propitious for Mr. Moody's coming. The "invasion" of Mr. Aitken has left a delightful spirit in the community. At his farewell service he cordially commended "Brother Moody and his work, and urged his people to co-operate. May the overshadowing of this Almighty rest upon the laborers and the people during these meetings!"

As predicted in these columns last week, there has been a change in the political parties of Great Britain. The government of Lord Salisbury had a short lease of power. On the very first test vote in the House of Commons it suffered an overwhelming defeat, the Parnellites voting solidly with the Liberals. Mr. Gladstone has been summoned by the Queen to form a Cabinet, and as we go to press is engaged in so doing. The great question of his administration will be the pacification of the Irish troubles. He favors making large concessions in the direction of home rule, but is unalterably opposed to a severance of the union. If Mr. Parnell is wise enough to meet Mr. Gladstone on some common ground of liberal adjustment, the present premier will crown his parliamentary career with his most brilliant feat of statesmanship. His personal influence is the wonder of the age. Though past his threescore years and ten, he is yet the most magnetic orator and skillful able parliamentary leader in England. And withal he is a man of unsullied purity of character and unquestioned honesty of motive. If he fails and there is another appeal to this country, we doubt not there will be an overwhelming victory for his party.

The Administration of Foreign Missions.

This question, always important, is just now a living one in Southern Methodism. An elaborate and able article in the Nashville Advocate, of last week, from the pen of Chancellor Garland, the president of the Board of Missions, brings the matter prominently before the church. Any thing from that distinguished source is sure to find readers and to command thoughtful attention. What ever may be our views on any subject, we feel like revising or thoroughly re-examining them when a different opinion is expressed by our old preceptor. Too broad to be a partisan and too catholic to be sectarian, his convictions are unclouded by prejudice and unaffected by the slightest tinge of selfishness. Dr. Garland has magnified his office as president of the Board of Missions. He has acquainted himself thoroughly with our missionary operations and been an eminently wise counselor in the deliberations and conclusions of the Board. While rejoicing in the marked and healthy growth of missionary sentiment and liberality at home, and the results achieved by our laborers in the foreign field, the Doctor thinks the success should have been greater. And this failure to meet reasonable expectation he attributes to inadequate or unharmonious administration abroad. And this lack of harmony he maintains is "inherent in the organization of our foreign missions." As a remedy for existing or prospective evils, he suggests a re-organization of our whole system of administration. He regards our present mode of operation as "anti-Methodistic," and is of opinion that the only adequate remedy for existing defects is "the substitution of the local superintendent by a Bishop of the church."

Some slight modification of the system may be wise in order to adapt it to the needs of our growing missions, but we fail to discover in it any contravention of the genius and polity of Methodism. Nor can we agree with the Doctor in the remedy suggested. We seriously question its feasibility, while against it there are grave constitutional objections. It is a maxim in jurisprudence that "law is based upon a previous conception of its necessity, and is adequate to remedy the evils exhibited and secure the good contemplated." The necessity and adequacy of the proposed statute are therefore proper subjects of discussion. And this suggests the inquiry: First, are the existing evils inherent in the system, as the Doctor argues, or are they incidental thereto? And, secondly, is the measure proposed competent to cure the troubles of which mention is made?

Our system is essentially the same that has been in operation since the early days of American Episcopal Methodism. The work abroad has been managed by superintendents under the control of a representative Board at home, of which the Bishops are members. In addition, each mission is in special charge of a Bishop and subject to his episcopal decisions. That troubles arise in the field is to be deplored, and attributed, as Dr. Garland says, to the fact that missionaries "are men, not angels." But if so, are the evils not incidental, rather than inherent? They belong to the weaknesses of men and the imperfections of human government. We can not legislate petty envyings and jealousies out of the human heart. A radical change of system would not remove those difficulties. Indeed, we are of the opinion that the remedy suggested would rather aggravate them.

Against the plan of a resident Bishop in the foreign field there are constitutional objections. Around our third restrictive rule, which jealously maintains "the plan of our itinerant general superintendency," the great battles of Episcopal Methodism have been fought. On that question Bishop Soule made some history that ought to be known and read of all Methodists. The great controversy over an elective presiding elder, which came near disintegrating the church, involved the integrity of that constitutional provision. If one man could be appointed without the power or authority of the Bishop, it was rightly argued that the constitutional prerogatives of the episcopacy were violated and a principle admitted, that would necessarily destroy the itinerant general superintendency. That tendency was toward congregationalism. But the measure proposed by Dr. Garland is obnoxious to the third restrictive rule, in that it restrains or limits the itinerant feature of our general superintendency. The tendency is in the direction of a diocesan episcopacy, albeit the Doctor says: "This objection has no real force." If a Bishop is elected by the General Conference with the understanding that he is to reside in China, Brazil or Mexico, and because of his supposed qualifications for that work, we thereby in spirit and purpose limit his jurisdiction and designate his episcopal district. In the Methodist Episcopal Church provision has been made for a Missionary Bishop with certain specified functions. But that has occasioned unseemly controversy and has hardly been satisfactory. Dr. Garland's plan does not contemplate such technical restrictions and limitations, but is no less at variance with the spirit of the third restrictive rule. He says: "His assignment to China or Brazil is no more discommodious in principle than the assignment of a Bishop to the Pacific Conferences, or one to the Atlantic Conferences." Granted, provided he is assigned for one year. But when it is stipulated that he is to reside in China or Brazil and return to the United States once in four years for a few weeks, the principle of our "itinerant general superintendency" is surrendered. A Bishop may be assigned for two or more successive years to the same Conferences, but the assignment is made annually with the possibility of change to another part of the connection. But this plan definitely fixes and limits the work of a Bishop for life. This free interchange of the Bishops, and the unrestrained interplay of the itinerant feature of the general superintendency, have been our strongest bond of connexion and sympathy and the secret of our great and gratifying success. On this subject the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church spoke some wise words in their address to the General Conference of 1876, which met in Baltimore. They said: "Our interchangeable administration in the Conferences makes several members of the Board, by personal inspection and observation, acquainted with the condition of each particular part of the work, and thus gives us a united judgment upon the state and claims of every part of the field. * * * Owing to the great extent of the connection, we can perceive of no other way by which a uniform administration can be maintained; and without uniformity, without oneness of executive authority and administration, we do not see how the unity, the connexion, the character of the church, can be preserved. Our profound convictions on this subject have led us to great care and constant effort to secure a uniform administration."

Any interference with this vital principle of our economy is justly regarded with grave apprehension. That the measure proposed by Dr. Garland will tend to its disintegration, seems to us an inevitable, logical certainty.

But if there were no constitutional difficulties in the way, we would doubt the wisdom of the scheme. What are the evils to be remedied? There is no intimation of dereliction or lack of consecration on the part of any missionary in this field. The church of God has never produced more heroic men and women. And their success has been most gratifying—in some fields the wonder of the Christian world. That, generally, they have labored wisely, no one doubts. The only troubles indicated, therefore, are personal differences in the details of administration. If so, a resident Bishop could not remove them, for he would be subject to the infirmities attributed to superintendents invested with excessive authority. He would not and could not, in that small circle, sustain the same unprejudiced and impartial relation to the work that he does at home. The Doctor's reference to Bishop Asbury and early American Methodism in confirmation of his view is a little unfortunate. It was not the mere fact that Asbury became a Bishop, clothed with legal and sacred authority, that rivalries, dissensions, jealousies and factions in the little band ceased. This resulted rather from the source of his authority. He refused to be consecrated a Bishop on the mere appointment of Mr. Wesley, and only accepted the office by the election of the General Conference. Had he become a Bishop by foreign appointment, letters of complaint would still have gone across the sea to headquarters and discussions continued with unabated passion. In that action Asbury defined the source of Methodist episcopacy, and demonstrated eminent ecclesiastical statesmanship.

But there are other objections:—1. Our different missions are yet too small for each to require the entire time of a Bishop. 2. The expense of maintaining a Bishop in each mission would be out of all reasonable proportion to the cost of our home work. A Bishop abroad would of course expect the same salary as one at home. 3. The Missionary Bishop or some member of his family might fail in health in the field assigned him. He would then demand the privilege of returning home, and at home would, of course, be equal in authority with his colleagues. But a Bishop selected because of special fitness for mission work might not be qualified for the chief pastorate of the church at home. For this field his election would not have been seriously considered. So confusion and dissatisfaction would result.

The wiser course for us to adopt is biennial visits of our Bishops to the distant missionary fields, and annual visits to those nearer home. Our Northern Methodist brethren pursue this plan, and with most satisfactory results. They strengthen and lighten the bond of sympathy between the home and foreign fields by the frequent visits of their Bishops. That policy seems to be our duty. Going out fresh from the home church, they would inspire the missionaries with new courage. And returning, they would bring reports of the work abroad that would kindle to a flame the missionary sentiment at home. A new era dawned upon Southern Methodism when Bishop Marvin returned from his missionary tour. Dr. R. L. Dashiell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the General Conference of 1876 said: "As missionary secretary I desire to say that Bishop Harris' missionary tour around the world was the grandest and best paying visit that was ever made. Under the power of that clear and most forcible presentation of the status of our foreign work we were able to bring up our collections, even in times of the greatest commercial stringency, and this was in large measure the result of the account of the visit given by Bishop Harris." Dr. Reuben Nelson, at that time senior Book Agent at New York, said: "Always when our Bishops have visited those foreign fields they have met with a hearty reception by our missionaries, and when they have returned, their accounts of their visits have been attended with great success in awakening a livelier zeal on the part of our people in the interest of the cause of missions—a result that will follow the episcopal visits recommended in the report."

Such is the testimony of those who have tried the plan. We doubt not similar results would attend its adoption by our church. And then it would be far less expensive than the support of resident Bishops.

We have written thus at length because of the gravity and importance of the question, and the honored source from which it emanates. True, the Doctor says his scheme is "in some measure tentative," but, therefore, worthy of consideration. A step so radical as the "re-creating of our whole system" should not be taken without patient and prayerful deliberation. We desire the best possible supervision of our foreign work; but the issues involved are too vital for daring experiments.

The Episcopal Mission.

Mr. Aitken, the English revivalist, is as pronounced in his convictions and methods as was John Wesley. He speaks to the point. His appeals are at times almost overwhelming. His attitude is not that of an Episcopal clergyman. He stands before his audience as a man of God, who is not thinking of any visible church establishment, but who is tremendously earnest to pluck immortal souls from the pit. His ministrations would fit quite naturally into one of our protracted meetings. He has attracted more attention during his stay here and perhaps addressed more listeners than any other revivalist in this city for twenty-five years. The results of his work will be lasting.

These can not be judged by the average congregations which daily assembled at the different places of worship. The novelty of the work and the inclemency of the weather were against him. To his own people he was a John the Baptist. He came to them with a heart running over with love and solicitude, and warned them to repent and believe the gospel. He told them that the weekly ventilating of their prayer books, the frequenting of the table of the Lord, the esthetic enjoyment of rhetorical pleonasm and the rhapsodic pleasantry afforded by exultant church music, might be but the counterfeit of a genuine Christian experience. He showed how all this was compatible with a complete ignorance of the Lord and the saving power of the gospel. Wordly pleasures he denounced with emphasis. He declared that when the heart was in love with Jesus, it could have no fondness for recreations and amusements which tend to worldliness. All this to congregations pronounced fashionable, wealthy and in many instances not conspicuous for spirituality. The effect can readily be imagined. Some became indignant, others felt the rebuke. Some were startled at the deception they had been practicing on themselves. Hundreds were deeply penitent. Tears flowed plentifully, scores knelt in prayer during the entire time of the "after meeting" waiting for a personal word or the whispered prayer of the revivalist.

He told them of the song of Miriam after the deliverance of the Israelites;

how the people shouted for joy and greatly rejoiced in the goodness of the Lord who had saved them. So, he assured them, it was with many a new born soul, who, when the blessed consciousness of salvation dawned upon them, shouted aloud before the congregation! Mr. Aitken is not hampered by any appearance of fastidiousness. He believed in the shout of holy joy as it trembled upon the lip of the child of God. Conscious salvation was emphasized again and again. Illustrations showing how Christ is received were abundant. Solemnly he declared, nothing less than this personal reception of Christ can save. It is safe to say, our brethren to whom Mr. Aitken ministered never heard such preaching before, nor will they soon forget it.

But the advent of such a man in the Episcopal Church marks no small event. He has committed that church and clergy to an endorsement of his preaching and methods. Hereafter there must obtain among the laity a higher standard of Christian devotion and a more luminous statement of what constitutes Christian living. He has introduced the heaven. It must work. We shall hardly expect to hear again of persons who "prefer the Episcopal Church because it lay no embargo upon worldly amusements, and because it does not stress the tuning up of its members to a high state of spirituality." We expect the seed which this godly man has sown to result in the general reviving of the Episcopal Church in America. We have only witnessed the beginning of the work. Mr. Aitken is not only teaching the laity of his church the meaning of godly living, but he is training many a minister of his church. His glowing zeal will find disciples; his high conception of the ministerial function will be commended to many of his clerical brethren.

Many of them will become revivalists, and that of no mean order. What a splendid example is he to the narrow little churchman who expatiates upon the sufficiency of confirmation and the Divine uses of actual transubstantiation, and confines himself within the sacred enclosures of his "most beautiful ritual." To such lights he is like a sun dazzling with unusual splendor. His boldness and lucidude are magisterial. He prays more without than within his Prayer Book. He sniffs his prayer to the crucifixion, and such occasions as he makes are hardly contemplated by his Prayer Book. We said he was educating his ministerial brethren. An amusing incident occurred at one of his meetings. After preaching a sermon abounding with Christian hope and cheerfulness, in which he glowingly described the goodness of God in all his providences, he asked a brother clergyman to pray. This brother who found himself suddenly thrown from the stately vessel of a ready Prayer Book into the deep waters, Peter-like, began to sink, when he suddenly cried out: "O Lord! teach thy servant how to pray!" and with a hard struggle finished what may have been his first public extemporaneous prayer. Of course this work allows to many of the devout their church in a new aspect altogether. Some who have long entertained the pleasing hope that the day may soon come when all the other Protestant bodies shall glide into the open arms of their gentle "Mother," ask nay not this be the day. Said a most amiable and intelligent lady to a Methodist minister: "Now what is to hinder the Methodist Church from coming to us. You see, we believe in revivals as do you. Surely there can be no substantial objection to a union." The minister replied: "The trouble is, we are so large, that should we enter your church you would be entirely absorbed, and what forms were left, we would toss out of the window." She thought a moment, and answered: "I wonder how Jonah felt after he swallowed that whale!"

Mississippi Conference Minutes.

My attention has been called to an error in the statistical report from Crystal Springs station. Nothing is reported for education, whereas the assessment was met in full. I filed with the statistical secretary a correct report, and read in open Conference a duplicate thereof. The wonder is that so few of such errors occur in these reports. Our painstaking statistical secretary gets up our statistics with great facility and correctness, and deserves high commendation for his patient attention to his business. Yet, as an act of justice to Crystal Springs, you will please publish this correction, and oblige.

Reproach Rebounds.

BY REV. J. D. A. ATKENS, D. D.

The address of Christ to the "angel" of the church of Ephesus indicates the true manner of dealing with sin and sinners. He first commends the commendable, lauds the laudable, wins the Ephesians over to himself with this just acknowledgment of some of their manifest excellences, and then administers the necessary reprimand: "Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee because thou hast left thy first love." Had the reprimand been given ere those addressed had been plucked with deserving praise, the charge would have been angrily repelled and caused aversion and bitterness of soul. Reproach rebounds.

Many preachers are sufficiently, but unwisely, outspoken against sin and wickedness. Sinful thunders reverberate in the ears of the hearers, but none are dismayed; dire anathemas are hurled forth with Jupiter's vehemence, but no one trembles, no one fears. Whence this impunity of the terror of the law? Because of the loveless presentation of the same. Some seem to find pleasure in exposing the "putrefying sores" of their hearers; it delights them to give them "a piece of their mind," and their mind is surcharged with ill-humor, ill-will and even contempt. The heartless mode of presenting the law seems to impress the hearers, that it would be a source of gratification to the speaker if they were exiled from heaven eternally.

Reproaching delinquents will never prove beneficial. Present in a sudden, censorious manner to a wayward child the long catalogue of its shortcomings and misdemeanors; and, as you are, the child will turn away from you, but not from its sins. Without reproaching him with his sins, slothfulness, disobedience, etc., commend the undeniably commendable, and then add: "And now, my dear, will you not bestir yourself? Be more industrious, exact and obedient." Reproach begets anger and aversion. The same in preaching. If we address our hearers reproachfully, indicating that our effort aims not at their reformation, but was only attempted for our gratification—if it appears that we simply design to convince our hearers of their baseness, meanness, wickedness, they are convinced, but will at the same time mentally add: "You're another." Instead of being led to repentance, they are hardened, soured, hate the preacher and even the church which sent him. Should a physician, instead of healing a chronic sore, find gratification in laying it bare, spreading even the foul matter under our nose, we would discharge him with just indignation. To cure, and not wantonly to expose our sores, we had called him in.

As parents and preachers, we should never allow ourselves to be angry because of the waywardness of our children and people. The physician does not scold nor reproach the invalid for being sick. Nay, he prescribes his remedies and seeks to cure. Should the remedy prescribed and administered give no relief, he can certainly find no reason for censuring or upbraiding the luckless sufferer, but devises other means in order to remove the malady. Sinners are morally sick. Do not reproach, but pity them. Seek to effect a speedy and thorough cure. If caught else than love—true love—actuates us in our efforts to save sinners, the outcome will be utter failure. It will not feed the hungry by reproaching them with their former extravagance; it will not cure the consumptive by reproaching him with his former excesses. Neither will sinners be benefited by reproaching them with their sins. Never speak of sin without the cross of Christ being distinctly seen. This cross—this cross only—enables the sinner to discover the great number and exceeding heinousness of his sins.

Disputed Authorship.

We find the following in the Christian at Work of January 14:

Andrew Harper, who died recently in Mississippi, was the author of a piece of American humor known as the "Hardshell Baptist sermon," the text of which declared: "An he played on a harp of a thousand strings; spirits of just men made perfect."

That is not according to the truth of history. Andrew Harper alled in "fixing up the description of the preacher," but the real author of the "sermon" was the Rev. Henry T. Lewis, a Methodist preacher, and at the time a member of the Mississippi Conference. It was written out in the office of the Brandon Republican at Brandon, Miss., and was published in that paper in the year 1851. Mr. Lewis got the suggestion and outline of the "sermon" from a speech by J. S. Morris, Esq., a young lawyer, delivered at some convivial gathering. But he wrote and published it, as it has appeared in the desire to give the readers of the Christian Advocate a short point of Missouri, my native land. I have no doubt that many of the readers of this paper have lives and friends living in our State. Many would like to know about a State where there are great possibilities of wealth.

The geographical position of Missouri is favorable. It is near the center of the Union. On the East it is drained by the Mississippi river, through the upper part of the flowing the Missouri river, in its fertile banks and bottoms.
The rivers were favorable to early settlement. Before the day of railroads they gave the early settlers communication with the world.
Days past one of the greatest of the country boy saw in St.
Louis was the great number of cattle loaded for New Orleans.
Railroads now give us a large part of the trade of the South, West and East.
Our population, now more than million, has largely come from Ireland, Kentucky and Tennessee.
There is but little difference between the social customs and political of the people of those States the Missourians. North Missouri, however, is gaining a good of Eastern people. The people are also rapidly improving country near St. Louis. Our citizens and church people are claiming themselves considerably the "German element." At but they form but a small factor out of 2,100,000 making up our entire population. It is, however, a growing factor, and by many considered dangerous. This much is said in favor of our German element: They are improving the
The negro is always with us.
The souls of Ham number 145,000.

They are very fond of village and city life. Throughout the old slave counties many of them live in cabins on the farms. Thus far the negro has made but little progress here in Missouri. His brethren, so far as I have observed, have done much better in Kansas and Illinois. Our people, however, have done a great deal for them. Schools have been established for them in many places.
Illiteracy, their inheritance from pagan ancestors, is gradually disappearing. To all our citizens, of whatever color or nation, I would say with Burns,

"Here's freedom to him that will read, Here's freedom to him that will write."

We boast of our farms and farmers.
Our farms number 25,575. Nor are they cut up into mere garden spots, either. They are made up of 27,575,275 acres. And yet there is room for others. More than 11,000,000 of these acres being unimproved.
These farms are said to be worth $375,633,407. That is a little more than Mr. Vanderbilt's estate. Corn is our king. Our farmers have gathered more than 202,000,000 bushels. Our wheat stalks have turned out 25,000,000 bushels of wheat. Our hay crop, thrown on the scales, weighs 1,000,000 tons.
The cattle on a thousand hills are worth $96,000,000. It may be truly said that the farmers in Missouri
"have a goodly heritage."

A good farm first, then a good market. We are favored with these conditions of a wise economy.
Manufacturing establishments to the number of 8,502 supported by a capital of $2,507,811, give work to many, and make a market near home. This is material.

But
"Because a man has shop to mind
In due and place, since he must live,
Needs he not lack all his behind,
All-day thoughts, for ever, culture,
All losses except what trade can give."

Our public school system is a matter of just pride. Our public school property is worth $7,510,000.
The various school funds realize about $5,000,000 annually. Our teachers are ten thousand strong.
We have a high per cent.
of illiteracy, but we are determined to make use of public schools and all others to banish ignorance. We also have the normal school idea. Four of these, located in convenient parts of the State, send out teachers to a large number of public schools. We do not blush at the name of our State University. Bro. Chapman, our preacher at Columbia, looks on a property worth $250,000. The productive endowment amounts to $500,000. Dr. S. S. Laws, the president, is a man of strong religious character. A good number of the professors are men of good Christian influence. Central College, Fayette, Mo., is one of the best endowed colleges in the State. The Baptists have strong educational influence at Liberty.

Our churches are all prosperous.
Our Southern Methodist forces number 60,000. The Baptists claim a membership of 80,000. If both branches of Methodism were counted together, the figures would run higher than the latter number. Our Presbyterian brethren have a considerable number and large influence.
They hold up the standard of missionary qualification and give no little attention to education. Presby-terianism is well represented by such men as Dr. S. J. Nichols, Dr. J. H.
Brooks and Rev. A. N. Hollenfeld.
The Baptists are not ashamed of such men like Dr. W. W. Boyd and
Dr. Pope Yennan. The Methodist Episcopal Church people have with them Bishop Bowman and Dr. C. P.
Musden. The Southern Methodists frequently speak of Bishop Tranberry, Dr. E. R. Hendrix and Dr. W.
V. Tindor. Our editors are of no mean order. Dr. Frye, Dr. Mc-Anally and Dr. Godbey. Dr. Mc-Anally has done untold good in Missouri. A man of pure character, broad views and sound theology, his paper has long had great influence.

Taken altogether, the prospects for Missouri are flattering. The people are looking up and onward. A better day is dawning. Peoples from East and West are welcome.

"The Tower of Babel is a long way,
A transitory shade of long day,
It sits upon the sand from which I spring."

Dr. Abbey and the "Wise Men."

In my Christmas article on the "wise men," I assumed as probable that they were of an ancient and very honorable, priestly order among the Persians. I stated that this was the commonly received opinion, now, as far as I know. Dr. Abbey challenges that view in the last issue of the Advocate, but fails to give any but the merest conjecture in support of his theory that they were Grecian Jews from somewhere out of Palestine. I do not see the propriety of his calling Grecian Jews a denomination. It is very true that there were vasty more Jews out of Palestine than within it; the larger number of those in captivity in Babylon never returned to Jerusalem; they spread throughout every region of the East, and wherever they went were zealous missionaries of their faith. And the West was as full of Jews as the East. Josephus says there was scarcely a corner of the Roman Empire where they might not be found. But Jerusalem still contained their religious centre and the source of their ecclesiastical authority. To its shrine they came to their great feasts "from every nation under heaven"—"Partians and Meles and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia," and the provinces of Judea, Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, Pamphylia, Egypt, parts of Lybia about Cyrene, from Rome, Crete and Arabia. But a Jew was a Jew, either native or proselyte, whether he lived at Alexandria, Rome, Jerusalem, or somewhere else.

It is somewhat surprising to hear
Dr. Abbey call the Pharisees of Christ's time "A little knot of religious fanatics infesting Jerusalem and vicinity." If they were "a little knot," they possessed a vast deal of power, since it was they who gave to Jesus the main part of his opposition, and finally procured his death.
Horne, in his "Introduction to the Bible," says that "The Pharisees were the most numerous, distinguished and popular sect among the Jews." Instead of "rising and falling in about the same length of time as Jonah's gourd," as Dr. Abbey asserts, their existence as a sect dates back to about two hundred and sixty years before the Christian era. They were the orthodox party of the Jews, holding firmly against the materialistic and rationalistic errors of the Sadducees. Dr. Gieseler, in his "Life and Words of Christ," says they were numerous in every part of the Roman Empire, the Democratic party of the nation, the true representatives of the people, with the Mosaic law creed that "God has given to all alike the kingdom, priesthood and holiness." "The influence of the Pharisees was so overwhelming that even the highest priests were glad to respect their opinions." Canon Farrar, says: "There were Pharisees and Pharisees." "We must bear in mind that the dark side of Pharisa-ism which is brought before us in the gospel—the common and current Pharisaism, half hypocritical, half mechanical, and wholly selfish, which justly incurred the blighting flash of Christ's denunciation—was not the only aspect which Pharisaism could wear." We must remember that such eminent men as Hillel, Simeon, Zacharias, Gamaliel, and Paul, were Pharisees—a fact which Paul boasted of, even after becoming a Christian.

Now, as to the authority for supposing that the "wise men" were Persian priests, I had in mind a book which I read about a dozen years ago, entitled, "The Wise Men:
Who They Were and How They Came to Jerusalem," by Francis W.
Upham, LL. D., and issued from the press of the New York Methodist Book Concern. This book was almost enthusiastically endorsed by such men as Dr. Abel Stevens, Dr.
J. P. Thompson, (a learned Egyptologist.) Dr. Taylor Lewis, Dr. Howard Crosby and others. Dr. Deems, in his book on "Jesus," said of it:
"This book is the first successful attempt that I have seen to clear up this pilgrimage; after reading it I canceled what I had before written on the subject." I respectfully suggest to Dr. Abbey that if he will follow the line of argument pursued by Dr. Upham in this book, and consult his authority, he may not longer conclude that the Persian magi were mere "astrologers, necromancers, fortune tellers," and the like; that they were not "totally destitute of all common sense and religious truth;" and that they were not "totally ignorant of Christology."

If the editor will allow me more space, I will conclude this article with an extract from a small book, entitled "The Household of Sir Thomas More," written in the form of a journal by his daughter, and dated 1535. I copy it in the old style of orthography in which it is written, and as much as a matter of curiosity as relevancy:

"Father brought home a strange Guest to-day—a converted Jew, with grizzled beard, furrowed brow, and eyes that shone like lamps lit in dark caverns. He had been to Burmaine and Tremecen, to the Holy City and to Damascus, to Urania and Assyria and I think all over the Known World, and told us many strange Tales, one hardly know how to believe; as, for example, of a Sea-coast Tribe, called the Balanches, who live on fish, and build their dwellings of the Bones, also, of a Race of his Country-men beyond Ephra-tes who believed in Christ, but knew Nothing of the Pope; and of whom were the Magians that followed the Star."

A Word to the Auxiliaries of the Woman's Missionary Society.

I have just received a communication from our corresponding secretary with information and instruction for our auxiliaries and an injunction to do my best in this direction, and in order to do this I will copy a part of her letter. "Mrs.
McGavock says the remittances for this quarter just passed are much better than the first two quarters, but the deficit is not yet made up and we will need to exert every energy in the effort to increase the collection of this last quarter if we would meet our appropriation.
She wishes that the Conference corresponding secretaries should not only press the collection at back does in full, but to urge the auxiliaries to use 'mite boxes' in the meetings, and in the family to secure thank and memorial offerings, birthday gifts, etc.—these gifts to go into the general fund. This has proved quite a source of revenue to the Northern Church Missionary Society, and why not in ours? It may prove a means of grace to some, too—as in the case of Mrs. Pickett." This leaflet most of you have read no doubt.

The last year, ending in March, we had raised over $1,000, with a membership of about six hundred juveniles included. This year we have quite a number added to our list, and the reports coming in from different auxiliaries are most encouraging. Especially are we pleased to see how readily they have responded to the call made by Miss Haygood for funds to build a "high school for girls in China." We have nearly, if not doubled, what we promised, and yet only a few have responded as yet. When these other collections have been called for, you have been cautioned not to encroach upon the general fund, but to increase that also. Let our assessments be paid in full, and if any must lack, let it be the others, yet all can be met if we are prudent and watchful. Let your treasurer see to it that each delinquent member is called upon for her back dues. The "mite box" is a good thing, and we ought to give it a trial. Read Mrs.
Pickett to them, and then show them the box. If anyone wishes this leaflet, we can send it to you.
We must work with a will from now on till the first of June, that our reports may be better than ever before. Last year we raised enough to support one missionary a year and donate over three hundred dollars to our college in Brazil. We ought to double that this year. We have so many more friends now than we did even then. We anticipate a much larger gathering this coming year.
Some of you have not received the "monthly programmes." Unfortunately they were destroyed in our late fire, and I wrote for more, but could not get enough to supply the demand, and a few had to suffer the loss. The next new quarter will soon come in and all shall have a showing. When these programmes are used, they are a great help, and very interesting.

If the society will notify me by a card that they will use the "mite boxes," I will send for them, or they could be substituted for awhile at least. Please let me hear from you at once. Send in a full report by the first of March.

"Aid and Guide."

Mr. Editor: The above is the title of a first-class book by L. D.
Palmer, lately issued from our Publishing House at Nashville, Tenn., the object of which is to aid and guide heads of families in conducting their family worship. As soon as I saw it was published I sent for a copy, which I have read with more interest than I have ever read a book of the sort before. It is very well arranged, and is orthodox throughout. It has eight well-selected Scripture lessons, eight abridged bymns and eight short prayers for every day in the week—four of each for morning and four for evening.
Out of this number the head of the family can select one of each for his morning devotions and one of each for evening prayer. The Scripture lessons, though short, embrace all that is essential to be known about doctrinal, experimental and practical godliness. The verses and stanzas selected to be sung by the family are very appropriate, but, I think, are too much abridged in some instances.
The prayers are short, but well expressed and very comprehensive, embracing all that we need usually pray for. The duty of family worship is clearly inferred from the example of the Old and New Testament saints as found in the Bible and as implied in the duties of parents and heads of families as is often specified in the Scriptures of truth. All evangelical churches teach and urge this as one of the first and most important duties devolving on heads of families, and yet, perhaps, no duty is more generally neglected than this. Ask a brother who has a Christian wife and a house full of lovely sons and daughters why he does not pray in his family, and he will coolly reply that he "believes the Methodists have generally given up family prayer of late," or that he "has no gifts for extemporaneous prayer," or that he "has too much else to attend to," or he "can not get his family together at the right time." Poor self-deceived man! Of what avail will either or all these self-created excuses be to him when he stands before his final Judge to give an account as to how he discharged his clearly defined scriptural duties to the family that the Author of duties placed under his Christian guardianship? Here are professedly Christian parents surrounded with a lovely family of children, not one of whom has ever heard a prayer from the lips of either father or mother, and, perhaps, have never seen them on their knees in the attitude of prayer except when someone else was leading. I am really glad to know that we have in some places a revival of family worship in our churches; but I am sorry to say that the revival wave has not reached us here to any great extent yet. Our lately published minutes say that we have in the Brookhaven district a membership of four thousand and forty-one, including, no doubt, many heads of families of both sexes. I wonder how many of them had family prayer this morning. I would suggest that our pastors, instead of reporting to our District Conference that family worship is generally neglected, ascertain and report definitely to our next Conference how many do attend to family prayer evening and morning. But, Mr. Editor, I am losing sight of the object I had in view when I commenced this article.
It was simply to call attention to Bro. Palmer's excellent book of family devotion—the "Aid and Guide" of all who need and desire aid and guidance in conducting the devotions of their households. It can be had at the Publishing House for fifty to seventy-five cents per copy, according to binding. I sent for the muslin gilt, as I like a pretty book, and it is a gem of beauty. I shall generally keep it in sight. Not that I expect to read the prayers in my family worship, for I learned to pray extemporaneously at the start and expect to do so as long as I live; but I like to pick up this most perfect of all my books of devotion every now and then and read the precious treasures it contains. I trust every Methodist family will get one or more copies as they may find it necessary. I fear those who have long since got the victory over their once awakened consciences on the subject of family prayer and have now got them stereotyped in neglect of this duty will hardly care to get a book that may awaken them from their deadly slumbers again, but I would certainly advise them to try it. It might be of infinite value to themselves and their precious children.

Bishop Walden on Methodist Comity.

The New York Christian Advocate, of last week, reproduces from the Sanford (Pa.) Journal a letter from Bishop J. M. Walden, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The spirit of it is so commendable and its purpose so desirable, that we take pleasure in giving it to the readers of the Advocate:

In "Some Chapters in Church History for Young People," written by Hon. J. Wofford Tucker to promote good feeling in the Methodist family, published in your paper recently, the author quoted the following passages from a letter I had the honor to write him from Livingston, Mont.:

"I have been careful in all my Southern Conferences to caution our brethren against going into places not large enough to support two Methodist societies, and where the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was already meeting the wants of these with Methodist affiliates."

"I appointed Bro. Walker to the Kistimnee mission, understanding that the field assigned him was a new field and aground needing the gospel, and told him he was expected to plant Methodism there."

"These extracts indicate, as fully as so brief a statement may, the principles which, in my view, should control in the administration of both the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, where they occupy territory in common. This is demanded alike by the relations which should exist between these great churches and by the extended work before them in our own and other lands. They each have used to husband their resources to meet the demands of their constantly widening fields, and even greater need to mutually cultivate that unity of the spirit which will make them true witnesses of their divine Head."

Where there is joint occupancy of field there will be occasion for charity in judgment as well as prudence in administration. It will be proper to accord to "those with Methodist affiliates" the right to determine whether their wants as Methodists are being met by existing provisions.
Neither church is entitled to claim the pre-eminence of a place for which it does not provide pastoral oversight as well as preaching. There are many towns that will not be large enough for a long time, if ever, to maintain two Methodist Churches; as a rule, such towns should be left to the church first occupying and giving them pastoral care; and yet there are localities where the relations of the town to a circuit might make an exception. The possible growth of new towns is also a modifying fact—hence, in my letter of September 7, to Judge Tucker, I wrote as follows:

"I also see that there are strong inclinations to the joint occupancy of young towns that have the promise of rapid growth, and thereby the prospect of a population that would easily support two Methodist Churches; in cases like this, where there are members of both branches of Methodism, time will soon determine the real need, and mutual forbearance will best serve the cause of the Master and hasten the day of open-hearted cordial fraternity, for which I both pray and work."

I desire to thus lay before your readers this paragraph from my letter to Judge Tucker, hoping to serve the very cause of peace he intended to promote by the quotations he made. Union—organic union—is not an issue before the churches; it may, or may not, become an issue; but to promote fraternity, generous, confiding fraternity, is a duty, a present duty, of all Methodism. For this reason I close by saying that the true mission of a Methodist Church is to augment its members by carrying the gospel to the unconverted, and not by seeking to draw members from another Methodist communion.

ORIGIN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

CHAR. B. GALLOWAY, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, D. D., REV. J. T. SAWYER
REV. W. L. C. HENNINGTON.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1886.

Rev. J. M. Wyatt, pastor at Verona and Tule, North Mississippi Conference, has forwarded to Dr. Kelley, $100 for foreign missions.

Rev. J. B. Stone, of the Sharon circuit, North Mississippi Conference, has raised one-fourth of the assessment for foreign missions on his charge.

Rev. T. B. White, of Boston Station, Louisiana Conference, reports his assessments for foreign and domestic missions subscribed in full and some cash on hand.

Rev. J. A. B. Jones, presiding elder of the Woodville district, Mississippi Conference, writes: "At Wilson, La., last Sunday, we collected over one-fourth of the assessment for foreign missions."

Rev. A. F. Watkins, pastor of Martin circuit, sent to Dr. Kelly, by Feb. 1, a little more than one-fourth of his foreign mission assessment.

Edwards circuit, Mississippi Conference, Rev. Inman W. Cooper, pastor, has raised one-fourth of the assessment for foreign missions.

Rev. D. M. Cogdell, pastor of Valden circuit, North Mississippi Conference, says: "We have sent to the treasurer over half of our assessment for foreign missions."

There is that scattereth and yet increaseth. If you would increase receipts for all church enterprises, scatter the ADVOCATE more widely.

Dr. Haygood says: "I would rather be the founder of a true Christian College than to have for a monument the tallest pyramid in Egypt."

We would be glad for our valued correspondents to increase their contributions and, therefore, their opportunities for doing good by sending in good lists of subscribers.

We very much regret our failure to publish Dr. Garland's article on "Our Foreign Missions" this week. It will appear in our next issue. Though we do not agree with the Doctor's plan, it will prove very suggestive reading.

Presiding elders of our patronizing Conferences are requested to inquire under the head of miscellaneous business in the Quarterly Conferences: "What can be done to increase the circulation of our Conference organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE?" A little help from the sub-episcopacy will increase our subscription list.

There seems to be a growing demand for the evangelistic office in the church. We have men engaged in that work now, but technically they are something else. The law is "winked at" in order to secure their services. There is no danger in legalizing the office. It will not be encumbered or crowded. Its only tenure is success.

The question of revising our standard hymn book will be considered by the next General Conference. We have now the same book adopted in 1847 without addition or emendation. In that time the hymnology of other churches has undergone revision, but ours has remained unchanged. Such conservatism we approve as a principle. The hymns of a denomination ought to express its evangelical spirit and conserve its doctrinal integrity. Comparing our excellent book with others, we give it the preference. But the hymnology of the church develops with its growth. This age has produced a number of hymns and some sacred music of great excellence. We must not conclude that a collection of hymns is as fixed as the canon of the sacred Scriptures. Our book contains many hymns that are never used and others of excessive length, that clutter its pages and increase its expense. Then others are excluded that have a world-wide popularity. In order to use them our congregations purchase other volumes of sacred songs, the tendency of which is to depreciate our own standard hymn book. We must revise it, or see it grow into disuse.

A Decision that Does not Decide.

We have noticed for several weeks in our secular exchanges editorial references of great or less extent to a certain decision of Judge Brewer, of Kansas. This question involved the constitutionality of a law which provided no compensation for property rendered comparatively valueless by its operation. In the case decided, the defendant, a Mr. John Wallruff, claimed that his brewery at Lawrence, Kansas, estimated to be worth $50,000 when erected, would not bring more than $5,000, if the prohibition law was enforced. He asked therefore if the State had a right to deprive him of $45,000 worth of property even to effect a supposed good. His business was recognized as legitimate when the brewery was erected and now by a certain statute his property is reduced in value $45,000. The judge decided in favor of the defendant, in which he said:

All that I hold is that property within the meaning of that [fourteenth] Amendment includes both the thing and the right to use it; that when the right to use in a given way is vested in a citizen it can not be taken from him for the public good without compensation. Beyond any doubt the State can prohibit the defendant from continuing his business of brewing; but before it can do so it must pay the value of the property destroyed.

Along with these utterances, however, the judge was sufficiently guarded as to sustain the right and power of the State to suppress the liquor traffic. On that point he said:

I do not in the least question the power of the State to absolutely prohibit the manufacture of beer or doubt that such prohibition is potential as against anyone proposing to do so at his peril and can not invoke the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment or demand the consideration and judgment of the Federal courts.

Reading this decision some exchanges call it "a black eye for prohibition" and display no little unconcealed pleasure in the prospect. The better time for glorying in a victory, unless we are greatly mistaken, this deliverance will meet an emphatic reversal in the Supreme Court of the United States. We are not learned in the law, but have some acquaintance with the great constitutional principles that are known and read of all intelligent American citizens. This position of Judge Brewer has a show of equity and plausibility, that will captivate the superficial reader. But a deeper investigation will expose its false philosophy and uncorrect reasoning.

The principle on which the judge based his decision, if practically carried out, would disrupt our whole social fabric and carry interminable confusion into our entire system of jurisprudence. If the State is compelled to make remuneration to all persons who feel compelled to refrain from certain acts or business injurious to public morals and violative of her peace and dignity, she is effectually estopped from any reformatory legislation. It would bankrupt her treasury to protect herself from her own citizens. If that doctrine is sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States, the national government will be compelled to reimburse the South for every piece of property destroyed during the war, including every slave emancipated and every animal confiscated.

The Voice, an able and aggressive prohibition paper in New York, has an admirable article on this case and conclusively exposes the falsity of that position. We extract the following:

The State has not confiscated his property. It has left him in possession of all he owned before, and has not appropriated one jot of it. It has simply passed a law for its own protection, the result of which is a decrease in the value of his property. But the State does this continually in the case of other industries. Congress, a few years ago, tinkered with the tariff laws, and one of the results were a decline in the value of every sheep ranch in the country. No compensation was made or asked. The law against obscene literature made practically worthless plates and other property, but there was no compensation made to the owners. The law in Pennsylvania against the manufacture of oleomargarine, which the Supreme Court of the State has lately sustained, will greatly diminish the value of certain property, but we have heard of no provision for compensation to those suffering. The same may be said of the laws against lottery and gambling. If there should be a law passed to-morrow against buying and selling stocks on margin (as there ought to be, and a strong one too), would compensation have to be paid to all who were engaged in that business? All property appropriated in the late war if it belonged to those loyal to the Union, was paid for afterward. But how about property whose value was vastly diminished because of the mere declaration of war?

Our friends need not be alarmed at the sensational prophecies of whiskey papers. The great principles underlying prohibitory legislation have too often been expounded by the highest courts of the land to be disturbed or invalidated. But, on account of the imminence of the question and the importance of thorough acquaintance with the principles involved in the present temperance agitation, we cite this article with an extract from Judge Cooley's great work on Constitutional Limitations. He is an authority on these questions and his work is a popular text book:

It has also been held competent to declare the liquor kept for sale a nuisance, and to provide legal process for its condemnation and destruction, and to seize and condemn the building occupied as a dram-shop, on the same ground. And it is only where, in framing such legislation, care has not been taken to observe those principles of protection which surround the persons and dwellings of individuals, securing them against unreasonable searches and seizures, and giving them a right to trial before condemnation, that the courts have felt at liberty to declare that it exceeded the proper province of police regulation. Perhaps there is no instance in which the power of the Legislature to make such regulations as may destroy the value of property, without compensation to the owner, appear in a more striking light than in the case of these statutes. The trade in alcoholic drinks being lawful, and the capital employed in it being fully protected by law, the Legislature, then steps in and, by an enactment based on general reasons of public utility, annihilates the trade, destroys altogether the employment, and reduces to a nominal value the property on hand. Even the keeping of that, for the purposes of sale, becomes a criminal offense; and, without any change whatever in his own conduct or employment, the merchant of yesterday becomes the criminal of to-day, and the very building in which he lives and conducts the business which to that moment was lawful, becomes the subject of legal proceedings, liable to be proceeded against, and for forfeiture. A statute which can do this must be justified upon the highest reasons of public benefit; but, whether satisfactory or not, the reasons address themselves exclusively to the legislative wisdom.

The Methodist Press.

This Texas Christian Advocate is publishing a series of thoughtful articles on Christian missions. They are a rather exhaustive, and yet suggestive discussion of living subjects. Having in previous issues shown that there can be but one true religion, just as there can be but one true science of mathematics, the last number discusses the question. How do we know that Christianity is the one true religion? This is done by a comparative study of the great religions of the world. Among the "doomed" religions, the writer classifies Judaism. Our good friend, Dr. Abby, will hardly allow this passage to go unchallenged:

Judaism was indeed great, but great only as a prophetic religion. Having ceased to be prophetic it has ceased to be true sense to live. Its work was done eighteen centuries ago. To-day it is a reminiscence. It is like the fading decorations of a Christmas altar when Christmas-tide has passed.

After discussing Buddhism and Islam, the article concludes as follows:

Three great missionary religions have had their day and proven themselves unequal to the mighty task of converting the world. There is but one other which has any hold upon the beliefs of men, namely—Christianity. This indeed is alive and strong to make converts. Will it fail like the others? Or has it that which the others lacked? Every element suited to universal domination and fullness of life sufficient to prevent sterility and death in the ages yet to come? For want of space we defer the answer until next week.

Here is a fine paragraph from the Nashville Christian Advocate. Many a preacher has backslid trying to sustain or defend a reputation:

Paul was busy making a fire to warm his shipwrecked fellow-passengers when a viper bit him. He shook off the viper, and went on with his fire-making. Go on with your work, brother: God will take care of your reputation if you will take care of his cause.

The Methodist Times of London notes a certain development in Wesleyan Methodism as follows. Conservative old England is about to out-Herod young America in daring progressivism:

We notice in the Methodist news of last week an item of some significance. In a circuit not far removed from the capital, the wife of the superintendent minister has been preaching in two or three Wesleyan chapels with considerable acceptance, and, as it should seem, drawing larger congregations than her estimable husband commands. We foresee that if this custom should spread, circuits may soon begin to inquire, not only about the gifts of the ministers whom they propose to invite, but also about the gifts of their wives. This consideration may, perhaps, lessen the gratification with which otherwise the announcement might be received. Nevertheless, we are glad to see the increased part Christian women are beginning to play in the diffusion of religion; and we shall be devoutly thankful if sufficient scope is found in Methodism for the zeal and knowledge of her devoted daughters.

On the importance of circulating our religious papers, the Richmond Christian Advocate prints these pithy paragraphs:

It is the few that work, pay and pray. Every Methodist alive, eager, "up and at 'em," would storm the strongholds of Satan and perpetuate Pentecost. * * * The good men and devout women must "put a Methodist paper in every Methodist home." When a member begins to read church news, he is worth tenfold to the good cause.

Hitherto he was a mere camp-follower. He is now a soldier pushing to the front. The half skinker, half straggler—worthless every way as an integer of victory—becomes directly an armed warrior.

We are weak at this point. Methodism must be like Sparta—a camp—every citizen in full harness.

The Northern Christian Advocate contains a characteristically polished and discriminating editorial on "The Value of a Good Man" in which we find this choice extract:

We do not say that aggressive, effective and wisely directed goodness is rare in these days, yet it is hardly an hyperbole to say that it ought to be multiplied a thousand-fold. The powers of evil are active; they must be met by an active goodness. Their strength is in the spirit of selfishness; they must be overcome by the spirit of benevolence. Evil is defunct in its nature; goodness will accomplish nothing without aims equally definite and a spirit equally earnest. Evil looks out for opportunities; so must goodness. The children of this world are wise in their generation; the children of light must be wise also. O for an army of good-doers to meet the army of evil-doers!

The New York Advocate favors local option as the most effective means of securing prohibition and rightly argues that "it is, as a proposition, quite unanswerable by any believer in Democratic institutions." We extract the following:

Who shall say that it is not reasonable that the people of any town, city, or State shall have the privilege of deciding whether liquors shall be sold? If the Democrat says it, he saws off the limb upon which his party, through its entire history, has claimed to perch. If the Republican affirms it, he excavates the ground on which he built his party temple at the first. If the prohibitionist who aims at State or national prohibition opposes it, he places himself in a trap. For if the local operation of the principle he worships, how can its general application be right?

The Alabama Advocate of last week has a very thoughtful editorial on our foreign mission work, suggested by Dr. Garland's paper. Our confere advocates rail-log our missions into independent organized self-governing churches. We think the suggestion premature. The following extract will be of special interest:

Let China and Mexico have each its own autonomy. If they want episcopacy, give them Bishops. If they do not want it, then do not force this feature upon them. Let the home church withdraw its control in things ecclesiastical, and keep up its support of prayer, sympathy and money. When they are from the North or the South, or from both sections, are in Mexico and China, it hardly looks like the best policy to keep them in a dependent condition. Let them go to keeping house and manage their own affairs. This they can do better than others can do it for them. This plan would secure a native ministry at an earlier day than any other plan could. So it seems to us. And a native ministry is one of the conditions of large and healthy growth. The policy of the Pope is to send to this country men of foreign birth and education. This may secure a stronger allegiance to Rome, but does not secure a more rapid spread of the influence of that church.

The Pacific Methodist thus refers to the approaching session of the General Conference:

The approach of the meeting of our General Conference arouses the mind of the church to various considerations. There will be a thousand suggestions made through the press of the church that will never be entertained at the session and there will be numerous suggestions during the session that will be swallowed in the committee rooms. Ours is a conservative church, and though this General Conference is largely composed of new and young men we have but little fear that our book of discipline will undergo many changes.

Religion in Colleges.

The New York Independent, of last week, publishes some interesting statistics as to the number of church members in some Presbyterian colleges in the United States. The exhibit is certainly encouraging. There is substantial progress afield croakers abound. These statistics contain a suggestion, however, to "the people called Methodists." Our church institutions doubtless could make a like showing, but we ought to know it. Why should not statistical reports be made at Conference from these institutions as to the number of conversions during the year, the present church membership and their general religious tone? If some such exhibit is not made, why have such colleges? We give the following interesting figures from the Independent:

Those who think that religion is perishing out of this generation will do well to ponder the following figures. The following colleges in the United States are under Presbyterian control; and against each we tabulate the number of students in the four college classes and the number who are members of the church:

College	No. of students	No. of members
Princeton	235	204
Hamilton	174	154
Washington and Jefferson	139	124
Park College, Mo.	104	101
N. Y. University	100	87
Harvard, Ind.	91	81
Adelphi, Cleveland, O.	70	49
Farson's, Fairfeld, La.	65	51
Wander, O.	74	63
Lake Forest, Ill.	63	60
Marshall, Tenn.	52	45
Marquette, Mich.	54	32
Washington, Tenn.	40	29
Yale	19	14
Indiana, Ind.	10	8
Emory, Ga.	9	7
St. Albans, N. H.	7	6
Westminster, Minn.	118	76
Westminster, N. J.	117	211
Total	1881	1617

The total in the last column must be reduced a little, because students in the preparatory department are included at Wooster and Biddle. It is a very interesting fact that nearly two-thirds of the students in these colleges are members of the church, and one-fifth of them are studying for the ministry. We hardly need to contrast this state of things with that of seventy-five years ago. When Dr. Dwight became president of Yale College, infidels were plenty, and hardly a professing Christian could be found, while as late as 1813 only two or three students in Princeton were members of the church.

Irish Methodism and Home Rule.

The Irish Methodists are loyal to the English crown and deprecate the present home rule agitation. And well they may. If there is ever a severance of the Union, Protestantism in Ireland will feel the heel of a heartless and unscrupulous ecclesiastical despotism. At a recent meeting in Dublin of the Committee on Privileges and Public Exemptions of the Methodist Church, the following resolutions were adopted:

"The Committee of Privileges, which is entrusted with the duty of representing the Methodist Church in Ireland on all public questions affecting its interests, having had under anxious consideration the serious crisis through which the country is now passing, while maintaining a perfect freedom from alliance with political parties, and cherishing a spirit of charity and good will towards all classes of our fellow-countrymen, earnestly resolves:

"That we reaffirm the steadfast loyalty of the Methodist Church in Ireland to the Crown and Constitution of the United Kingdom.

"That in our deliberate and solemn conviction there is nothing in the history or necessities of this country which requires the establishment of a separate Legislature, and that any measure which would even tend towards a dissolution of the legislative union with Great Britain would be highly prejudicial both to the moral and material interests of Ireland, and that its immediate effect would be to increase rather than diminish the animosities which at present unhappily distract the country.

"That, in common with all lovers of social order, we deplore and deprecate the spirit of lawlessness which has been fostered by unscrupulous agitation, leading to intimidation and violence, detrimental both to the secular weal and demoralizing to the national character, and, most of all, injurious to the maintenance and spirit of the great work of the churches of Christ in the land.

"That copies of these resolutions be sent to members of the present and late governments.

"That the vice-president, Rev. Dr. McKee, be requested to send a copy of these resolutions to the president of the British Conference, with the earnest desire of this committee that the Committee of Privileges appointed by the British Conference should take such action as in their judgment may best promote the object for which the resolutions have been passed."

Pistols—Let Them Be Abolished.

I knew of no more hopeful way of bringing the public to the proper appreciation of truth, than by keeping it constantly before them. I will "remember the flood and be brief."

1. Pistols destroy ten lives for everyone they save. Fatal accidents, unjustifiable shootings with pistols are of daily, almost of hourly occurrence. They are wholly unnecessary, and are therefore an unmitigated evil, and should be abolished.

2. The very fact of their existence causes many deaths. If a man is shot with a pistol, in nine cases out of ten, it is because he is supposed or known to have a pistol on his person. His own pistol causes his death, for who would shoot one known to be unarmed?

3. They make men hasty, quarrelsome, dictatorial, overbearing and cowardly. Whoever shoots another with a pistol, usually repents the act for the remainder of his days. If a man must needs be shot let it be done deliberately, with a gun, not formed for concealment and murder.

4. Let no nuisance or public enemy be entrenched behind the forms of law, or the altitudes of constitutions. Laws should be repealed, modified, and constitutions amended as the public weal may require.

5. The laws of Mississippi and of most other States, forbidding the carrying of concealed weapons. In so far as the pistol is designedly formed for concealment, the law is against its form. Why not forbid shot-guns as well as concealment, and let the shortest lawful fire-arm be at least three feet long?

6. The law against concealed weapons is and must continue to be, most wholly ineffectual; since, when concealed can not be known as such. This law is therefore an injustice to all who obey it, putting them at a disadvantage with the who easily and constantly disobey it. That pistols are not necessary for honorable self-defense is demonstrated by the fact that gentlemen never carry them openly for that purpose.

7. Then let the penalty for the ownership of a pistol be a fine of $1,000 and twelve months' imprisonment; one-fourth of the fine to be paid to the furnisher of proof of ownership or possession of a pistol. Then may no man suspect that the man who meets carries an engine of death concealed in his bosom.

The Alabama Christian Advocate favors the election of four Bishops to the next General Conference. "As have died during the last four years. Our confere is in error as to the death-rate in our episcopal college. Four of our chief pastors have died during the quadrennium. On the subject of strengthening the episcopacy, Dr. Rush speaks as follows:

"The men chosen should, of course, be deeply pious, which is to say ought to be free from the ambition lord it over God's heritage. They ought to be well acquainted with the law of the church, not only as it is read in the Discipline, but as it is to be known by a practical experience in the work of the church for poor circuits to rich stations. They should have learned to rule, by having learned to obey, how to administer law by having kept the law. The captain of the ship should be served before the mast.

"They should be good preachers not in one sense but in every sense men who can represent the church anywhere a preacher ought to stand. They should have good common sense—practical wisdom—knowledge of men and things. Scholarly culture is by no means to be discarded, but high scholarship is as important as tact in settling difficulties and harmonizing differences without hurting persons and compromising truth. Another fact of importance is that a Methodist Bishop should be a poor man. However may be in secular professions of the ministry of other churches, very certain that poverty is perfectly compatible with the very highest personal character and deepest usefulness in preachers of our church. A rich preacher may be as pious as poor one, but no one will be a heart as full of sympathy with poor brethren. Because the majority of our preachers are poor and will always be so, under any system, we would rather never have a rich Bishop.

"As to age, it makes but little difference whether he is thirty-six or sixty-five."

Will the secretary of each Annual Conference Board of Missions send me his annual report—the one read at the missionary anniversary. I am now making up my annual report, and must have materials.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 3.—A heavy snow storm last night and this morning extended as far south as Grenada. All trains on the Illinois Central Railroad are delayed. Mail and telegraphic communication is greatly interrupted. There was a light fall of snow here during the day, and the weather was very cold.

NEW YORK, Feb. 5.—The weather in the Atlantic coast States continues unusually severe. At Shenandoah, Pa., the thermometer registered from 10° to 16° below zero, the coldest ever known there. Work was suspended in several collieries, the public schools were closed, water mains froze, and several persons had their hands or feet frozen. The temperature is moderating to-night.

A dispatch from City Island announced that the month of the second was full of ice, and no vessel could be seen from that point. No sound steamers arrived yesterday, owing to the storm. None of these vessels sailed from other end Wednesday night. The past month has been a busy one for crews at lifesaving stations along the coast. The crew at the best record, having saved six lives since the great storm of Jan. 4.

CHICAGO, Feb. 5.—The Inter Ocean's Millview (la) special says: Al Berkley, a farmer residing three miles from here, with his entire family, consisting of his wife, two boys and one little girl, were all buried to death in their home last night. Nothing definite is known of the horrible affair, except that the children had been sick, and the parents had been up with them during the night. About morning the father took some coals from a stove and placed them in a shed adjoining the house, and then retired. The fire took fire, and finally burned the house. The house was a one-story log.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Feb. 5.—Moody and Sankey, the evangelists, opened a series of meetings here to-night at the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. The large edifice was filled to overflowing, hundreds being unable to gain admittance. They remain here until Sunday.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Feb. 5.—The first anti-Chinese State Convention convened here yesterday. One hundred delegates, representing the anti-Chinese leagues and trades organizations, were present, and permanent organization effected. The general sentiment among the delegates was that boycotting was favored as the quickest method of accomplishing the desired ends, and resolutions in accordance with these views were adopted. A resolution was also adopted demanding of Congress the abrogation of the Burlingame treaty.

AUSTIN, Tex., Feb. 7.—In the case appealed to them, the State Board of Education ruled that Leeds' History of the U. S. was partisan and inaccurate, and not suitable for the public schools of Texas. Among other chapters in it referred to as obnoxious is one headed "The Fort Pillow Massacre."

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—Senator Colquhoun, of Georgia, will introduce in the Senate this week a bill establishing local option in the District of Columbia. The bill provides for a vote by the people on the question, and is extremely rigorous. Under its provisions no intoxicating liquors can be manufactured within the District of Columbia or imported therein, and if it becomes a law, no wines can be used at the state dinners of the President. The bill has been submitted to several Senators and Representatives and it is said its main features have been approved by many of them. Senators Blair (New Hampshire) and Hoar (Massachusetts) are quoted as saying that they will favor it.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 8.—A serious riot took place this morning at the Henry Clark Coal Works of Frick & Co., near Bradford. About 300 strikers from Leisenring marched to the Henry Clark works, where a few men were at work. When the strikers appeared on the hill above the works they began firing on the workmen. The men who were working fled to the strikers for refusing to quit work a day or two ago returned the fire. He shot several times and hit one of them, who fell and was carried off by his companions. It is not known how badly he is injured. This returning of the fire infuriated the strikers, who set upon the men who were working. The man was given a severe beating. The man was left lying on the ground, unable to walk or defend himself from stray kicks which the rioters gave him as they passed to and fro. The strikers then made an attack on the little house, drove the men in charge out of it, and opened the office stove, which caused the building to be set on fire. The strikers did not attempt to burn anything else, but after remaining at the works a short time longer they went to the Sterling works, where they did some little damage and injured a couple of men.

SEATTLE, W. T., Feb. 8.—At an early hour this morning the militia and home guards marched to the Ocean Dock, where the Chinamen were confined, and took charge. Warrants had been previously issued for the arrest of the prominent agitators. Before daylight the work of arresting them began, and by 8 o'clock all the leaders were in jail. They were, however, immediately bailed out. All the Chinamen on board the steamer were marched to the courthouse by the militia, in answer to a writ of habeas corpus sworn out yesterday. No opposition was made to this move. Judge Greene informed each Chinaman he was at perfect liberty to go or stay, as he chose. The vast majority chose to leave. They were accordingly escorted to the steamer, and those who wished to stay were escorted to their homes. Up to this time there has been no bloodshed, although the streets are crowded. At noon, however, an attack was made on the Home Guards by a few hot heads. The guards were finally ordered to fire, and responded with a volley. Four men fell, one killed and three wounded. The militia formed a hollow square and held the mob at bay for fully an hour. The crowd then slowly melted away. There is intense excitement and danger of further trouble. Business is generally suspended. The steamer Queen sailed at 1 p. m. with 132 Chinamen.

LONDON, Feb. 5.—Mr. Spurgeon has returned to London and will soon resume his services.

BELGRADE, Feb. 5.—The government has ordered all merchants and manufacturers under the age of forty years to join the active army of Servia.

ATHENS, Feb. 5.—The powers have sent a third note to the Greek government advising caution.

MADRID, Feb. 5.—Prince Bismarck has ordered the hauling down of the German flag on the island of the Carlinas group occupied by the Germans previous to the decision of the Pope. The Spanish cabinet has abolished the privileges of Jesuits and religious schools, and restored the Sisto Superior of Education.

ST. JOHNS, Feb. 7.—The British schooner Miller and Woodman, from New York for St. John, before reported overdue, has been given up for lost. It is supposed the vessel is somewhere with all hands in the gale of Jan. 9. Three of the crew have large families in St. John.

LONDON, Feb. 8.—The starving mechanics of London to-day held a mass meeting in Trafalgar Square, around the Nelson monument, and it resulted in a riot. The proceedings were opened by an assemblage of 10,000 men. Police were present in large numbers. They at once saw that the riotous and unruly London greatly predominated in the crowd, which was also managed by well-known Socialists, and extraordinary vigilance was ordered to preserve the peace at all hazards.

According to later estimates 15,000 persons engaged in the Trafalgar Square demonstration. Two-thirds of the crowd were bona fide unemployed workmen, and the remainder were Socialists. The two sections were not in accord, and there were frequent collisions between them. The workmen took no part in the riotous and unruly London greatly predominated in the crowd, which was also managed by well-known Socialists, and extraordinary vigilance was ordered to preserve the peace at all hazards.

MARTHA OR MARY?
I can not choose; I should have liked so much to call at Jesus' feet—to feel the touch of his kind, gentle hand upon my head. While drinking in the gracious words he said:
And yet, to serve him—O divine employ!
To minister and give the Master joy;
To bathe in coolest springs his weary feet,
And wait upon him while he sat at meat.
Worship or service—whichever! Ah, that is best
To which he calls me, he it calls me best;
To labor for him in life's busy strife,
To seek his feet, a silent worshiper.
So let him choose for us; we are not strong
To make the choice; perhaps we should go wrong.
Mistaking zeal for service, sinful sloth
For loving worship—and so fail of both.

Dr. Garland and Foreign Missions.

MR. EDITOR: Dr. Garland's statements and suggestions are now the property of the church, and they ought to be considered and discussed before they are submitted to the General Conference for action. One of his statements is that our foreign mission work has not been as successful as we had the right to expect. In justification of this conclusion he states his relation to the work as affording superior advantages for knowing whereof he affirms. If proximity to facts was necessarily productive of their fullest comprehension, there would be no room for discussion. But we well know such is not the case. Elias thought the facts revealed to him that he alone was left on the side of the Lord, but he was informed by the Lord of seven thousand who were with him. And the facts will not be questioned by Dr. Garland nor anyone else that the reflex influence of our work upon the home church is a hundred per cent greater to-day than it was four years ago. Such development of spiritual strength and activity can be produced by none other than the well-tilled soil deeply rooted with the truth. And we must be excused if we conclude it is far less probable the Holy Spirit would hear a false witness with the spirit of the church than is the assumption that his conclusions from material facts are correct. This fact alone, if there had been none other, should have suggested to him the propriety of another four years of prayer and study before he made public such a statement.

In the next place the statement that there is trouble in all the foreign fields and that three missionaries have resigned is fallacious as an argument in favor of his conclusion. It might go far to show that a mistake had been made in the appointment of superintendents, yet that is an evil so easily remedied as hardly to justify serious thought. These mistakes are often made in high places in the home church and are as often corrected without serious damage to growth and prosperity. I know very well that the environments of the mission field are not the same as those at home. And yet there is very little, if any, difference in either the persons or the general methods of those immediately affected by administration. A little more attention to facts as they are communicated to the Board and a prompt action upon the same would doubtless leave friction.

In conclusion, the remedy suggested is far worse than the disease. Suppose the General Conference should elect the objectionable superintendent Bishop. Would that force submission in those who had assigned because of objections to him? Or would the friends of those who claimed to be sufferers be any more enthusiastic in the support of the mission, or any more likely to join its force because he was a Bishop? Quite the contrary would be the result. As there are no special gifts imparted either in the election or consecration of a Bishop he would be the same man in a new and higher relation.

In the next place he would cost the church, in salary and traveling expenses, seven thousand dollars for the quadrennium, more than he now costs. In other words the three foreign fields, with no increase of force, would cost us twenty-one thousand dollars more in four years than they now cost. Thus it will be seen we could send a home Bishop to each of these fields every year at a cost of less than one-half of what these local and localized Bishops would cost. How the president of the Board could conceive such an extravagant expenditure of money on doubtful methods after confessing the cause of his supposed failure in the work attributable in part to a paucity of funds most appear strange to the whole church. Finally, would it not be better if the Board would keep the church a little better advised of its methods and troubles and thus stop these startling facts that tend to shake confidence in the management. Certainly all the wisdom of the church is not in the Board, and for them to refuse the counsel and prayers of the church until trouble threatens her dearest enterprises looks less like the conduct of her servants than that of her masters.

Church Papers and Their Value.

MR. EDITOR: Is it not a great privilege to have come into our families such papers as our ADVOCATES are? I know your answer is in the affirmative, and yet I must tell you that many of our people do not take our church papers. An appreciative person need not be slow to his duty to subscribe for a religious paper, in order to induce him to do the same, but only get him to have the character and worth of the literature offered him by the church, and he at once realizes the greatness of the privilege he has been neglecting so long, and puts his name down for our ADVOCATE.

Our church papers are so well adapted to all classes, ages and tastes of people that all the wants and all the peculiarities of men may be met. It is a fact that you never hear a disparaging word against the character and worth of any of our ADVOCATES. They are all acknowledged good and only spoken of comparatively. The more our papers are read the more they are appreciated. The attachment grows with acquaintance, until no one will consent to sever the association. So highly profitable it is to read our church papers, and so highly beneficial, that no one will dare question the duty of having the church papers to circulate in all our families. The results, both mental and moral, being so great it at once becomes the duty of every man to have an ADVOCATE in his family, and then use his efforts to put one into his neighbor's family.

Mr. Editor, will it startle you when I tell you that a great many Methodist people receive from one to a dozen secular papers, and not an ADVOCATE to be found among them all. It is a very uncommon thing to enter a house in all this land where will not be seen from one to a half dozen secular papers, and not one CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. We have no objection to a secular or political paper of the right character, but why leave off the best of papers. Frequently the preacher hears it said, "I am not able to subscribe for the ADVOCATE," and he looks around and sees a secular paper about the house. Is not this making religion of secondary importance? No Christian, I suppose, would think of subscribing for any kind of paper before buying a Bible, and no man should think of subscribing for a secular in preference to a church paper. A church paper is very significant. You can very readily measure the piety of any family if you will make it convenient to be present when the weekly mail arries, and a half dozen papers are thrown upon the table.

When men grow in grace and begin to realize the benefits of the church, then they begin to want to know more about the church, what she is doing at home and abroad, and then the church papers become a necessity and a means of grace and cannot be dispensed with.

The great machinery of the church cannot be carried on without an organ. In view of this I trust we, the preachers, will make greater effort to circulate more thoroughly our own worthy organ.

Women Preachers.

MR. EDITOR: Please say to Brother Dowling, that while I entertain only brotherly love toward him, I will have no wrangling with him about "woman preaching." It has been the rule of my life not to go into a controversy with any one, especially a Christian brother. With such I will not bandy words. If it must be done they must do it, not I. I love to have a brother express his opinion freely, if he does so in love and with a manifest desire to do good. I also claim the right to express my settled convictions freely, either verbally or in writing, but I cannot permit any one to draw me into a controversy that promises no good result, as does this opposition to our Christian women doing their part of church work, as clearly set forth in the precepts, promises and numerous examples found in the holy Scriptures. Brother Dowling claims a triumphant victory over us who take the Scriptural side in favor of Christian sisterhood in this matter, but I have not yet seen or heard of any one awarding him this great victory, except himself. With an air of complete triumph he says, "that he yet holds the ground and the guns, too." We award him what he boasts says he still holds, and for reasons very satisfactory to ourselves. We cannot stand on the "ground" he holds, because it does not suit our views of what the Bible says about women praying, prophesying and aiding in the work of the ministry generally. I, for one, stand on "the ground" located and specified by Sister Sadler in the ADVOCATE of January 28th: I do not like Brother Dowling's "ground;" it looks queer and sandy, and I fear if I should step on it the bottom would fall out and let me go under. And, as to his guns, he puts them in the plural. I wonder how many he has got that he watches and keeps with so much pertinacity? I am no longer the least afraid of them. They crackle and make some noise like the Christmas fir-crackers of the boys, but, perhaps, from the sheer want of better ammunition, he only shoots blank cartridges which neither hurt nor even hit anyone within my knowledge. I fear my good brother is wasting time keeping his "ground and guns too," that might be better appropriated. I am astonished at Brother Dowling just in the present crisis to be throwing cold water on the sweet-spirited, deeply pious, highly cultivated and consecrated women of our church, who are almost everywhere—well, I will call it prophesying, if he prefers it—preaching in favor of Missions, Sabbath-schools, temperance, church extension, education, etc., and often, like John the Baptist, "preaching many things in their exhortation" to the churches in their social meetings. So far as I know our godly women who help us so much in our church work are noted for their prudence. I have not yet seen or heard of one interfering with the prerogatives of the men, or trying to usurp authority over them. They are content to labor in their God-assigned sphere, and instead of hindering, we should help them in their holy work. Brother Dowling, in concluding his criticism on me, says the word prophesy, as quoted from Joel by Peter on the day of Pentecost, does not mean preach, but simply to "praise or shout the glory of God—to be happy." It implies that, of course, but that is only a small part of prophesying. Wonder where he got this new idea from?

Notes from North Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: We have had a visit from our college agent, Rev. J. A. Bowen, which was a blessing to us, indeed. He preached a week, and the whole town was more or less affected by his earnest words and living faith. His preaching was with power, and will not soon be forgotten. Amid snow and ice he visited from house to house encouraging our people, by prayer and exhortation, to live for God. No man has done so much good among us in so short a while. He was called away to visit his father, who had been injured by a fall.

If any suppose his appointment, agent of Grenada Collegiate Institute, to be nondual, they are vastly mistaken. He is as enthusiastic over the college, and this opportunity of Methodism, as were you, when you first saw this splendid property. In a very modest and quiet movement, one day while here, he secured five hundred dollars for the college.

We have also had a most charming visitor in the person of Mrs. M. L. Wells, who delighted every one by her gentle manner, and with her earnest and eloquent appeals for right. She organized a W. C. T. U. which we hope will work well. Refreshed by Bros. Lagrone and Bowen, and a well organized W. C. T. U. I think our temperance workers here might take courage and move forward confident of success in the near future. Bro. Bachman is with us, and gives a good report of his work during these rigorous days. He has sold more books to my people to-day than I will sell during the year; but I must remember his work is to supplement mine and not supersede it. We must not relieve the preachers of their duty to sell books. No agency can take its place.

Long rides, through mud and ice, take about all the glory out of the presiding elder's office, so says our good Bro. Tlames. We and the school do well.

Yours,
THOS. A. NEWELL.

Tobacco and Foreign Missions.

MR. EDITOR: We have been reading with considerable interest and anxiety the articles in the St. Louis Advocate, by the scholarly Dr. Rush, on the use of tobacco. They have caused us to ask, can we not, in some way, for one year at least, get the tobacco users to give their tobacco money to the cause of Christ? Think of the just, great, loud call for Missionary money. The actual cost of tobacco to the members of the M. E. Church, South, would send out plenty of Pauls into "Macedonia." There are many of them ready, if the means of support were ample. The North Mississippi Conference has a membership of 32,000. It is safe to say that six thousand of these members use tobacco. They will average, beyond question, ten dollars apiece per annum in buying it. Sixty thousand dollars for self-indulgence! Our Conference raised for Foreign Missions, $50,000—assessed about eight thousand. Sixty thousand dollars paid to the emulating, grand enterprise of Christianity would be far better, it seems to me, than expended for a poor luxury that makes the breath offensive—sickening—injures the lungs, sores the throat, soils shirt fronts, coats lapels, beard, corners of the mouth, parlor and sitting-room, grates and hearth stones and church floors, etc., etc. Men and women might quit the horrible stuff for this year, in the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference, and by it put, without being impoverished, even from a commercial standpoint, a dime, sixty thousand dollars or more into the treasury of the blessed Lord. Now, I do not fix the moral (religious?) status of tobacco using precisely where it was by the sainted Bishop Early and Bro. Shaeffer, and is by the learned Drs. W. M. Rush and S. A. Steel. But, evidently we ought to give as much for Missions as they do (tobacco users) for tobacco. God help us to do our whole duty, timely and cheerfully do our part toward raising, this year, $500,000 for the regions beyond. It is certainly the Spirit of Christ to do it.

Note from Senatobia.

The fifth Sunday in January was a good day for Senatobia Station, good in that it was the prettiest sunshine day we have had this year. And, then, in addition to all this, we had with us two of our old pastors, whom the church here delights to love and honor. Rev. A. P. Sage preached a good sermon at 11 o'clock, on resisting the "Wiles of the Devil," which was quite in time, as so many have recently taken upon them the badge of a Christian. He presented, forcibly, many of the temptations to which the young Christian would be exposed, and urged upon them the necessity of putting on the whole "armor of God," that they might be able to stand. Bro. Sage has a warm place in the hearts of the Senatobia church. He is now very much embarrassed in his ministerial work by the affliction of his good and devoted wife, who was some months ago paralyzed, and from which recovery is slow. She is now kindly cared for in the home of brother and sister Featherstone. Hopes are entertained of her permanent recovery, but it will be some months yet. In the meantime Bro. Sage is bound to her bedside, as a good and true husband ought to be to a good and true wife. Bro. Sage greatly laments his inability to do the work the bishop has assigned him to do, as has been his custom in former years. May our Heavenly Father smile on our afflicted sister and restore her to health, that her faithful husband may soon be turned loose to do battle for his cause as in other years.

Bro. T. B. Malone was also with us, and talked well to the Sunday-school, at 3 o'clock, upon the "Bad Tongue" as hard to tame. The children all love Bro. Malone, and as for that matter, the old people, too. He also preached us a good sermon at night, to a large congregation. So you see, Mr. Editor, that preachers who have heretofore served Senatobia church, like to come back and see these good people, and the people like to have them come. So, once again, brethren.

Our foreign Missionary assessment for this year is $110. I have sent on to Dr. Kelly $85 of that amount, and expect to send on the balance soon. We are in the midst of ice and cold, down to zero, looking for the sunshine after awhile, "for we walk by faith, not by sight."

Yours,
K. A. JONES.

SENATOBIA, Mississippi.

Atonement—Bro. Harrison.

In reply to Bro. Harrison, because his way in putting the case of a sinner's pardon, might lead into the idea of "imputed righteousness."

He desires to know how faith secures pardon, and illustrates with a case in court appealed to a higher tribunal.

To this conclusion he seems driven by such texts as "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," etc.

Now, let's get the Bible. Here is Ezekiel, chap. viii, vs. 19-21. Read.

Now, turn to Ephesians, iv. 22-27.

Here, you see, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," is not absolute, but conditional; the conditions being the putting "off of the old man with all his deeds," and the "putting on of the new man;" Christ Jesus, which is, in some way, the result of faith.

From actual transgression, "we are justified by faith only."

Outlines of Psychology, by Hermann Lotze: Ginn & Co., Boston, Mass.

Lotze is a conspicuous figure in German philosophy. It may be remembered that he teaches that the body is so organized as to indicate the necessity of a distinct soul as its complement. Organic mechanism and spiritual activities are widely different, though they are found in natural and reciprocal relations. The soul, he teaches, is begotten of God at the instant of physical organization, so that it begins in the body and with it, but is not of it and through it. There are, perhaps, but few men better prepared than Lotze, by careful and accurate learning in all the physical elements and conditions out of which soul phenomena originate, to construct an intelligent psychology. A soul is manifested only under organic conditions. He has wisely mastered the necessities of those conditions and makes exemplary use of his knowledge in the construction of the psychology.

One cannot read this little book without feeling himself brought in contact, not only with masterful mind, but with an extraordinary scope of scientific and philosophical learning.

He comes squarely up to the issues of his position, and candidly confesses the indiscoverable elements in psychology, just how the soul and the body are united in complimentary and reciprocal relations, is beyond discovery, and he frankly says so, but at the same time insists that the nature of the phenomena of the soul and body compel the recognition of the distinctness and separateness of the two.

We can understand that a stimulus may originate motion in the terminal nerve particles and be communicated from particle to particle successively until it reaches the other extremities of the nerve system; but how such motion, on reaching this extremity, can be transformed into consciousness and how the unity of consciousness can be inferred or constructed by such transformations is more incredible than the acknowledged mystery that lies between the distinct compliments of human existence.

This little book is a valuable contribution to our higher scientific psychological literature. We sincerely trust that it will awaken a vital interest in this eminent philosopher's greater works.

The translation is good, but the translator has failed to give it the agreeable and flexible qualities of our scientific English. It appears a little careless to speak of "nerve atoms," and "corporeal atoms." We are rather grateful to those scholars who give us faithful translations of such works. Beginning in this way, the philosophic thought of the English speaking world in contact with the German, will be productive of good.

—Yes, thank God! there is rest—many an interval of sweetest rest—even here, when it seems as if evening breezes from that other land, laden with fragrance, played upon the cheeks and lulled the heart. There are times, even on the stormy sea, when a gentle whisper breathes softly as of heaven, and sends into the soul a dream of ecstasy which can never again wholly die, even against the jar and whirl of waking life. How such whispers make the blood stop and the very flesh creep with a sense of mysterious communion! I know a place of rest and calm,
A place where the weary soul
Can find repose and find a home,
In the arms of the Father's love.

No matter how the world may swirl,
No matter how the winds may blow,
No matter how the waves may roar,
No matter how the storms may blow,

The heart of the Father is ever true,
And all the Father's love is true,
And all the Father's love is true,
And all the Father's love is true.

When children's hearts are hard to lead,
When children's hearts are hard to lead,
When children's hearts are hard to lead,
When children's hearts are hard to lead,

Let the Father's love be ever true,
Let the Father's love be ever true,
Let the Father's love be ever true,
Let the Father's love be ever true.

O Father, when our hearts are true,
O Father, when our hearts are true,
O Father, when our hearts are true,
O Father, when our hearts are true.

Look down on us, O Father true,
Look down on us, O Father true,
Look down on us, O Father true,
Look down on us, O Father true.

The Father's love is ever true,
The Father's love is ever true,
The Father's love is ever true,
The Father's love is ever true.

"Then Shall Not Kill."

BY REV. J. B. WALKER, D. D.

Our text is an unusual one as the basis of a sermon. In a somewhat extended experience in sermon hearing I have not changed to hear a sermon on the nature and prohibition and punishment of murder. It may be asked, "Why discuss it now?" For several reasons: 1. It is a most important portion of revealed truth whose bearings and aspects ought to be discussed; 2. Because the pulpit ought to contribute its proportion toward the education of the young and the inculcation of sound sentiments upon this as upon all other moral questions; 3. And because in one way or another there are many murders in the land and human life is too cheap and too weakly and insecurely guarded and recklessly destroyed. These reasons, in our apprehension, fully vindicate the propriety of the pulpit's ventilating and discussing murder and its divinely enacted penalty.

Human life is the gift of God, and, therefore, every man has a right to live as long as God to his providence may permit, or until he forfeits the right by the violation of the natural and moral laws on the observance of which God has made human life to depend. It has been regarded by some as a singular omission that there is no express prohibition of suicide. We may remark that it is no more singular than that there is no express law against self-hatred. It was to be presumed that the natural endowment of self-love would be sufficient to prevent self-hatred, so likewise it was to be presumed that the divinely implanted instinct of self-preservation would be sufficient to prevent self-murder. Some men sometimes commit suicide gradually, unconsciously, recklessly and are responsible for the act as a crime. We take it that the general prohibition—"Thou shalt not kill"—prohibits suicide as well. But we must think that men who suddenly lay violent and fatal hands on themselves are just then monomaniacs. We think so because self-preservation is the first great law of our nature, and this first great law must at the moment of suicide be overturned and the individual unmanned on the subject of self-preservation or he would not destroy his own life. We do not think the suicide is ever sane at the fatal moment or accountable for the fatal act, though he may be, and, perhaps, often is, for the cause or causes that have led him to the fatal deed.

The prohibition against murder is against all that tends to the unnatural and unnecessary destruction of human life. But all taking of life or "killing" is not murder. For example, accidental killing, not the result of intention or avoidable carelessness. The Jews, by Divine command, established at convenient localities six cities of refuge to which the accidental or justifiable manslayer might fly for protection from the avenger until his innocence could be established. It was not regarded a murder by the Jewish law or the laws of Greece and Rome to kill a robber breaking into your house at night, but it was forbidden to kill him by day, because he could be identified and held to legal accountability. It is not murder to kill another in strict self-defense to save your own life. To let the assassin kill you would be to prefer him to yourself, to love him more than yourself. In such a case we must defend ourselves, because the law can do it for us; just as we eat and breathe for ourselves, because it can not be done for us. To kill another in actual self-defense is only to anticipate the law, for if faithfully executed, it would take away the willful murderer's life.

Sir Edward Coke, one of England's most erudite lawyers and profound jurist, has thus defined murder: "When a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace with malice aforethought, either expressed or implied." This essential thing in murder is that it must be done maliciously and deliberately. To take away the murderer's life after a legal trial by legal execution is no violation of the divine law against killing. We are well aware that much has been said and written in this century against "capital punishment." This is but one of the reactions and revolts of the human mind against a cruel extreme. The sanguinary code of a century or two ago, transcending the divine illustration, being men for petty larceny and smuggling and like offences. It seems to be an element of weakness in the human mind to swing from one extreme to another; but truth, justice and duty generally lie between extremes, the Divine law is life for life, and for no less offense. There are some so over-sensitiveness that they are not willing to act as jurors in murder cases or to bring in verdicts of "guilty" that invoke the death sentence. They seem to feel that they are taking or helping to take the criminal's life. We must feel that this is an over-sensitiveness, a mistaken view of the case. The juror does not take away the criminal's life. He has forfeited his life by a willful violation of the law, the penalty of which he knew was death. The law of the State, which is but a copy of the law of God, says the murderer "shall surely be put to death." The jury, the judge and sheriff are but the ministers of the law to ascertain guilt, to pronounce the law's sentence and to execute the penalty. We know it has been said, with an attempt to be witty, where we must think wit has been sadly misplaced, that "the worst use you can put a man to is to hang him." We think it is a most valuable use to put an outlaw to, to make him "a terror to evil-doers," and as such a safeguard to human life. But the fact is, the willful murderer has ceased to be a man in the civil sense, he has become a moral monster and has nullified himself for civil and social life, he must be eliminated like a ferocious beast, like a poisonous serpent, for the common protection of human life. But, happily, upon a subject so important we are not left to speculation and expediency, the "law of the Lord, holy, just and good," settles the question in the plainest terms as well as by the highest authority. Let us hear what God says, Exodus xxi: "He that smiteth a man so that he die, shall surely be put to death." No matter if he dies to the city of refuge if it be proved. "A man come presumptuously upon his neighbor to slay him with guile; thou shalt surely take him from mine altar, that he may die." Leviticus xxiv, 17: "And he that killeth any man shall surely be put to death." Numbers xxxiv, 30, 31: "Whoso killeth any person, the murderer shall be put to death by the mouth of witnesses; but one shall not testify against any person to cause him to die. Moreover, ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of the murderer, who is guilty of death; but he shall be surely put to death."

Speaking of the cities of refuge, to which murderers fled who were deserving death, the law says, Deuteronomy xix, 11-13: "If any man hate his neighbor, and lie in wait for him, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally that he die, and flee to one of these cities; then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die. Thine eye shall not pity him, but thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Israel: that it may go well with thee." All this makes it plain that murder, when proved, was punishable with death. But some one will say that all these reasonings and quotations only prove that capital punishment for murder was the rule and the law under the Mosaic system and during the ante-Christian age. The merciful, forgiving and benevolent spirit of the gospel, it is assumed by objectors to capital punishment, abrogates this feature of the penal law and abolishes capital punishment. That this conclusion is hasty and gratuitous it is only necessary to turn to Christ's own words and to the inspired words of his most eminent servants, the Apostles Peter and Paul. Matthew v, 17, 18: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily, I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Luke xvi, 17: "And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail." Romans xiii, 3, 4: "For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same. For he is a minister to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, he shall be a minister to thee for evil; for he beareth not the sword in vain; for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." 1 Peter ii, 13, 14: "Submit yourself to every ordinance of men for the Lord's sake; whether it be to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well." It has been proposed to substitute capital punishment with imprisonment for life. But unless the power to relieve can be restricted to narrower limits murder will have need to it no adequate penalty. It is notorious that criminals committed to penitentiaries for life, terms are much more likely to be relieved than those for short terms. There is little danger that the power to punish with death will be abused. The law gives the accused the benefit of any doubt of his guilt. The examples are rare of accused parties suffering unjustly the extreme penalty of the law. This sentimentality that shrinks from the execution of the law of God is weak if not wicked, for it renders life cheap and insecure where it prevails. We are sorry that men will do wrong and pluck down on themselves the natural and moral penalties due to their crimes. We are sorry that it is necessary for the protection of life, for the security of society to take human life; but it is the lawless murderer that makes it necessary. Says some sentimentalists, "Let us in this enlightened age abolish taking human life as a penalty for murder." We are heartily agreed to this provided the men tempted to be murderers set the example by refraining from taking life. So soon as this is the case we shall vote for the abolition of the death penalty, but never before. It is our most deliberate opinion that the immutable law of God in relation to murder is too lightly regarded and that too few capital offenders are executed. Nearly all the sentimentalism of society is expended on the red-handed, ferocious murderer, "the poor unfortunate," as he is softly called, while the broken-hearted mothers, the weeping wives and helpless orphans of the murdered victim elicit little sympathy or are forgotten altogether. Such perverted expressions of sympathy appear to us most unwarranted and unjust. The well-being of society, the security of human life, let us be assured depends upon the faithful and inflexible execution of the law which says, "The murderer shall surely die."

Let us now proceed to consider some of the many ways by which the law against murder is violated. This prohibition is violated by all unjust wars, wars of covetousness, of ambition and needless invasion. An injured, an oppressed, an invaded people may be justified in an appeal to arms when there is no other way to maintain their rights or to defend their homes and altars. There are, however, few wars which do not involve murder on one side or the other. All wars of mere territorial aggrandizement and military glory are simply scenes of wholesale murder. Alexander and the so-called heroes who have marched their armies into the midst of unoffending populations to spoil, destroy and enslave, have been moral monsters and wholesale murderers who deserved to be capitally executed for their stupendous crimes. When Christian civilization shall have achieved more of its predicted triumphs in humanizing mankind these great and laurel-crowned butchers will be stigmatized and executed as they deserve to be by the universal voice of outraged humanity.

Duelling, whatever the world self-conned "code of honor" may call it, is murder; for if it is anything more than a ridiculous farce, it is deliberate murder, it is taking deliberate and fatal aim at another's life. Duelling is not only a crime, but for the most part a folly and an absurdity. It can not be accepted as a reasonable and intelligent adjustment of the questions and misunderstandings out of which most duels arise. A large proportion of duels arise out of some alleged violation of veracity, honesty or the rules of conventional politeness. In the duel there is no appeal to law or reason to prove or to redress the wrong, but an entirely new issue is made, altogether foreign to the matter of the quarrel, to wit, "Are you willing to shoot or be shot at?" Honestly, veracity, politeness have nothing to do with the controversy; they are set aside and physical courage is made the issue between the parties. Suppose a challenge is sent, accepted, they shoot, and hit or miss, what has this brute courage or the good or bad shots to do with the original question between the parties? Nothing; absolutely nothing. The original question remains where it was, neither proved nor disproved. The bloody or bloodless contest changes no man's opinion as to the morals or manners of the belligerents. The duellist refuses to recognize the power and province of the law to right his wrongs. His course is revolutionary and subversive of civil and social order and needs but to be universal to introduce to inaugurate universal anarchy. "But," says the duellist, "shall a man bear the mortification of insult and wrong and wait for the tardy processes of the law?" We answer this question with another, Shall a man submit to the humiliation and mortification of a destitution of money and wait for the tardy processes of legitimate business to supply his needs? Shall he not set aside the limitations of the law and supply himself in some more expeditious way? If such a course of procedure is not allowable, how can duelling be allowable, legally or conventionally? The duellist arrogantly assumes the prerogative of God the right to dispose of his own life or another's. He takes, or proposes to take, what ought to be a valuable life from society or from a family. He cuts short the day of probation, terminates the hopes and possibilities of salvation and hurries himself or another unbidden into the solemn presence of the tremendous Judge of the living and the dead. The duellist is a double violator of the immutable law, which says, "Thou shalt not kill."

All men who undertake the healing art, unprepared for the responsibility they assume, are either guilty of violating this prohibition or take the risk of doing so. Men who assume the duties and responsibilities of the healing art should understand the anatomy and physiology of man, the symptoms and nature of disease and the chemical properties and effects of the remedies they administer, or else many must fall victims to their ignorant temerity. The moral difference can be but little between the assassin who kills for gain and the ignorant pretender who for gain recklessly dabbles with poisons and ignorantly meddles with human life.

This whole class of adulterators of food, drink and medicines, who for gain render them unhealthy and poisonous, are violators of this prohibition, and are guilty of the blood of their fellowmen, especially those poisoning the syrups and food of children, are rivaling Herod in the merciless and covetous "slaughter of the innocents." It is a most sad and alarming fact that there is scarcely an article of food, drink or medicine that is not adulterated with chemicals injurious to health and in the end fatal to life. Such men morally are as much murderers as the desperadoes who shoot, rob and strip their midship victims in the lonely paths of travel under the cover of darkness. The wide prevalence of this alarming evil demands the most prompt and stringent and severe legislation.

All owners and masters of ships, steamers and conductors of railway trains, who, either by the imperfection of their means of transportation or ignorance of their duties or reckless carelessness, endanger the lives of those they transport are guilty of violating this prohibitory command. Our country has become famous or infamous from the imperfect structure or reckless management of our means of travel. Life is held too cheap, and is often criminally destroyed. Public sentiment and public morals sadly need to be keyed up in this direction. No ignorant, incompetent nor dissipated men should ever be entrusted with human life as public carriers. All such examples should be visited with appropriate penalties. Only thus can public safety be secured.

Every man whose covetousness or whose ambition causes him to overtax his body or his brain, and who is thus hurrying himself to a premature grave, is accessory to his own death, and is a suicide as much as he who does the solemn business with a fatal drug or blood mangling ball, only with this difference, that in one case it is done through a sudden aberration of mind that overthrows the great law of self-preservation, and in the other through a thoughtless recklessness of the laws of health and life. Every man whose sensual indulgences are wearing down his health and strength, every glutton who is making a god of his appetite, who is diseasing his stomach and liver, and every man whose use of alcoholic stimulants is destroying his life is guilty of violating the command which says, "Thou shalt not kill." Every man who for gain tempts diseased appetites and weak men to the use of poisonous brain-destroying stimulants is a party to the crime of destroying a human life, and eternal justice will not hold him guiltless.

Murder, whether of ourselves or of others, is a crime whose turpitude it is difficult to overstate. In this life it does vast social and domestic evil, blighting hopes, breaking hearts and desolating homes. But, most appalling of all, it cuts down men in the midst of gospel hope and opportunity and puts them beyond the possibilities of salvation forever. It sends the soul, unbidden and unprepared, into the presence of its great and final Judge. No wonder from the days of the fratriciding Cain murder haunts the red-handed criminal with soul-harrowing remorse.

If any, through our precepts or example, live in sin and die impenitent and die forevermore, are we not guilty concerning our brother? Have we not been guilty in the most appalling sense of being an accessory to the death of a soul, its everlasting banishment from blessedness and from God? Let us see to it that our skirts are not "reddened and stained with the blood of souls. If any of us who enjoy all the facilities and hopes of salvation are appealed to by all the great motives that ought to prompt us to immediate repentance and we resist all end neglect all and die in despair, are we not self-destroyers? And must not the memory of this stupendous self-wrong haunt us forever "in that lone land of deep despair" and cast upon the endless night a deeper and darker shade of gloom? Dead, because we would not live; lost, because we would not be saved; in hell, because we would not prepare to meet God and live in heaven. Listen to the voice Divine, "Turn, sinner, turn and live; for, why wilt ye die?"

General Conference 1886.

Mn. Editor: As this all important Conference of our church is soon to assemble for the purpose of making and devising laws and plans by which the church shall be governed at least for the next four years, I desire to call the attention of this body to a few items in our book of discipline. Not for the purpose of changing or making new laws, but to better perfect those we have. In the first place, I call attention to what seems to me to be a misprint. On trial of a traveling preacher, page 143, § 109, after "Provided," The so-called is allowed to challenge live out of a committee of nine, etc.—that is, a majority of the committee. Then page 151, § 120, on the trial of a private member, the accused is only "allowed" to challenge two out of five—that is, a minority of the committee. Is this not a mistake in regard to the challenge of a traveling preacher, that he should be allowed to challenge a majority of the committee, or why this difference? May not a trial be defeated altogether, as a minority of the committee could not proceed with the trial. As it takes a majority to find guilty, or should this difference be made in the trial of these parties?

We next respectfully suggest that some flexibility should be allowed in the law granting a supernumerary furlough to a preacher. As the law now stands, none can obtain this relation, unless he is disabled in his own person. This seems to me to work a hardship, at times, on some of our most faithful preachers. For instance, the brother's wife is afflicted so that it is impossible for him to leave her for a day. He can not do justice to a work because he is confined by the bed of his devoted itinerant wife, who with him has borne the burden of 25 or 30 years of itinerancy. Now in her helplessness she is deprived of the company and aid of her husband, unless he locates for the time, a thing he dislikes to do. Is she not due some consideration from the Conference? And if she is afflicted is she not to be made as to give the committee on Conference relations some latitude on all cases of this kind. It seems to me would be much better than to force a preacher to locate in order to care for his companion in the work of the ministry for it may be, a short time. A supernumerary draws no pay from the Conference fund. Bishop Paine permitted me to ask this relation for a brother on account of the affliction of his wife. While he said it was not law, it was just.

"Once more and I am done." Why should a supernumerary preacher be responsible to the Conference in whose bonds he may live? Might not this create great confusion in the passage of a brother's character. Let us see, a brother belongs to the North Mississippi Conference and lives in the bounds of the Memphis Conference. The North Mississippi Conference, upon whose roll his name appears, and from whose Conference he receives his "pro rata," annually passes his character, to which Conference he is certainly amenable. Now can the Memphis Conference, in whose bounds he lives consider his case and refuse to pass his character. It seems to me they have that right, and therefore the brother is amenable to two Conferences. Would it not be less complicated to have him wholly responsible to the Conference to which he properly belongs. If he is amenable to both, let him draw on both funds for his allowance.

Now you see I am not opposed to our laws, but desire to more thoroughly perfect them. I am a Methodist by birth, education, and most of all by inclination, and will endeavor not to mend but keep the law as it may be, for conscience's sake. Let us examine these little defects (as I think) in our law and apply the remedy.

K. A. JONES.

A Pastor at Work.

Mn. Editor: While the itinerancy is a grand and an efficient means of carrying the gospel to "every creature," yet it is sometimes very inconvenient and expensive. While this does not happen to all, it does to many very worthy brethren.

On the sixteen of last month I took passage on the steamer Texas, whose sign was a circular saw with the No. 10 cut in it, and suspended between the chimneys. We were cooling at Baton Rouge, Sunday evening at 7 o'clock, I heard the Methodist bell calling the people to the sanctuary for the worship of the living God, but when I remembered how I suffered at Conference with cold, I had no desire to attend. Though the Conference passed Bro. Manley's resolution concerning traveling in public conveyance to our appointments on the Sabbath day, yet, immediately after our adjournment, from necessity and from the fact that the boat on which I was traveling would lead me on my circuit, I was found violating it. I was on the Lord's business, and therefore felt no compunction of conscience. Extremes of legislation, sooner or later, prove the impracticability of the measures.

On Monday we passed through a region of country I traversed years ago. On the west bank of Black River, at a certain point, stands a gin-house where I once held a protracted meeting. Trilby, which derives its name from the junction of Texas Bayou, the Ouachita and Little rivers, was passed in sight. At this point I preached for a year. Texas chapel looked as if it had recently been painted. The people there care for their church, if the external appearance is any evidence of it. This is more than can be said of many others.

The effects of the war and overflows 1882-83-84 are visible to a casual observer. Decay is written on the houses, gins and fences. The continued disasters have discouraged the people so that they do not have the energy they once had. Their struggle with the overflows have been unavailing. Destroyed houses, fields, whose fences have been drawn in, or thrown out altogether and are now grown up with sedge grass or briars or both, and in which the people have been invited. Can we say that the people, even when the overflows have troubled them, are as energetic as they should be? We fear not. Could the water be kept in proper bounds, in ten years the whole country would be in a prosperous condition. No people, however, can succeed in agriculture while the must look to the commission in relation to advances, at the enormous rates of interest they are compelled to pay. Their most homes and crops ought to be on their places instead of in New Orleans, and until this is done they must expect to sacrifice their places, sooner or later. After having been near railroads and in a few years past, the country seems to be exceedingly quiet and under its influence would like to hear the locomotive whistle again.

About 2 o'clock on the morning of the twentieth, I was found delirious at Ward's Landing on Bayou Macon. The bank was high and muddy, the current was difficult. I met a friend, the person of the warehouse keeper. He took me to his home, gave me most excellent bed to occupy. My stomach was stiff and unsatisfactory. I dreamed that my host introduced me to his wife as a member of the Episcopal Church, but I found her a Methodist, and a member of my charge. It is a good idea to interpret dreams in contraries. In the afternoon I met a six mule wagon for Winnboro, six miles away. There was mud "enough and to spare." The jolting kept my mind and blood from stagnating. Variety is said to be the spice of life that trip was both in the saddle measure. A life thus tested, as I am not to stand it, is worth having. My colored fellow travelers were polite, thoughtful and happy. You also accepted the situations with cheerfulness, and without any apprehension of lowering my calling or dignity. One of my stewards, Bro. A. O. Moore, received me kindly, and gave me comfortable quarters.

I have preached twice in the town of Winnboro, and once in the country. Cold weather, had roads and uncomfortable churches, always make a "deed impression" upon church members, and upon the community at large. In these instances, the country appointment was not generally known. Having no horse I borrowed a mule, one of goodly parts, and easy walking. He seemed to be conscious of his mission was a more excited man than pulling a wagon. Why should not the mule bear the gospel message on his mission as well as horses and cars? His patience is significant of his docility and consideration, though when imposed on he grows stubborn, when coaxing and coercion are both ineffectual in enforcing obedience. My first introduction to him was pleasant and profitable, and I have not doubted upon a more intimate acquaintance, I shall like him better. They afforded me ample opportunity of meditation upon Baalam and his conversation with the donkey he rode, and upon our Lord's triumphant entry into Jerusalem. I can quote: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ."

The footprints of other preachers are soon here in church buildings, and organized societies. These are evidences of monuments which are to give tone to private and public sentiment, as well as to the morals and religion of the communities, where they are found. These churches are to be occupied, and these communities are to be preached to by your correspondent. The need of the houses, is plain, and that of societies more religion; if the latter is attained the former will be attended to in due time. One brother says, "The church here reminds him of an old field grown up with briars, with here and there a old rail rotting in its midst." An outpouring of the Spirit will remove the evil complained of. We trust to see revivals all over the circuit and before the year closes.

Mn. Editor: By the grace of God we are here and are comfortable quartered in the town parsonage. There being no circuit preachers the stewards kindly secured this for us. We hope to have direct parsonage before the next Conference. Thus far we have done most nothing. The weather has been fearful. Thought we were doing well part of the time to keep warm. Bro. Bowen came down and spent ten days with us preaching prayer and visiting and won the love and sympathy of all good people, as he always does. He held service twice a day and thought it was almost impossible to do better. It will be good to be here if their promises are kept. Several were added to the church and $500 raised for the college. He is the right man in the right place. Our Conference did wisely when it recommended the appointment of an agent for the "Grenada Collegiate Institute." The time has come when our zeal for the cause of Christian education should show itself in something permanent. Also we will get a rebuke from which we will not soon, if ever, recover. We can secure this property that is worth $10,000 by raising $1,000, we will have one of the best pieces of school

Of Mr. Gladstone's beautiful Christian character and earnest religious sympathy and simplicity, Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler spoke as follows in a recent address to the students of Yale College. Such a man is worthy of being a Pastor:

"With my own eyes I have seen Mr. Gladstone kneel by the side of a common street-sweeper and pray for the salvation of his soul. I know of no grander sight than the Premier of England and the leading statesman of the world kneeling by the side of a common street-sweeper and pouring forth his eloquent appeal to God in behalf of his humble brother."

Dr. Prottman, president of the Board of Missions of the Southwest Missouri Conference, publishes a list of missionary anniversaries to be held at the District Conferences. It would be well if such meetings for the dissemination of missionary intelligence were held in all our Annual Conferences. The eleventh article in the Constitution of the Board of Missions authorizing them, reads as follows:

"The Conference Board shall arrange for holding anniversary meetings within the several presiding elders' districts of the Conference in the interest of foreign missions, and by such other means as it may choose, shall disseminate missionary intelligence among the people."

There has been a wonderful revival in Belfast, Ireland, conducted by the Rev. Thomas Wagh. He has a good Methodist name, and is worthy of a distinguished ancestry. The meetings continued seventeen days and resulted in over a thousand conversions. The Irish Christian Advocate says of the "mission":

"Never before has Belfast Methodism been so stirred, never before has she attempted so much for the seething masses around her, and never before has she received and transmitted so great a blessing. Day by day, at afternoon as well as evening services, thronging crowds filled the house of prayer, often to discomfort, and sometimes hundreds were unable to gain admission. A quiet power rested on the people, so much so that some have said it was almost impossible to attend the meetings without deciding for Christ."

The well-known Blair Educational Bill is again under discussion in the United States Senate and will doubtless become a law. This is an important measure and is fraught with great interest to the South. The bill proposes an appropriation of $77,000,000, to be divided among the different States and Territories for educational purposes within the next eight years. The division is to be made according to the population and the degree of illiteracy as shown by the census of 1880. That pro rata apportionment will give the several Southern States named the following amounts: Alabama, $3,370,348 45; Arkansas, $2,503,170 97; Florida, $993,548 70; Louisiana, $3,945,051 48; Mississippi, $1,644,339 33; Texas, $3,920,913 78. These are the aggregate amounts to each State to be paid within eight years. We very much desire the passage of this great measure. If wisely administered it will prove a rich blessing to this section.

The Western Christian Advocate has given very full reports of Rev. Sam Jones' work in Cincinnati, and in the last issue makes cordial editorial mention of the great evangelist. Dr. Bayless says:

"We believe that no such crowds have ever attended the ministry of any other man in Cincinnati for the same length of time, and the remembrance of the time when the preacher has uttered have produced a profound impression upon the city. There are some persons who have been familiar with Cincinnati for many years, who say that nothing like the religious interest which now prevails has ever been witnessed here. The number of conversions reported is quite large up to this time, while the general impression made is very profound, and it is expected that fruit will appear, and in abundance, in the not distant future. We printed a most cordial welcome to Mr. Jones before he came, we have filled from two to three columns each week with reports of his meetings, and hope and pray that Cincinnati may be a better city, and the churches be more consecrated and influential because of the faithful labors of Mr. Jones and Mr. Small."

Our Foreign Missions Again.

The article of Dr. Garland on the administration of our foreign missions is commanding general and serious consideration. In that we rejoice. The success of our work in the foreign parts and its wise superintendence should concern every true church member, whether pastor or layman. In a recent editorial we gave quite fully our objections to the Doctor's plan for remedying existing "troubles." After more mature reflections and additional investigation we find no reason to revise any position assumed. It will be remembered that we doubted, first, its constitutionality and, secondly, its expediency or necessity. Some further thoughts on the general subject we wish to submit.

In advance let it be borne in mind that Dr. Garland's paper, though signed as "President of the Board of Missions," was not an official document. He expressed his own convictions as an earnest, active student of the great question, and not the concurrent opinion of the Board. Instead, it is quite probable that a large majority of that body dissents from his views.

An analysis of his article, which will be found on the third page of this issue, may be stated as follows:

1. There is trouble in our foreign missions.

2. These troubles are "inherent" in the very organization of the missions.

3. To remedy them there must be a "recast of the whole system," which is "anti-Methodistic"—not "according to the norm of Methodism."

4. This "recast" must provide for a resident Bishop as a substitute for the "local superintendent."

Now, on these several points we shall have a few words to say.

1. The "troubles," so-called, are not alarming. Indeed, we think they are too strongly stated. Difficulties should not be underestimated or ignored, nor should they be magnified. Both must be avoided. There is so much in the success of our missions to thrill the faith and hope of the church that the "troubles" are of small account. What wondrous things have been wrought on the Mexican Border and in the Central Mexican Mission! In China the increased force of evangelistic workers is reaching vast multitudes, the hospital at Soochow has more than paid its running expenses while bringing large numbers under the influence of the gospel, and the great educational movement is commanding the attention of all classes. We have much to encourage us in the cheering reports from Brazil. Our brethren there are unremitting in toil and are speedily building up self-supporting congregations. From a somewhat intimate acquaintance with our foreign mission work for the past eight years, we regard them as an inspiration to the church at home, and worthy of all confidence. What missionaries have been more self-denying or more zealous? And what missions can show greater or equal success?

2. We join issue with the Doctor that the "troubles," so-called, are "inherent in the organization of our foreign missions." What are the "troubles?" He answers: "Want of harmony among the missionaries themselves." But just what "inherent" feature of our system that causes the friction does not appear. Indeed, quoting the Doctor's own words in another place, we must conclude that the difficulties are incidental to the system. He says, in speaking of the missionaries themselves: "They are Christians—true Christians; but they are men, not angels." If so, we may expect personal differences until angels are substituted for men. Variance of opinion on matters of detail in administration among earnest workers is "common to man." It was not lacking in the apostolic age, and will hardly cease until the church is triumphant. Paul and Barnabas had a dispute about so small a matter as whether John Mark should accompany them on a missionary journey, "and the contention" was so sharp between them that they departed asunder one from the other." Surely this was not chargeable to the apostolic system of missionary administration. There may be radical defects in our methods and plans of work; but occasional personal differences of opinion do not reveal them. They are possible and probable under any system.

3. Upon the proposed "recast of the whole system" we have already spoken at sufficient length. We understand these words in their ordinary acceptance. They are strong words, and not of doubtful interpretation. As the Doctor says our present organization is "anti-Methodistic"—not "according to the norm of Methodism"—he must advocate a very radical change in our present plans. If our existing constitution admits of personal episcopal superintendence of the several missions by annual, biennial or quadrennial visits, why the need of recasting our whole system? We have only to use the power we already possess to remedy present or prospective evils arising from lack of episcopal oversight. That point our friend, Dr. Potter, of the Wesleyan, makes sufficiently clear.

4. A resident Bishop as a substitute for the local superintendent we insist is a dangerous, doubtful remedy. There are constitutional objections to it. If not in plain violation of the Third Restrictive Rule, it is a manifest evasion of it. And for evasive legislation we have no sympathy, but well-grounded fear. Nothing so readily destroys the integrity of a government. If the proposed measure is the only or best remedy, let the constitution of the church be changed in the prescribed way. The election of a Bishop for a foreign mission and to reside therein, is beyond question an evasion, if not violation, of the law that defines our "itinerant general superintendency." But, it may be said, that was not the Doctor's view. Well, so his language reads. He says: "The Bishop elected to preside over a foreign mission would be elected and ordained in the same manner, and clothed with the same authority, as any other Bishop." Nothing could be more explicit. A Bishop is to be elected for a special work, and with the distinct understanding that he is to reside in the foreign field. Shades of William McKendree and Joshua Slocum! Such a doctrine ought to disturb the precious dust of those constitutional fathers on the Vanderbilt campus.

But if the election of a Bishop for a foreign mission is in violation of the Third Restrictive Rule, a resident episcopacy is an evasion of it. It necessarily restricts the field of the Bishop, and so far forth contravenes the spirit of the constitution. And if this precedent is once allowed, who can tell whereunto it will lead? If a Bishop be elected for China or assigned to residence there, why not one for Mexico, another for California, another for Texas, etc.? And then what becomes of our "itinerant general superintendency"? We do not claim or affect profound judicial discernment, but there is too much in this question to be waved aside as sentimental or hypercritical.

But if in accord with the constitution we think there is a more excellent way. A resident Bishop would not strengthen the bond of sympathy between the home and foreign fields. And yet that is the one thing needed, and the one announced purpose of this "recast." Annual or biennial visits of our Bishops to the different missions would absolutely assure this result. The history of the great and growing missionary operations of the Methodist Episcopal Church proves its wisdom. They have much larger missions than our church, and have administered them on this Methodist plan. With all deference to the able men who may advocate a resident episcopacy, we submit that it is an innovation upon Methodist usage, an anomaly in our history as a church, and assails the grand theory of the bishopric which made necessary the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Crime as the Patron of Charity.

Our neighbor, the Times-Democrat, in its issue of the twelfth instant, has something to say of the notorious "gamblers fund" of this city. It seems that the existence of such a fund has occasioned no little adverse comment upon New Orleans morality. Our confere admits the justness of the criticisms and advocates reform, but in a very singular way. There is no complaint against the fund itself, but the manner in which it "has been administered and expended." If expended for charity it can be tolerated without moral offense, but if used for municipal purposes it is a gross outrage against public decency. By what sort of casuistry our neighbor sustains that proposition is beyond our ken. The doctrine advocated is essentially at variance with every known law of good morals and is necessarily destructive of public virtue. In its last analysis it is the very principle that has kindled the fires of fanaticism and superstition. If it be true that the end justifies the means—that immorality is to be condoned and sustained if made to serve a temporary charitable purpose—then alas! for all manly honor or the imperatives of conscience. In the name of public morals and a true patriotism, we protest against such teaching. Whether the "fund" be expended in municipal administration or to support the aged and indigent of the Shakespeare House, it is alike morally wrong and a blot upon the fair escutcheon of New Orleans. Possible philanthropy is no palliation for crime against the law of the land and sin against the law of God. The whole thing is a disgrace, and the condonement, not to say administration of the fund, is an impeachment of official integrity. The collection of a tax from gamblers is without warrant of law. And the existence of gambling dens is in face of public decency. Yet they are allowed to ply their wicked business, policemen are said to be stationed near for their protection, in consideration of a certain tax that has no authority in law. Just how public officers can reconcile that thing to their consciences we confess our inability to explain.

But that no injustice be done our confere we quote his own words:

Money, so derived, should not and legally can not go toward the support of our municipal government; it is only when it is expended in charity that its source can be overlooked and the fund tolerated. Such, we feel sure, is the public sentiment of New Orleans on this question, in opposition to the habit that has insensibly grown up and been practiced, not by one, but by every mayor who has had this fund in his possession, of using it for other purposes than it was intended, for other expenses than the people will sanction.

And this from a public teacher—a watchman upon the walls—a guardian of the honor and purity of the land. We hope that the good people of this city will break their long silence and assert the supremacy of their moral convictions. It is only needed that the word be given, and a long-suffered public opinion will speak in tones of thunder. The gamblers fund is a disgrace to New Orleans. Its perpetuation will be an increasing stain and crying shame.

Moody and Sankey in New Orleans.

The Moody and Sankey meetings in this city began on Tuesday evening of last week and have continued up to the present writing with increased interest. The time of the evangelists' coming was most propitious. Everything was in readiness. There was marked unity of spirit among the several Protestant denominations of the city, an unprecedented heartiness of co-operation, and a general expectation of large blessings. For this happy coincidence much is due to the recent "mission" conducted by the Rev. William Hay Aiken among the Episcopal churches in the city. He reached large numbers heretofore untouched by a revival ministry and without sympathy with a religion of experience. It is estimated that scores were converted during his "mission," albeit most of them were members of the church. At the close of his labors he exhorted the Episcopallians of the city to co-operate with "Bro. Moody" in his approaching meeting and commended most highly his work in England. Many of them have been earnest sympathizers and wise workers in the revival services of the past week.

At the first services fully three thousand persons were present, and the crowds have continued to come. On several nights "overflow meetings" in the Carondelet Street Methodist Church have been held, in which Mr. Sankey took part, while Mr. Moody addressed the immense throng in Washington Artillery Hall. Hundreds have gone into the inquiry room after the preaching service as seekers of salvation, and up to this writing three hundred or more have been converted.

Mr. Moody looks like a well-to-do farmer. He dresses plainly, moves about quickly, and has all the expression of a thorough man of affairs. He is rather low of stature, has quite a round form, and is becoming corpulent. His voice is sharp, his utterance rapid and his enunciation often indistinct. He has none of the graces of the orator and never approaches popular eloquence. But he has elements of irresistible power. First of all, he has large common sense. He is mighty in the Scripture, and speaks as one having authority. His illustrations seem to be exhaustive and come readily at his bidding. He excels in the use of terse, pungent sayings. The narratives of the Bible are brought into frequent requisition by way of striking illustration. He employs the language of the people to clothe his clear-cut thoughts and powerful appeals. His expositions are original and so marvelously plain that one wonders why he never thought of that before. And, in addition, he is a great commander. Without any appearance of offensive self-assertion, he has the bearing of a well-poised, strong-willed, self-reliant leader. He speaks, and vast congregations obey.

Mr. Sankey is a handsome man, with an open, winning countenance and courteous manners. His voice is wonderfully clear and flexible. Its compass is only exceeded by its rare melody. We had heard that his exhausting labors in these gospel meetings had injured the tone and strength of his voice; but it is doubtful if he has ever sung with more thrilling effect. It is well known that New Orleans is a liberal patron of music, and prides herself on her taste and critical judgment. That, possibly, has had much to do in drawing immense congregations. But no "star" on the boards has ever commanded such homage as the voice of Mr. Sankey in his rendition of his simple gospel songs.

The evangelists have conducted several meetings for the colored people with great success. Thus all classes are being reached, and the work of God goes on. In our next issue we may speak more definitely as to results.

Dedication of Carrollton Avenue Church.

The beautiful little chapel just erected on Carrollton Avenue was dedicated on last Sabbath afternoon by Bishop Keener. A large congregation attended the interesting service and gave material expression of their approval of another church extension enterprise in New Orleans. The Bishop preached, as is his wont, with great spiritual power. How remarkably fresh and suggestive he is, though nearing his threescore and ten! As a quickener of thought and an original expositor of the word, he is the Frederick W. Robertson of American Methodism. He has all the suggestiveness of the great Brighton divine, without his theological eccentricities.

At the conclusion of the sermon there was the inevitable collection, and a great one it was. Eighteen hundred dollars were raised in cash and subscriptions, and the house was formally set apart from all unhallowed or common uses. The building was presented by Rev. Beverly Carradine, and the sentence of dedication was pronounced by the Bishop. Nearly all of our city pastors were present and gave hearty support to this forward movement.

The church is quite a model of modern architecture—"a thing of beauty"—and Methodist in all its appointments. To the Rev. Christian Keener all honor is due for the prosecution to completion of this temple of worship. He has been architect, contractor and collector. Starting without a dollar, he has built a $4,000 house, and was present to see the capstone brought forth with rejoicing.

Six new members were added on the Sabbath, and the zealous young pastor, Rev. Fitzgerald S. Parker, is now in the midst of a revival meeting, with prospects of good results.

The Sabbath-school numbers over one hundred scholars, and is well organized with Bro. John Randolph as superintendent. The following comprise the Board of Trustees: Bishop J. C. Keener, chairman; Rev. Beverly Carradine, R. F. Jones, John F. Randolph, A. H. Atkey, J. W. Weeden.

From Ruston, La.

The first Quarterly Conference of Ruston station has been held, and this began our second year on the Houser district. It was an occasion, we trust of spiritual benefit and the indications are that a very prosperous year of church life is before our people here. All speak in high praise of the pastor of last year and regret that his health forced him to superannuate, there, thus being removed from the pulpit one of our most instructive and eloquent preachers. Bro. J. H. Stone is most tenderly loved by all and they sympathize deeply with him in his bodily ailment. The new pastor, Rev. Dr. T. B. White, was well received and doubtless is delighted, as well he may be, to find himself in possession of so noble a flock. As he ought, we are inclined to think he will, do the best year's work of his life. We can not write at length of the Quarterly Conference, but we wish to note that we found the Ruston Woman's Foreign Missionary Society alive and at work. We are edified and helped by attending their meeting. The wide awake president, Mrs. W. A. J. Lewis, conducted the meeting with grace and wisdom, ably assisted by the very efficient recording secretary, Mrs. Sallie Ashley. The report of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Harris and that of the treasurer, Mrs. Guthrie, were made in a business way that showed very clearly that our ladies, when occasion calls for it, can be as methodical and practical as any of the boasting lords of creation. For my part I am in no way loathe to endorse fully our Southern sisters in all their glorious work in the missionary field and in the temperance field as well. When it comes to endorsing the daughters of our own Sunny South, that awful bugbear—"the woman suffrage question"—need not be begged in from the frozen North to keep any man back from doing full justice to the fair workers for God and humanity. As I now write, I feel like I was a whole Conference in myself and to myself, and so I take a part of delight in endorsing, guiltless of even the most harmless amendment, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Pelican State. I take off my hat and make my best bow and say to all women workers for Christ and for fallen men—Go on and do the work God has given you to do. Whether men endorse you or not is a very small matter, for Heaven smiles approval and God's full endorsement has been given.

Death of Gen. Hancock.

The whole nation was shocked on Tuesday of last week to learn that Gen. Winfield S. Hancock was dead. There had been no previous intimations of serious illness and no thought was entertained of his demise. He passed away in the vigor of a splendid manhood and amid the sorrow of a great nation of fifty millions of people. Had he lived until Sunday last he would have been sixty-two years of age.

Gen. Hancock was a superb soldier, brave in battle, skillful in the command of armies, able in planning campaigns, courteous in personal bearing, and the very soul of honor. No knightly captain ever led his legion into battle. But when the war was over and the flag of the nation waved undaunted in the breeze, he recognized the supremacy of civil authority and never sympathized with the doctrines of extreme reconstructionists. To the Southwest he greatly endeared himself by his patriotic, non-partisan course as the commander of this department during the years immediately succeeding the war. He persistently refused to tarnish his soldierly honor by making the army an engine of party oppression. To him the profession of a soldier was far above the schemes of the demagogue or the domination of the party leader.

In 1850 he accepted a nomination as President of the United States from the hands of the Democratic Convention, but was defeated at the polls by Gen. James A. Garfield. But he came out of that canvass with increased popularity. The fierce fire of a desperate political struggle did not a scorch on his garments. From that time to the day of his death he devoted himself quietly and industriously to the duties of his position as commander of military division of the Atlantic, department of the East. He died on Governor's Island, near New York City, where his headquarters had been established for some years.

The following note from President Elder Norsworthy is after our best will. He has no snb-Bishops doing wise. He says:

"I heartily assent to your report that presiding elders inquire into the circulation of the Advocate. I have done so in every instance since I began the work, with one exception. I will not report another exception. The pastors on this district are all in place, and are addressing themselves earnestly to the work assigned them. We are dependent on the Advocate for help in our work as preachers."

—This whole hope of human progress is suspended on the ever-growing influence of the Bible.—William Seward.

—"In no subject, perhaps," said Dr. Robert Richardson, "except that of religion, would men depart more from sense and common sense than in the matter of a fact, or a devotion to make a fact subordinate and subservient to the figures which it is presented."

THE GRAY DAYS.

BY ROBERT J. BROWN.

Remember all the days are long, and the cheerful days are few.

Unhappily wander the fading winds that scatter the blowing spray.

And the drifting currents come and go like serpents across my way.

Words like these evening dim, drearily weave the life.

Torpidly mists and the hurrying clouds and the breakers' crest of white have faded the stars from the desolate sky—have vanished them from my sight.

Feeling alone, my wave-bossed bark encounters no passing sail.

Unknown friend nor challenging foe answers my call.

Only the sobbing, moaning waves and the wind's unending wail.

Deeply still my sails are bent, my pilot is faintly lost.

Exiled to my course although the expanse and the mirrored skies were blue.

And the port of peace, where the winds are still,

is evermore in view.

After the gray and the rain and the clouds pass the eternal sun.

Through long stars in the curbed dome still glow when the day is done.

And the mist will be kissed from the laughing eyes when the port of peace is won.

"Doctrinal Journalism."

MR. EDITOR: I like the idea suggested by Bro. Cogdell, in the Advocate of January 25, on the above-named subject; but I would like to add, by way of amendment, the words, "and ecclesiastical," between "doctrinal" and "journalism." Great is the need for doctrinal as well as ecclesiastical drill as much as Methodists need it. Practically, our views have dwindled down to a sort of sickly sentimentalism, in which our people feel, and often say, "Any church is as good as ours." I know that I would offend some of my brethren if I were to write it down (even though I do not understand it) that the Methodist Church is far better than any other church. I like your idea—no open field for a wide community. Let every church have its meetings and bounties, and let those lines be clearly drawn and accurately marked at the corners and all along the lines.

If Bro. Cogdell means by "doctrinal" all those peculiar views in matters of belief and polity which differentiate Methodism from all other ecclesiastical organizations, then we are agreed; but if he means the word, "doctrinal," in its technical sense, I insist that the most selected part of the whole field of journalism is overlooked by him.

Yes, the St. Louis Christian Advocate furnishes its readers with a great deal of doctrinal reading, more, I think, than any other member of the Advocate family. From memory, I recall a number of articles in the Advocate on our doctrines during the last few months, but I can recall scarcely anything which appears in the constitution of the church.

When we remember the fact that there are three other organizations in this country, each of which claims to be the church—the only church—and each of which openly affirm that the Methodist Church (so called) is not a church, we certainly must see the necessity for more doctrinal in our church organs.

It seems to me to be a reasonable proposition that when a person pays money for a Methodist paper, he does so because it is a Methodist paper; and should it turn out to be an organ of infidelity or of Romanism, he would be disappointed and dissatisfied with his investment. True, the case is never so, and doubtless never will be; yet, when we turn to our Methodist papers for Methodist food, we almost as often go away unfed. The article on your second page (January 23) on "Qualifications of Stewards" is a wholesome exception. Will it be read? Had the writer bled it down to half or one-fourth its size, it would have been, and much of Methodist polity would have been learned. Let "Rectus" speak again. We write of "Prerogative" of "Three Orders," of "Episcopal Succession," etc. What do the masses of our people know about these things? Nothing, absolutely nothing. Say "bab!" if you choose, but I tell you our people, when told that a church is not a church, "without a succession of ordained ministers," do not know what to say, because these are things about which they have never heard much, if anything, from one side of the question.

If any man will do as I have done—i. e., examine into the history and statistics of our church and ministry, he will find a decrease in the annual results strongly proportioned to the emphasis of our doctrines and polity by the workers.

There are no distinctions without differences, and if Methodism is different from other churches, it has its points of difference. These constitute its strength. To say that the difference is in its piety, is rather more than one would like to affirm. Its emphasis of this point is one of its points of difference.

The time is come for our literature to educate our people in church polity. It seems to me it would be a good idea for the managers of our church papers to send out "subjects" to their correspondents, to be written upon to such an extent as the room in the paper will permit; say from one-half to two and a half columns, according to the magnitude of the subject, etc.

What does the Bible teach concerning three orders in the ministry? How do Wesley's ordinations stand relative to those of the apostles? What is Calvinism? What is Arminianism? etc.

Articles as above, supervised and compressed by a judicious editor, could not fail to enlighten the minds of readers. Very truly,

J. A. PARKER.

Foreign Mission Bishops.

BY REV. L. G. JOHN, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: The importance of episcopal supervision will hardly be an open question with those familiar with the wants of the mission work. This necessity I regard, not so much the result of failure in this field, as the demand that follows its success and enlargement. When we take the peculiar difficulties of the foreign field into the estimate it will be found, if I mistake not, that our success there compares favorably with any other portion of the work.

While I fully accept the importance of episcopal supervision, I have serious objections to the proposed plan. With all due respect for the wisdom of the president of our Mission Board, and of Dr. Haygood, who has endorsed this plan, I must regard it as an invasion of our Third Restrictive Rule. The words "Itinerant" and "general" mark the boundary line between our "Itinerant general superintendency" and a diocesan episcopacy. This plan contemplates a "resident" superintendency. It proposes "to assign a Bishop to each of the fields, who shall reside in it, and assume the whole responsibility of the work." It proposes a local in the place of an "Itinerant," a "resident" instead of a "general" superintendency. It is merely the substitution of the present "local superintendency" by another local superintendency clothed with episcopal functions.

The arguments by which Chancellor Garland seeks to show that this is merely "a seeming constitutional difficulty" are not to my mind satisfactory.

He says: "The Bishop elected to preside over a foreign mission would be elected and ordained in the same manner, and clothed with the same authority, as any other Bishop." This does not meet the objection that a "resident" superintendency is not an "Itinerant general superintendency." In no place does our constitution provide for a "resident" Bishop, while it distinctly declares the General Conference shall not "destroy the plan of our Itinerant general superintendency."

He says: "He would exercise the functions of his office wherever he might be. When here in America he would preside over an Annual Conference, and he might come early enough and stay long enough to do so." This concedes that, in order to the exercise of his functions as an "Itinerant general superintendency," the foreign Bishop must be recalled from the limits of his resident episcopal jurisdiction to the home field. Abroad, in a particular field, he would be a resident Bishop; in America he could exercise the functions of the "Itinerant general superintendency." We would then have two distinct episcopal systems represented by one man. These systems would be as distinct as the words "local" and "resident" are different in meaning from the words "Itinerant" and "general."

Again: As the special work of the foreign mission Bishop would be in his "resident" jurisdiction, the occasional performance of the functions of the "Itinerant general superintendency" would be incidental or subordinate to his chief mission. The tendency of the office might be to deprecate the Bishop into the "local superintendency," rather than to elevate the local superintendency into a Bishop.

He says: "The nature of diocesan episcopacy is this: That the Bishop has no power out of his diocese, and no other Bishop has power in it." But it has other characteristics against which the Third Restrictive Rule is designed so jealously to guard. Before we decide the precise powers a "Bishop resident" shall exercise in the bounds of his jurisdiction we must first ascertain when and where our constitution rests in the General Conference the power to create such an office.

The demand for episcopal supervision in the mission field, I believe, can be fully met without any modification of our "Itinerant general superintendency." It meets the demands of the home field, and will meet the demands of the foreign field when the General Conference shall equip it for the work. At least, let us let its powers fully before we re-constitute our system on another plane. Thus far the General Conference has considered only the wants of the home field when providing for the demand for increased episcopal labor. Our Bishops with full work at home have endeavored to meet this call, and the results have demonstrated the efficiency of their work. We find abundant proof of this in the Border and Central Mexican fields. Our mission work has long been on probation, and now stands waiting to be received into full connection. It is for the General Conference to supply this demand. It must take China, Japan, Brazil and Mexico into the account when it provides episcopal supervision and labor for the church. If, after trial, it is evident that the "Itinerant general superintendency" is inadequate to the demands of the foreign field it will be in order, by constitutional methods, to recast the "third restrictive rule," and adjust the legislation of the church to its fundamental law.

HICKSVILLE, TEXAS.

Doubtful Catholicity.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to call your attention to an article in the Advocate of January 14, headed "Tracts, Books and Colportage," in which the author takes occasion to say: "Manifestly it is the duty of the church to humanity to defend the way of life against errors such as Universalism, Campbellism, Mormonism, Spiritualism or any others that may come up. Let there be a Grub-Ax for every one of them."

Please ask him if he is acquainted with the doctrines of the Christian Church or of Campbellism, as he styles it.

It is apparent that he is not, or he certainly would not class it with Mormonism, Spiritualism, etc. His catholicity is not so broad as that of Archdeacon Farrar, which you so highly commend in a leading article in the Advocate of January 21. It may be, and doubtless is true, that the Christian Church does not in all of its doctrines and practices conform to the views of the author of the article in question, but others think and believe that it is as orthodox as any Protestant denomination.

We protest as Protestants against the tone and spirit of the article referred to, so far as it relates to the Christian Church.

The Methodist Church is a grand old church, and its crusade is against sin and not to stigmatize other denominations who may not agree with it in every doctrinal point.

North Louisiana Notes.

Leaving Ruston in advance of the late cold snap, it struck us at the residence of Bro. Sumner Rhinehardt. We were glad to be under a good Methodist roof during that fearfully dark and stormy night. The pastor of Douglas circuit, Rev. John L. Williams, had succeeded in reaching a neighbor's house around the turn of the road and in sight of our sheltering place. We enjoyed ourselves in the company of our brother and his interesting family talking until bed-time, when the best of books was brought. We read a Psalm, and then father, mother, children and the parson all joined heartily in the singing of "Come, thou fount of every blessing." Kneeling with our backs to the cheerful log fire, shooting upon us its generous warmth, and with the love of God filling our hearts, we felt in the spirit of prayer and the dear family and our own loved ones at home, the interests of Zion, and the well-being of "all men" were commended unto the loving care of the All-Father. Concluded to an adjoining room, we soon sunk into the embrace of a feather-bed, and, amply supplied with covering, we rested well, notwithstanding the fact that the wild winds came through the wide, convenient cracks and played at will upon our poor heads. In the morning the pastor in charge hunted up the presiding elder, and with Bro. Rhinehardt, being led about by that prince of guides, John Calhoun, we started for Douglas Church, where we were to hold our Quarterly Conference. No one being there we concluded to go for it, as after the officials, and gathering them up, held the Conference where best we could. Our good and thrifty brother, Amos Davis, was too full of business to leave his store, and so we rode off in search of Bro. Tom Pipes. Not at home, we were informed that he was helping a friend to build a lodge in the wilderness. Calhoun, not noting the fact that the presiding elder was mounted on Tige, Bro. Pierce Shepherd's famous jumping horse, that the eyes of the pastor in charge were watering and reddening under the bitter cold wind, and that all our ears and hands and feet were suffering intensely—unconscious of all this or not caring for it, our guide plunged us on, sometimes off and sometimes on the road, skimming along an occasional fence, into the ice and frozen ruts, a few times lost, and numberless logs and brush in the way that must somehow, by hook or crook or equestrian sleight of hand, be gotten over and through. Calhoun carried us relentlessly on and on until at last, deep in the "tangled wilderness," we found our man at work. As was the way with old England once, we became a "press gang," and taking Rev. Tom Pipes in charge, we made for the kindly residence of Bro. Hearn. There in a short while we had a tip-top dinner, eaten, as you may imagine, with a real relish after our wanderings. That fortified within, we proceeded to the company room to hold the Conference. The logs burning brightly, we gathered about, and with proper dignity and meaning business, we convened and carried through to the benediction the first Quarterly Conference of the brand new Douglas circuit. When Bro. Williams and the writer got back before dark to Sister Metcalf's, where we were to spend the night, we felt somewhat fogged by our possibly fifteen miles of riding up a Quarterly Conference on a cold February day. Bro. John Calhoun, our guide, goes down on the tablet of our memory as one whom we shall not soon forget. Bro. Williams is conversing. The next day, on our way to Hugo, we took dinner with Bro. Stone, at Vienna. We found him very cheerful and improving. He thinks he will be able to do some work through the year. He preached the funeral of Bro. Hodge at Smyrna Church, and, in so doing, he laid in the grave the body of a noble man, a true Itinerant and a true Christian. We must meet our Bros. Parish, Baldie, Crowson and Hodge, all of the Homer district, in the bright morning of the resurrection. The Quarterly Conference at Harmony was well attended, and the outlook of the year encouraging. All the Conference assessments upon that church were fully met by subscriptions and cash after the eleven o'clock sermon. Bro. Davies enters with vim and hope upon his second year's labors on the Sumnerfield circuit. Bro. George Cox, a class leader, in answer to the presiding elder's exhortation on that subject, gave the writer to understand that his "class meeting had not gone into winter quarters"; that he and Bro. Driggers had determined to meet regularly, assured that God would be with them whether more came or not. It rejoiced us to learn this, and we are prepared to hear of a large and constant attendance at that church upon this glorious means of grace. This is a case where, not the class, but individual members have gone into winter quarters. A few determined and deeply pious souls in each church, resolving to meet regularly all the year round and actually doing so, can bring back the old-time prevalence of the class meeting in our beloved Zion. We are glad that the expense for Sunday-schools and prayer and class meetings going into winter quarters is being taken away, for we find as we move on over the district, that churches that have never had a stove, are now supplied with one or more, and are thus made comfortable in the cold weather. May the stove revival, a good illustration of practical Christianity, increase to the church's remotest bounds. We are spending the day at the home of Dr. Roberts, in Shiloh, and, preaching here to-night at the Baptist Church, we will go over, God willing, tomorrow to Farmersville to look after Bro. Wash Nicholson and his flock.

The new Methodist Church here has been ceiled and floored, and only needs to be seated and beltried and painted to be ready for dedication. The stove presented by Bro. Philip Hallahan, of New Orleans, is not the best, and it is understood, we believe, that Bro. W. W. Guthrie, of Ruston, intends to stand the cost of painting the church inside and out. Our people here will soon have a beautiful house of worship.

Help for Ministerial Education.

MR. EDITOR: The Ministerial Educational Association of the Mississippi Conference has three young men at Centenary College at this time pursuing their studies with reference to the gospel ministry. The young men are doing admirably, and show a commendable spirit in every particular. Money could hardly be spent for a worthier object than to help them. The Ministerial Association has only four dollars and twenty-six cents in the treasury, and the board of each young man became due on the first day of this month. The board of each per month is ten dollars, and the washing is one dollar and a quarter. From February 5 to June 2, the end of the session, there will be needed to put all the young men through college one hundred and thirty-five dollars. It would be a very great pity for any one of them to be compelled to stop school. I take this method, therefore, of appealing to all lovers of young men and of the Christian ministry to aid us. Send money to me. I will acknowledge the receipt and forward at once to the young men.

Misapprehension of Prayer.

The following extract, from an excellent article in the Liberator, for March 15, is so well stated and makes so clear and important distinction, that we take pleasure in transferring it to our columns:

Prayer is made a sort of half-Savior. Persons regard it as a victorious work, by which sin is removed and God's favor obtained.

I do not mean that openly anyone would thus speak of it, but in the secret heart of many who are awakened to their lost condition, prayer is not seldom put in Christ's place, salvation is sought and expected from its practice.

I could tell of a lady who was once earnestly seeking peace. One of her afflictions was that prayer seemed such a burden to her. "If I could only utter one good prayer," she said, "I think I could get through." But the reply was made to her that if she could utter such a prayer she would at once trust in Christ instead of trusting only in her Savior.

The same thing occurs very often amongst the poor and illiterate. A friend went to see an elderly woman in Wales, who was very ill. She had worked herself up into a perfect frenzy of prayer. Half the night she had been crying out for mercy, and she began to hope that she should thus obtain it. "It is 'pray or perish,'" she said, "so I must go on praying till I die." But it was pointed out to her that salvation depended upon her union with Christ by faith, and the promise was quoted—"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John iii, 16.) She was told not to fix her thoughts on her prayers, but on her Savior; and that when she looked to him in her heart she might know she should be saved. She learnt the lesson and found peace, and afterwards she regarded prayer as a privilege, but not as a work of merit.

Bear this point ever in mind. Never let prayer take the place of Christ. Nothing, not even prayer, must come between him and the soul. The eye of the soul waits evermore to be turned to him. Christ in his finished work, Christ in his office as Mediator at the Father's right hand, Christ in his willingness and power to save to the uttermost—here alone is the resting-place of every weary, anxious soul.

But there is a mistake sometimes made in an opposite direction. Prayer and faith are put in contrast one to the other, and prayer is somewhat disparaged because faith is the instrument of salvation. But it is not to be forgotten that prayer is the expression of faith, and no man is of any avail; but prayerless faith, if such were possible, would very soon wither and hide away.

Wherever faith is in the heart, prayer will be on the lip. The child that is newly born utters its cry, and the soul that is born again in faith must needs pray. Hence the two are knit together by St. Paul: "For the Scripture saith, whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed." * * * For the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him; for whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." (Rom. x, 11-13.) You can not separate the two. Where there is the one, more or less, the other will be found also. Nor must we forget that by prayer faith is exercised, and therefore grows.

"O help us, through the prayer of faith, here daily to abide." For still the more thy servant hath, the more shall he receive."

One great reward of believing prayer will be more and more confidence towards God. You pray in faith; God shows in some way that your prayer is heard, and thus you can go on to pray more joyfully and hopefully.

REV. T. A. S. ADAMS, D. D. REV. J. T. SAWYER
REV. W. L. O. HENNING.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1886.

The sale of Bibles, religious books and magazines, through the co-operation of Mr. Spurgeon's church amounted to nearly $15,000. Seventy-eight men were employed in the work, and fifteen hundred towns and villages were visited.

In the correspondence between King Leopold, of Belgium and President Cleveland, of the United States, with reference to the Congo State, very endearing official terms were used. The King addressed the President as "Very Dear and Great Friend," and the President in reply called the King his "Esteemed and Great Friend." Quite affectionate but slightly P-wickian, we suspect.

On our first page will be found an excellent article from the pen of Rev. Dr. I. G. John, of Huntsville, Tex., and for many years the able editor of the Texas Christian Advocate. In a private note accompanying the article, the author says: "I find, with a little tightening of the straps, the pastoral harness sits as comfortably on me as a score of years ago. You are making a noble paper."

The point made by our valued correspondent in his excellent article on "Doctrinal Journalism," on the first page of this issue, is good, but has no legitimate application to this Advocate. It is clearly understood, from each edition, that this paper is pronounced and positive in its Methodististic utterances. We believe in denominational loyalty. Our people ought to know the distinctive teachings and glorious history of their church. And through these years we have tried to contribute to that knowledge. We have had a few subscribers to complain of the Advocate's intense denominationalism, but none on account of its looseness of church loyalty. Our correspondent is on the right line. The more we indoctrinate the church the more diligent will it be for ecclesiastical marauders to steal our sheep. Special sermons and lectures by pastors will also avail much.

In a Nashville letter to the Southern Christian Advocate "West End," when we take to be Dr. R. A. Young, says:

"We are glad the missions have grown large enough to write about—by Drs. Garland, Galloway, Kelley and the others. The 'leader' in the Christian Advocate says truly: 'The church has never before made such rapid growth in its home work, or done so much for the work in foreign fields, as it is doing now.' This is no optimistic view. Within five years the names on the treasurer's pay-roll and the contributions for foreign missions have been doubled. The Mexican Border Mission has been erected into a Conference, and the Central Mexican will be set up February 25. No more superintendents, eo nomine, but a Bishop every year seems to be the trend. Write out, beloveds. You comprehend the situation. Our is an Episcopal Church. The annual meeting of 'the best equipped mission in China' ought to have a Bishop to preside at regular intervals. So of the young and prosperous mission in Brazil. But no resident 'general superintendent.' If you please. Let Bishop McTear go to China and return; let Bishop Granbery go to Brazil and return, just as they come home from any other Conferences when their work is done."

We are indebted to the Northern Christian Advocate, of Syracuse, N. Y., for this bit of news: "The name of Gen. Grant is to be adopted by a Southern Methodist college, and this is the way it comes about. It appears that when the college was organized at Athens, Tenn., in 1867, Gen. Grant was the first namesigned to the subscription paper. The trustees of the East Tennessee Wesleyan University, which is the name of that school, have decided to make use of that interesting fact and have named their institution the Grant Memorial University. At the same time they have adopted measures for greatly enlarging its usefulness. We will not say that the new name is greater than the old one, but it is more novel in connection with institutions of learning. We are glad that the first Grant college is in that section of the country that owes Gen. Grant most gratitude."

Sunday Laws.

The Sabbath question is becoming more and more prominent. With the increase of our population by immigration from all points of the compass, our national Sabbath is imperiled. It is sought to introduce the Continental holiday into our country and degrade the day of our fathers that has been the glory of this republic. Two years ago an effort was made in the legislature of Mississippi, to repeal the Sunday law so far as it applied to certain towns on the Gulf Coast. For years the people of Louisiana have endeavored to secure a legal Sunday, but in vain. It is high time for good citizens to awake out of sleep. When the Sabbath is abolished we may expect the overthrow of the great foundation principles upon which this government is established.

The objection to Sunday laws proceed from an entirely false idea that they are to protect or compel religious worship. That is a popular, but radical mis-conception of their sphere and purpose. Sunday is a civil day. With its religious observance, the State has nothing to do. A failure to make this distinction leads to a hopeless, helpless confusion of ideas. Against the enforcement of Sunday laws we hear the cry of "Puritanism!" "Religious persecution," and "abridging the rights of conscience!" But these are born of ignorance. Sunday is subjected to statutory regulation only for the moral and public ends of society. It is not to make men religious—not to compel attendance upon any church service—not to command the adoption of any particular creed—not to force anyone to spend the day in saying prayers and singing psalms—but to conserve the civil interests of government—its moral, commercial, social and industrial welfare.

On this subject, in order to enforce the important distinction made, some thoughts are reproduced which we had occasion to publish recently in another journal. The testimonies heretofore given from the great thinkers of the world, ought to suggest a little modesty to certain outliers against the unconstitutionality of Sunday legislation.

The necessity for a Sabbath is founded in the very constitution of man's nature. His physical life demands it. Its continued violation will greatly shorten human existence. This is also true of society and government. France tried the experiment of abolishing the Sabbath and inaugurated the "reign of terror" which drenched the land in blood. DeToqueville said to an American on one occasion, "France must have your Sabbath or she is ruined." The testimony of other eminent writers on this point might be valuable. Dr. Adam Smith, the great political economist, said: "The Sabbath as a political institution is of inestimable value, independently of its claims to Divine authority." The late Benjamin Disraeli (Earl of Beaconsfield), of Hebrew origin and sympathies, said: "I hold it (the Sabbath) to be the most valuable blessing ever conceded to man. It is the corner-stone of civilization and its fracture might even affect the health of the people." Rt. Hon. William E. Gladstone, the present Premier of England, once said: "From a moral, social and physical point of view, the observance of Sunday is a duty of absolute consequence."

Ralph Waldo Emerson, the great American philosopher, said: "The Sunday is the core of our civilization."

The Hon. Thos. F. Bayard, Secretary of State in Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet, once said in a public address: "I most sincerely approve of the civil institution of the Sabbath. I heartily desire to see its observance under statute law, and the stronger laws of habitual and universal custom and popular acquiescence." Bishop, in his work on criminal law says: "It is a mistake to suppose that Sabbath keeping is a thing merely of religious observance. It is the corner-stone of public morality and happiness, viewed merely as a civil regulation; its observance contributes to the public repose, health, morals and convenience, as well as religion." And so these utterances might be multiplied a hundred-fold from law writers, statesmen, political economists, educators and divines. And yet some boldly assert that Sunday laws are unconstitutional, but we fail to discover a single argument or authority in support of the statement. It is rather a bold declaration in face of the fact that Louisiana is the one exception of all the States in the Union without a Sunday law. Unconstitutional! Who says so and where? Blackstone, the greatest authority on the fundamental principles of law, doesn't say so, but on the contrary asserts that it "is of admirable service to a State, considered merely as a civil institution." Justice Strong of the United States Supreme Court gives a contrary opinion, as do also the Supreme Courts of Illinois, Massachusetts, Indiana and other States. Daniel Webster, the great "exponent of the Constitution," gave emphatic testimony in favor of enacting and enforcing Sunday laws. But the list of authorities need not be enlarged. These are quite sufficient to establish both the value and constitutionality of laws that guarantee to the people a day of rest and quiet. The desire of every good citizen should be to see them enforced without fear or favor.

Superintendence of Foreign Missions.

Dr. Garland's article on foreign missions continues to engage the attention of editors and correspondents. That is well. It is a great question and ought to be discussed in all its bearings. Of course all desire the best thing, whatever that may be. By a free interchange of opinions the wisest course will be secured. The Wesleyan Christian Advocate earnestly advocates Dr. Garland's plan after its own interpretation of the Doctor's language. Our conferees quote some paragraphs from this Advocate on the constitutional aspects of the question, and comments as follows:

As to the constitutional objection to Dr. Garland's proposition we wish our readers to see the views of others and therefore have quoted as above. We have only a few words of comment. Dr. Garland does not, we think, ask for the election of a Bishop to China—that is for the election of a man to the episcopacy with the understanding that he is to go to China.

2. The principle of itinerancy does not depend upon annual appointments as Dr. G. seems to intimate. In the early history of the church, appointments were made for six months only, the change to twelve months was not an attack upon itinerancy. It was only the adaptation of the principle to the changed condition of things in the church and country, and to make itinerancy more practical.

3. As a matter of fact the first Bishop in our church presided in the same Conference annually for many successive years.

4. The Bishops are not appointed to preside at all, never have been. They are all constructively present at every Conference. To say that anyone of them shall not preside at any Annual Conference at any time or any number of times is to break up the unity of the episcopacy and destroy its general character effectually.

5. While we then give our views we wish also to say that there has been no more observant and faithful member of the Board of Missions for the last four years than Dr. Galloway and his views are entitled to careful consideration.

On these comments we wish to say a few words. 1. The plain language of Dr. Garland settles the question as to whether he favored the election of "a Bishop to China"—that is with the understanding that he is to go to a foreign field. He says: "The Bishop elected to preside over a foreign mission would be elected and ordained in the same manner and clothed with the same authority as any other Bishop. By what canon of interpretation those words can be made to mean anything else we know not. Why speak of a Bishop being elected in the same manner as any other Bishop, if there is no other Bishop?"

2. The principle of itinerancy rests upon two things—An appointing power and a statute of limitation. As a matter of fact, appointments are made annually, and have been during the entire history of organic American Episcopal Methodism. And the rule of annual assignments to work applies to Bishops and all names on the roll of any Conference. If this rule is violated by one class, it requires no prophet's ken to foretell the downfall of our itinerancy. The Bishops wisely put themselves under the rule of annual assignments.

3. The fact that Bishop Asbury had all the work to do in the early years of Methodism in this country has no bearing on the question under discussion.

4. The duties of Bishops are plainly prescribed in our book of discipline. That they are not "appointed" to their work in the exact manner of other preachers is without significance. There is no need to play upon words. The case is made up and clearly stated. All desire more episcopal supervision in the foreign fields. Two methods are presented: one, for our Bishops to visit the missions more frequently; the other, for Bishops to reside in these missions. Against this latter plan there are no constitutional and other objections. The former is in harmony with the Constitution of the church, has been the usage of American Episcopal Methodism, and its success has been demonstrated by history. It is admitted that the General Conference can not elect a Bishop for a specific field, nor with the understanding that he is to reside therein. How then is the resident episcopacy to be secured? The General Conference might advise the Bishop to such a course, but what if they should fail or refuse to comply? Just that question was raised when the "Finly Resolutions" were introduced in the General Conference, of 1874, in connection with the case of Bishop Andrew. And they brought out the two doctrines of Methodist Episcopacy. The one entertained and maintained by the Southern delegates yet obtains in Southern Methodism. The proposed measure implies upon it, and will hardly be adopted. We doubt not the General Conference will urge more intimate episcopal supervision of our foreign missions, and advise annual visits to each by the Bishops as to the Annual Conferences at home.

A Poor Book.

I have not seen Dr. Anson West's book, "The Old Man and the New." Was going to send for it, but when I saw a favorable notice of it, first by the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and then by Prof. Tillet, I saw that I did not want it. Neither the Advocate nor the Professor can make me believe that a book in the late decades of the nineteenth century, that teaches that: "The world was created in six literal days of 24 hours each," has anything in it for an intelligent man to read except what may be copied from other books. When a book teaches that: "The chronology of the Bible establishes beyond all question the period of 4,000 years, as the length of time from the creation to the advent of Christ," I do not see how it could be expected of me to desire any further information from that author.

Now I respectfully ask the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to publish this in one of its columns.

YALDO CITY, Mississippi.

H. ABBEY.

We give the above space in our columns as requested. It is hardly possible that our brother intended to say that the recommendations of Prof. Tillet and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE are sufficient to condemn a book in his estimation. Prof. Tillet is the dean of the theological faculty of Vanderbilt University and a scholar of recognized ability and orthodoxy. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is supposed to be Methodist in its utterances and has been endorsed by three Annual Conferences, one of the reports being written by our brother himself. Besides this Advocate has spoken favorably of several of Dr. Abbey's own works and yet believes they are valuable contributions to our theological and ecclesiastical literature. But according to the doctrine announced above he condemns his own books.

The Advocate gave a respectful notice of Dr. Anson West's book, but did not endorse the entire argument. Indeed there are very few works we would accept without some modification, either of argument or arrangement. Nor are we prepared to say that Dr. West's book has nothing "in it" for an intelligent man to read except what may be copied from other books. Those who know the Doctor will testify that he is no copiest, but a man of strong individuality and clear convictions.

The idea that one objectionable position or doctrine should condemn an entire volume would deplete our libraries, and sadly decrease our source of knowledge. In face of such a canon of criticism, what book is able to stand? Dr. West's treatise covers a wide range and deals with many great cardinal doctrines. Whether all his arguments meet with approval or not, we repeat that the book has merit.

"Gilderoy's" Endorsement.

In a long letter to the editor, "Gilderoy" cordially endorses the position this Advocate on Bishops for the foreign field. We are obliged to our excellent brother for his kind words. Such letters have come from many sources—"Bishops and other clergy." That the election of a Bishop for China, Brazil, or Mexico is violative of the spirit of our Constitution, there can be no question. The proper plan to adopt is regular and frequent visits of our Bishops to all the mission fields. The objection that a month's visit to a mission would give a Bishop a very inadequate idea of its wants and condition, would also lie against his presidency over a Conference at home. To strengthen the bond of sympathy between the home and foreign fields our Bishops should reside here and go abroad. "Gilderoy" says:

"You are right, exactly right in your position on our foreign mission work. I only meant to attract attention to the subject, to elicit ventilation—to provoke investigation—to call out thought. This is often best done by taking, or suggesting the other side of the question, as Dr.

Garland has done, though the Doctor, with his character and in his position, has doubtless, expressed his honest convictions. I sent a squib to the Texas Advocate, more radical than the one to the Raleigh, hoping thereby to provoke the great West to thought and talk over our missionary work."

After the Meeting.

The special services conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, closed on Friday afternoon of last week. Such immense congregations, for ten consecutive days, never attended religious worship in New Orleans. Hundreds were turned away from the building at the last service. The morning meetings for Christian workers at Carondelet Street Church last week were of special interest. Mr. Moody, always strong, appeared there to best advantage. In handling the word he is a master, and in practical suggestions to God's people, he has the genius of sanctified common sense.

We have not heard from other denominations, but our Methodist Churches reaped some substantial fruits of the meeting on Sunday last. We give the number of accessions in the several churches, not all of whom, however, are the products of the revivalist.

Carondelet Street, Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter, pastor, received nine members; Felicite Street, Rev. S. H. Werlein, pastor, ten; St. Charles Avenue, Rev. Beverly Carraidine, pastor, two; Louisiana Avenue, Rev. B. F. White, pastor, three; Carrollton Avenue, Rev. Fitzgerald S. Parker, pastor, six; Moreau Street, Rev. H. D. Kimball, pastor, one; Algiers, Rev. C. E. McLain, one; Craps Street, German, Rev. Dr. J. B. A. Ahrens, pastor, one; Dryades Street, Rev. P. H. Hensel, pastor, one. Special services will be continued during the week at Carrollton Avenue. We rejoice at the more hopeful outlook for our New Orleans Methodism.

The Quarterly Review.

We have received the January number of this periodical and given it a somewhat careful examination. There is a good variety in the table of contents and several of the articles have exceptional merit. We give the list of papers as follows: Washington Irving, by Prof. J. C. Hinton, of Middlebury, Vt.; The Image of God, by Rev. S. M. Hawley; Prize Fighting in the Schools, by Rev. W. L. C. Hunslett; Church Extension, by the editor; Moral Character of Doubt, by Rev. W. H. Anderson, D. D.; Mysticism, by Rev. J. Finkner, B. D., Scranton, Pa.; Faith and Works Harmonized, by Rev. J. M. Boland; Early Methodism Rationalistic, by Rev. William I. Gill, Lawrence, Mass.; Modes of Man's Existence, Rev. R. Abbey, and a good literary table, followed by views and reviews.

This table is quite appetizing and will certainly provide some viand for the most fastidious. The most practical article in the department of ecclesiastical administration is on Church Extension. We commend to all thoughtful readers. That is a great cause and needs emphasis just now in our Southern Methodism. Bro. Hunslett's discussion of Prize Fighting in the Schools, is timely and strong. He inveighs vigorously against the prize system in our schools, points out its evils and shows a more excellent way. Here is a specimen paragraph: "Away with such a system, with its selfish motives, its exclusive rewards, and its unjust standards of merit: and let a system of truth and equity, which appreciates and rewards the merits of all, take its place. As well punish only the worst, as reward only the best. Let duty be enthroned as the aim, the guide and the measure of effort; as the motive, the rule and the criterion of merit in scholastic, in all other life." Other articles we have not space to notice in detail.

Dr. Hinton announces the possible discontinuance of the Review. He says:

We are not unmindful of the possibility that our constitution, which has borne unharmed double service, may not always do so with equal impunity. Hence it is our purpose to abandon this Review at the General Conference, near at hand, if that body will assume the Review; but if not, then we will continue our year's engagement and retire. Any way, the Review will continue; our subscribers are assured of this fact.

Dr. Hinton has labored with great energy and ability to establish and sustain the Quarterly Review as an organ of higher thought in the church. While critics have been numerous and criticisms various, the general judgment is that he has achieved and deserved literary success. That the financial outlook is not better we regret. We favor the adoption of the Review by the General Conference and its publication at Nashville.

Cost of Administration.

In addition to the elaborate and explicit article of Dr. Kelley on our third page, to which special attention is called, we wish to republish another gratifying statement. There is complaint among the union formed, that the cost of administering our foreign mission funds is excessive.

A pastor in Virginia wrote Dr. Kelley that some Baptist preachers, in that State, were publishing that their church have had in the foreign mission fields thirty-four thousand more converts than all the other Protestant churches combined, and that each Baptist convert has only cost $37, while each convert of the other churches has cost $220. To which Dr. Kelley, made answer, quoting from authoritative tables in the Missionary Review, as follows:

The American Baptist Missionary Union (North)—Gains previous year in heathen lands, 4,684; foreign mission income, $327,800 93; cost of administration, 16,399 per cent.

Southern Baptist Convention—Increase for year not given; whole number of communicants added these missions established in 1856, 1,290; foreign mission income, $31,571 92; cost of administration, 22.47 per cent.

Methodist Episcopal Church, South—Whole number communicants, China, Mexico, Brazil, India, German, 12,748; income, $184,260; cost of administration (including printing of Annual report), 4.5 per cent.

Such a showing ought to gratify all loyal Southern Methodists. No other Mission Board of our acquaintance conducted so economically, nor, indeed, any other business enterprise.

Writing from Scranton, Miss. Rev. J. W. Timin thus speaks of the good work in his charge:

We are moving on nicely on Scranton circuit. We have just closed a protracted service of five days, or rather, nights, resulting in fifteen accessions to the church, and the membership revived. Bro. W. G. Backus was with us and assisted in the good work.

Rev. Dr. T. C. Welr, of Sardis, Miss., in writing the editor a private letter on other matters, thus refers to a revival meeting in his town:

We are just now in the midst of a glorious revival season in Sardis. Rev. Dr. Hoyte, Presbyterian evangelist, has been conducting a meeting, for some two weeks past, of very marked interest and success. About one hundred persons have embraced Christ. The several churches participate in the meeting and share largely in its results. Twenty-five were received into the Methodist Church last Sunday, and others have signified their purpose to join. We hope this is but the beginning of the good work. A Baptist evangelist commences operations next Thursday, and when he is through the Methodist Church proposes, God willing, to take up the work. We thank God and take courage. Let the friends of Zion rejoice.

This interesting item will be read by all lovers of Methodist history:

"The jubilee of Methodism in South Australia is to be celebrated this year. The first sermon was preached in 1836; the first church was erected two years after. There are now in the Conference 33 churches and preaching places; 5 itinerant and 363 local preachers; 7,825 members, and about 19,000 Sunday-school scholars. It is proposed also to raise a jubilee fund of $300,000, which will be used to remove church debts, to make some provision for a theological training-school, and lay the foundation for a college for women."

We find this pleasant item in the Pacific Methodist:

The pastor of Centenary Church, West, B. B. Riddick, was presented the week by Mrs. Kavanaugh with a beautiful souvenir of the venerated Bishop, a handsome, turkey-morocco case containing two medals of Randolph Macon College. Each medal contains, on one side, an excellent representation of the old college building as it looked, 20 years ago, upon the reverse side of the one is the likeness of Bishop Soule, and upon the reverse side of the other the likeness of Rev. Ezekiah G. Lee, the founder of the college. Mrs. Kavanaugh may be assured no one could have prized such an expression of her respect and affection more than Dr. Riddick. The association is a double one. The memory of the old college and of the venerable Bishop. They are both alike dear to him.

To the North Mississippi Conference.

"DEAR BROTHERS: I have sent this day to Dr. Kelley a draft on Bro. R. C. Clarke for the unpaid $1,200, balance of the $2,000 we pledged at Conference. Bro. Clarke generously offered to cover what we failed to meet, on condition that we pay it to him as soon as possible. Let all money collected from this time be sent to me, so that the amount due Bro. Clarke may be paid him. Any failure to comply with this request will create confusion. Do not fail to make your collection, and send to me at your earliest convenience."

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate,
WHEN THE SUN IS LOW.

BY T. A. R. A.

When the sun is low in the west,
And the dusky night its herald spreads
On the eastern clouds and the mountain crests—Gleams touched by the Titan's wheels and steeds—
Turn and gaze
Through gathering haze
O'er hills that are losing evening's glow:
I stand my eye
And seem to hear
A call to come home, for the sun is low.
There's a gentle hour on wintry days,
Through hazy air with snow or mist,
Or rain or sleet as the clouds grow gray,
And sounds grow faint in the field and street,
For the day is done
And sinking sun
Speeds homeward eagerly, though so slow;
Chilled and numb and
To fire and feet
In the home and still when the sun is low.
To a holy hour in the evening Spring,
When melting birds in swelling trees
Futter and twitter on softening wing
And a blayer "good night" on southern breeze,
I wonder then
If ever again
The longest loves from heaven will blow
A breath of life,
An angel kiss
To sorrowing wail when the sun is low.
The calm sun succeeding the storm
Ours the drifting of his one stage
To which in the cloud either hawks from
Of that, a word that comes and goes
In snow and gold,
In flash and fold,
In the pale with the glory is glow,
And with a gle,
He asks to die
Some summer day when the sun is low.
O'er a race some Autumn eve,
When fruit all ripe hangs over my head,
To find a thousand fancies weave
Of the wondrous tree from which are fed
Immortal fruits
In valley of life.
Earth struggled to light once, and so
Two Autumn, too,
When earth was new—
Will heaven not dawn on the sun is low?
O wandering fancies, cease your flight!
To my young heart, new yearning still:
Have back to your slumbers ere it be night
And something at dark beside us lie.
God's angels walk
In Eden's gate,
And angels will follow us our way,
And living, dying,
Striving, fighting,
Will be nearer there when the sun is low.
FEBRUARY 20, 1886.

"The Wise Men" Again.

In my reply in the ADVOCATE of January 21, to "J. W. M." on the subject of the Magi, I thought the matter might be properly discussed, and I volunteered my services in the discussion. But I had a right to expect that if the discussion should be continued your readers should know who were conducting it. For one party to be in plain sight and the other concealed behind a fictitious name, does not look to me in good taste; and, far more important still, it is not respectful to the readers of the ADVOCATE. So it seems to me, the following paragraphs are a reply to a rejoinder of the same J. W. M., or some one else, I don't know which, in the ADVOCATE of February 11. But I do not think they ought to be, or can fairly be published until both parties shall be in sight.

First, I distinctly disclaimed any knowledge of these so-called "Wise Men," what they were; but supposing them, on the one hand, to be Persian heathen men, utterly destitute of religious knowledge, fortune tellers and strolling neeromancers; or, on the other, highly educated Christian men, remarkably familiar with every paragraph of the Old Testament, anxiously alive and daily hopeful of a great divine advent then and there. These two parties were in plain sight; and the "Wise Men," in all likelihood, were one or the other of these parties. I signified my preference for the latter.

I represented these Magi as astrologers, fortune tellers, neeromancers, destitute of religious knowledge, etc., and I. W. M. has given not a word to the contrary. He says I will think differently if I will carefully read DeUpham on the subject. Quite likely. But among a dozen of the highest front-shelf authors now before me I see no material difference as to the general character of this class of superstitions, ignorances, spreading over hundreds of years and hundreds of miles—particular allusions to them are likely to differ, but there is no disagreement. No use to quote opinions.

The evidence that the "Wise Men" alluded to by Matthew were Persian soothsayers, is in this one word Magi. I know of no other. I have shown that "from the East" gives no information, but is rather against the supposition.

J. W. M. does not see the propriety of my calling the Grecian Jews a denomination, I will explain it. I use the term denomination just as we now use it alluding to the Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists. The Grecian Jews, in their relation to other Jews, possessed all the material characteristics of a separate sect or denomination. They were so distinguished in the common parlance of that day. They were of Hebrew ancestry five hundred years back, but Grecian by nationality, and resided mostly in Grecian countries. They were in all likelihood the most numerous party; had their own separate churches, and particularly their own church government, church officers and temple for general conferences or festive worship. Their temple was far superior in magnificence to either of the others, that at Jerusalem or the one on Mount Gerizim. They never departed from the faith of their fathers. They were the most wealthy, quiet and religious of all the Jews of that age.

"But Jerusalem still continued their religious center and the source of their ecclesiastical authority."

No, sir! Many of the most pious for long centuries cherished a fond and proud remembrance of the ancient fatherhood and the old captivity temples of Solomon, and when civil conditions permitted many of them visited the ancient temple. Some carried this reverence so far as occasionally, perhaps once or twice in a lifetime and more or less, to send a small piece of money to the old treasury as a mark of respect for ancient memories.

There were official fraternal communications between the two churches. How frequent these communications were our researches into the history of those times since the revival of letters do not fully acquaint us. But the following from the first chapter of the second book of the Maccabees will throw light on the subject:

"The brethren, the Jews that be at Jerusalem and the land of Judea, wish unto the brethren, the Jews that are throughout Egypt, health and peace."

"2. God be gracious unto you, and remember his covenant that he made with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, his faithful servants."

"3. And give you all a heart to serve him, and to do his will with a good courage and a willing mind."

"4. And open your hearts in his law and commandments and send you peace."

"5. And hear your prayers and be about with you, and never forsake you in time of trouble."

"6. And now we be here praying for you."

Other such references, though not identical, are not out of reach. But notwithstanding all this, there was at times, perhaps generally, more or less sectional strife and jealousy between the two churches. The old Hebrew branch was the dominant church. It was the High Church. The Greeks were only Methodists. They didn't have the Apostolic Succession, and so were "Gentiles," or semi-Gentiles. And so, because of such allusions, some of our late copy-righting communicators consider the Greeks (Greek Jews) to be "Gentiles."

Again, J. W. M. is surprised that I speak of the Pharisees as "A little knot of religious fanatics infesting Jerusalem and vicinity." Such is my understanding. To disprove this Dr. Horne says: "The Pharisees were the most numerous, distinguished and popular sect among the Jews." Well, both things are true. Dr. Horne uses the word "sect" in the sense Josephus uses it. A "philosophical sect" or school. Yaxoo City is ten times as large as any other town within five miles of it, but that does not prove it to be a very large city.

Now, how large was this sect? I know of no better information than is derived from Josephus' history. He was himself a Pharisee, and we know his disposition to exaggerate in numbers when writing about numbers with which he was associated. For instance, his eleven hundred thousand Jews killed at the capture of Jerusalem by the Romans!

Josephus says that in the time of the presidency of that great statesman, Hillel, and the reign of that wonderful woman, Alexandra, both of whom were Pharisees, the "sect," under their patronage and influence, increased greatly in numbers and rapidly rose in strength. So wonderfully rapid was this increase just then, that they reached numerically to "above six thousand." Ant. B. 17, ch. 11.

Now, six thousand among seven millions is not a handful—certainly not more than a very small one. And as to their chronological existence, it might well be compared to Jonah's gourd. Hillel was born B. C. 112. His death is uncertain (its date), but it is said he was eighty years old in the prime of his influence as President of the Sanhedrim. This would place this great swell in the numerical strength of the Pharisees at about twenty years before the birth of Christ. And Hymenaeus, who was high priest from 156 to 166 B. C., invited the Pharisees to dine with him, and they behaved very well at the table! So says Josephus. The length of the table and number of sittings is not given!—See Ant. B. 13, ch. x. 5. And yet they were the largest "sect." Perhaps they numbered 50 in 110 B. C. Perhaps 20.

While there is some very doubtful historical allusion to the existence of some literary school supposed to be something from which the Pharisees sprang as early as 200 or 250 B. C., there is no reliable history that I know of that would give them a score of numerical strength, or not much more, until the time of Hillel and Alexandra's rule, about twenty years or so before the birth of Christ.

Now, partly to repeat what I said in my former article, The statement of Matthew authorizes the belief that God commissioned some men to announce the incarnation of Christ to the world. No living man ever exercised ministerial functions so transcendently responsible, sublime and vital to mankind, except Moses in the first of Genesis. And that for this service the whole church should be passed by and some ignorant strolling idolaters selected, would seem to require some proof. The expression "in the East," throws some proof on the other side. The term "Wise Men" proves something also on the other side, for idolaters with no knowledge of God could not be called wise in a religious sense, as compared with enlightened Christians intimately conversant with every paragraph in the Old Testament. I do not know that the Wise Men were Grecian Jews, though it looks likely. But I am still unconvinced, and for the above reason, that the very first worshippers of Christ, right there in the middle of the church, were idolaters.

R. ANDREY.

There is an entire different theory of this passage in Matthew that has some plausible appearance, and has never been suggested so far as I know, and may possibly be looked at at some future time.

A Christian should never be troubled because he is asked to give, if he cannot give he may well be sorry; but if does not wish to give he ought to be more than sorry—he should be alarmed. Lack of money is by no means so bad as the lack of a disposition to contribute of what one has. A man often shuts the door in the face of his best friend when he shuts off an appeal to his benevolence.—N. Y. Witness.

"The Old Mother Church."

MR. EDITOR: I presume that no intelligent and historically well read minister or layman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, will assert that it is "the old Mother Church" of American Methodism. Yet many preachers and laymen, for proselytizing purposes, ever since our separation from the Northern division of the M. E. Church in 1845, and especially since the war between the States, have been persistently talking, preaching and writing that the Northern wing of the M. E. Church in the United States is "the old church;" and have been constantly urging the less informed among us, and especially the Southern negroes, to return to the "warm bosom of the Mother Church;" and this has been, in many places, their most successful plan for misleading and proselyting the less intelligent of our people, and especially our once large colored membership. But whether this misrepresentation of facts is the result of ignorance or malice, it is nevertheless a gross misrepresentation. Methodism was successfully introduced into Maryland between 1760 and 1765, and soon overspread the colony. It also soon penetrated into Virginia, the two Carolinas and Georgia, so that by 1780 we had many strongholds of Methodism in all these colonies. In 1783 it went westward through the Holston country to Middle Tennessee, and soon after into Kentucky. From and after 1766 there was Methodist preaching in New York, New Jersey, Philadelphia and Delaware, but its success was limited as compared to its success in the Southern colonies above mentioned. All the annual conferences previous to 1787 were held in Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina, and the colonies further South, until May 25th, 1789, one was held in New York. At this date New York had only 200 white and 70 colored members. Beyond New York, up to 1790, there were no Methodists in the New England States. Mr. B. Andrus, one of the early Western missionaries, had once visited Boston, preached a few times and formed a small society, but he left and had no successor until his little society became extinct. Freeborn Garretson, traveling to and from his mission in Nova Scotia, preached a few sermons in Boston, but formed no society. With these two exceptions there was no Methodist preaching in all New England until 1790, when Jesse Lee, with four colleagues, went from Virginia and thereabout as missionaries to the land of the Puritans. In the face of greater opposition than they had ever met in the South, they were soon successful in forming numerous strong churches among the Puritans. On June 26, 1790, in the city of Lynn, the first Methodist Church ever built in Massachusetts was dedicated. On August 28, 1795, the corner-stone of the first Methodist church in Boston was laid. The first Methodist society formed in Connecticut was in Stratford, and consisted of three women. Soon after the first Methodist church in the State of Connecticut was built at the same place. This was in the fall of 1788. From these beginnings Methodism began to spread in New England and continued prosperous to the present time. But, Mr. Editor, I ask your readers to notice the fact that Methodism was in a prosperous state all over the Southern colonies and States for twenty years before it got into New England, and the Southern churches had to send all the first preachers to establish Methodism in New England.

In no capricious spirit I will conclude by asking the question, Which division of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America has the preference right to be called "the old Mother Church?" I will not answer my question. I am opposed to all such foolish, invidious distinctions. As Methodists our work is, I trust, fully in hand and before us; and as we are brethren beloved in each of the grand divisions of the great American Methodist family, let us dwell together in unity and be true yoke-fellows in pushing forward the triumphs of the gospel of peace. I have written the above historical facts with the printer's minutes from 1773, and other authentic histories of our church before me.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

MR. EDITOR: Let me second and emphasize some words from the pen of Bro. W. S. Lagrone, in his note published in the ADVOCATE of February 18. "Our Conference did wisely when it recommended the appointment of an agent for the 'Grenada Collegiate Institute.' The time has come when our zeal for the cause of Christian education should show itself in something permanent, else we will get a rebuke from which we will not soon, if ever, recover."

Bro. Lagrone does not over-estimate the value of that property at $40,000. It can be secured to fee simple to our church for $1000. We have more than thirty thousand members on the North Mississippi Conference. Say that ten thousand of these are of legal age and pay. One dollar from each of them would pay the debt, put on some valuable repairs, buy needed apparatus in physical science, and put in the school a useful collection of books. That would make a centre of educational force which would radiate its powerful influence to all parts of the Conference in all forms of our Christian life and work. The school is one of the instruments in the hands of the church for saving the souls of men, and for lifting them to the plane and the conditions of the only consummate civilization. The church must never surrender her right or her efforts to have her own schools. We are all agreed on this. Our sentiments are good enough, but what of our actions? We have an opportunity now which we cannot afford to let slip. This is not a school on paper, but in actual operation, under a management which has achieved valuable success and shown the school to be a practicable enterprise. Two of our most active, earnest men are given to that work—one as president, the other as agent. Why not rally at once to the support of this cause, and sweep away the debt which must hinder the free course and full energy of the enterprise? We can do this without any breach of interest or consistency towards the valuable school under our care at Aberdeen. The two schools are not rivals, but co-laborers. They are located in separate centres of influence and patronage, and will each serve an imperative demand in our educational work. A ready response to the opportunity and the duty now upon us will bring invaluable good in many ways. It will give us the happiness of having done something for a noble enterprise; it will quicken love and energy to do more, for the more one works in free effort the more he wishes to work, and vice versa. It will give us a school that will grow with the growth of a section of the State and of the Conference which no other school can so well command, and for which we must efficiently care. I forbear now to mention many facts which make the present call one of grave importance to us in the development and thoroughness of our work. We must escape that "rebuke from which we will not soon, if ever, recover."

A Good Thing.

MR. EDITOR: You are always glad to give notice of good things. It is for this reason that for once I go out of my usual line. I wish to say that Mr. W. S. H. Wallis has a good thing in the way of stereopticon scenes. He has two sets of views particularly interesting, viz: "Scenes in and around Jerusalem," and "A Thousand Miles up the River Nile." I think one who has never seen either the Holy Land or the land of the Pharisees can hardly get a better opportunity of seeing at least a score or two of the most notable places in each. The views are photographs remarkable for their clearness and softness of tint.

Mr. Wallis is a gentleman of fine and generous character, open and free from every kind of clap-net. Our people were delighted with his entertainment, and many regretted that on the first night they failed to attend. I heartily say to any people where he may exhibit, Go to the exhibition the first night, and I think then you will attend the second without any insistence.

JACKSON, LA., Feb. 20, 1886.

Rev. Sam Jones.

This remarkable man continues to be an extraordinary sensation. He shows no lack of resources to meet the growing demands upon him. Those who prophesied his early eclipse are studying anew the secret of his strange power. His papers are full of him and his words. His sayings are on every tongue from the newsboy on the street to the dignified jurist on the bench. He continues to draw. His last meeting, conducted in Cincinnati, was the most successful of his evangelistic career. Hundreds were converted and the great city was moved. It is reported that fully 40,000 persons sought to hear his last sermon after preaching there every consecutive day for three weeks. He is now in Chicago, with every prospect of great success.

Dr. Arthur Edwards, editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, Chicago, was recently in Cincinnati, heard the great evangelist, and thus graphically describes him:

"The Cincinnati sermons we heard were marvels of simplicity, directness, yearning tenderness, and manifest sincerity. The most ignorant adult and a child could understand every word and sentence and the trend of discussion. Nobody ever saw a more devouring, eager audience. Men were convinced of sin and trembled in the presence of the truth preached with suchunction. It was almost palpable that God was present. We could not perceive new that the word of God was compelling the people to silent conviction. Between sentences the house was as still as death. Men seemed to be speechless though helpless as sent as the earnest speaker—now by exposition, now by appeal, now by citation of the record, now by droll but pungent humor, now by denunciation, and now by tender invitation and beseeching—presented the case as between God and the sinner. The service was indeed wonderfully effective, and at its close many sought Christ. It was clear that the results might easily be greater. Mr. Jones does not seem to be a general in gathering fruits from among the tormented and impressed crowds. Some better system of after-meetings is needed, and we believe our Chicago preparations will have respect to that need. On every hand we heard of Mr. Jones' utter refusal to flatter his zeal with solicitude about money. He said repeatedly in Cincinnati that he had no anxiety or care as to dollars, and that he simply wished for enough for daily bread for himself and family. He has, we understand no merchandise or partnership in hymn books or 'lives,' or printed sermons, save that as to the sermons, his friends print them, and that the moderate proceeds benefit the evangelist's family. Even the card about the alleged pirated Chicago edition of sermons was just about compelled from Mr. Jones by those who assume reasonable care of his family. Those who have been repelled and almost shocked by some of Mr. Jones' sermon passages, will not, we think, be shocked when they hear such expressions from his own lips. 'The most pungent, unusual, and terrific remark seems to fit exactly into its place in the speech of this earnest and direct man. We can but hope that the coming Chicago meetings may forward the church's work throughout the northwest. We can not escape utter conviction that the two evangelists are men of God, raised up to work which is genuine and vital, even if unique and sometimes startling. With this permission we open our hand, heart, and constituency to them. Whether men will heed the truth, or not, is not our concern. Having heard the truth, shocked are, put upon their own responsibility and our souls are delivered. God will care for his messages to men. Our sole duty is to cry aloud and spare not."

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1886.

Conservation should not abate with the waste of years. It is the strength of youth and the crown of age. Nothing is more beautiful, or helpful to the cause of Christ, than an aged Christian sweet-spirited and full of zeal for the Master.

A vain man's motto is: "Win gold and wear it," a generous man's: "Win gold and share it," a miser's: "Win gold and spare it," a prodigal's: "Win gold and spend it," a trader's: "Win gold and lend it," a gambler's: "Win gold and lose it," a wise man's: "Win gold and use it."

The Churchman credits the late Earl Shaftesbury with this utterance: "If I, indeed, did not have five hundred city missionaries, it would require forty thousand more police." Thus the testimony of the world answers to that of Christ, the church and the word is for the betterment of all men.

Hon. William E. Gladstone, the Premier of England, not only looks after the interests of State in a manner that attracts attention to his masterly statesmanship, but is also using his vigorous brain and pen in a way to make the disciples of the Huxleyan school realize that all wisdom is not incarnated in the meshes of a sickly disbelief in the plain teaching of God's word. May the Spirit of the Highest guide this honored soldier of the cross to victory in this contest with the Philistine Goliath.

A correspondent to the Watchman from Montreal says: "No Carnival here this winter! This is one of the few good things we owe to the small-pox." If indeed, the Christian men and women, who spend their money attending the Carnival and absorbing its evil effects upon a sound morality, will give the same amount to the spread of the gospel or to its support at home, they will realize that the Lord has brought out of this affliction of a single city a blessing for the world. It might be well, in this regard, if a few of the elites in the Southwest could boast that Christians would not spend the Lord's money this season, witnessing their sinful follies.

This item is going the rounds of the religious press:

"Since the year 1833, the Presbyterian Church has received into its ministry two hundred and thirty ordained ministers from other churches; sixty-four in 1833, eighty-five in 1834, and eighty-one in 1835."

A more alarming statement of the condition of the Presbyterian Church we have not seen anywhere. Where is the spiritual maternity, of that grand old church that she no longer bears and trains prophets for this Lord as in other days? Is it marital infidelity or sad sterility that afflicts the "Lamb's wife"? Alas! for a church when she ceases to bring forth and nurture children. There ought to be fasting and prayer on that subject. If the figures above quoted be correct there is reason for deep humiliation before God.

Rev. Joseph Arch, recently elected to the House of Commons and appointed by Mr. Gladstone a member of his Cabinet, is a local Methodist preacher. At a dinner, given him as the representative of the agricultural laborers, Mr. Chamberlain in introducing him said:

"The natural gift of eloquence marked him out as the leader of a popular movement, but it was the possession of higher and nobler qualities which gained for him the affection, the confidence, and the support of the great mass of those whom he has sought to serve, and which have placed him now in the proud position of the first representative of the English peasantry in the House of Commons. * * * Is it not a singular thing that, of all the great movements which have abated the claims of privilege or destroyed the power of tyrants, which have freed the nation or classes from servitude and oppression, or raised the condition of the great mass of the people, there is scarcely one which has owned anything to the initiative or encouragement of the great ecclesiastical organization which lays claim to exclusive national authority and support?"

Editorial Correspondence.

We have had the pleasure of spending several days in the city of Memphis attending the anniversary of the Board of Church Extension. En route thither we stopped at the charming little town of Omo and paid a promised visit to our excellent friend, Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, the pastor of our church there. He lives in a beautiful parsonage home, and preaches in a tasteful church to a cultured congregation. By previous arrangement and engagement, we rode out five miles to "Hollywood," the delightful, palatial home of Mrs. Dandridge, during the day. That place wears a fresher and more emphatic expression of the far-famed Southern residence than any we have seen for a decade, and more, of years. Mrs. Dandridge is a member of the large family of McTee's in that section, and a niece of the late Judge Edward McGehee, of Woodville. We shall long remember the pleasure of that day, and hereby thank Dr. Sullivan for his thoughtful kindness. A talk on temperance at night and much agreeable communion with the parsonage household filled up the measure of a pleasant day. At eight o'clock on Saturday morning our journey northward to the "Bluff City" was resumed.

We arrived in time to attend the first morning session of the anniversary meeting. Bishop McTee was present and presided; but, much to the regret of all, Bishop Hargrove was absent, having been detained in Colorado on important business of the church. The day was exceedingly inclement and the attendance small, but the proceedings were full of interest and profit. Bishop McTee recalled the fact that fourteen years before, almost to the hour, a smaller company, on a drearier day, met in that same room, and projected an enterprise that developed into the Vanderbilt University. The fruits of that day's deliberations will long bless the generations of Southern Methodists. Besides the resident pastors and some prominent laymen, the following were present from abroad: Rev. Dr. Morton, secretary; Rev. J. C. Morris, Dr. Morrison, of Russellville, Ky., Dr. W. T. Harris, of Union City, Tenn., and the writer. The subject considered was "Work Already Done," which was presented with clearness and force by Rev. J. C. Morris, followed by general discussion. We will not anticipate the full and more accurate report of the secretary, which will be presented to the General Conference, by giving any figures or detailed statements, but we feel assured that the church will rejoice in the grand achievements of the Board's first quadrennium. Besides the direct aid to churches by loans and donations, the administration of the Board has awakened interest in all departments of church work and developed a more intelligent denominational loyalty.

The afternoon session was devoted to "Methods of Work," at which time Dr. Morton explained at length the careful and correct business plans and principles the Board has adopted. We were glad to know that the "loan fund" had grown so rapidly and that it was being handled so skillfully. It is kept actively at work, only a small amount ever remaining in the treasury for any length of time.

At the evening meeting Bishop McTee made the leading address. He made some timely points on the church as an educator of reverence, and presented them in a forceful, suggestive way. We shall look for that address to appear in tract form before long. It will prove wholesome reading. Remarks were also made by Drs. Morton, Mahon and Steel, after which the following resolutions were adopted unanimously, and at the request of Bishop McTee, by a rising vote:

Resolved, That we have heard with great gratification the reports of work already done by the Board of Church Extension. It has rendered timely and valuable aid toward the erecting of churches in many parts of our wide connection, and has already signally demonstrated the wisdom of its organization. It has awakened a spirit of enterprise in the general church, and has encouraged more careful, accurate methods of securing titles to all our property. We take pleasure in bearing testimony to the great work already achieved by this youngest of our Connec-tional Boards, and commend the cause to the confidence, prayers and liberality of the church.

Resolved, That the affairs of the Board have been conducted with eminent satisfaction and according to the best business principles and methods. The administration of its chief executive officer, the Rev. David Morton, D. D., deserves special commendatory mention. To his organizing ability and judicious, untiring labor, the church is largely indebted for the marked success of this important enterprise.

J. C. MORRIS,
R. H. MAHON.

On the Sabbath the pulpits of our churches were filled by visiting ministers. We worshiped at Hernando Street in the morning and heard an edifying sermon from Dr. H. C. Morrison. In the afternoon there was another general meeting, with an address on "Church Extension in Relation to Denominational Interests," by the writer. Having to exhort for Dr. Mahon, at Central Church, in the evening, we failed to hear Dr. Morrison's address at First Church. It was reported to us as most admirable and eloquent.

We shared with Dr. Morrison the delightful hospitality of Sister Cochran, on Poplar Street. That is a Methodist home worthy of the mother of the Wesleys. And it is doubted if the children of this "matriarch of Methodism" showed her more reverence than do the sons and daughters of this household.

With many thanks for courtesies extended by the brethren, and regrets that our stay should be so brief, we started southward on Monday afternoon.

"A Little Sectarian Unfairness."

The Nashville American of February 23, contains an editorial article with the above heading. It is an arraignment of this Advocate and our Texas conferees for some recent references to a swell wedding at Bishop Quintard's home at Sewanee. This account of the affair—wines, "carpet dance," and all—we saw in the columns of the American, and from the pen of its own correspondent. After quoting from the Texas and New Orleans Christian Advocates some extracts, the American proceeds to say:

The wedding above referred to was that of the daughter of Bishop Quintard. The report of it, from which the above quotations are made, was published in The American of the twenty-third ultimo, from a correspondent at Sewanee. The report was well prepared, barring certain exaggerations to which society chroniclers are sometimes addicted. We were subsequently apprised of one or two careless misstatements on the part of the correspondent and were requested to correct them by the friends of that city, but, concluding that they were not likely to be misunderstood by intelligent readers, we took the responsibility of not giving further publicity to them by correcting so obvious a misstatement. The uncharitable comments of the two Christian editors of Louisiana and Texas render it necessary now to say that the American's correspondent was in error. There was no "carpet dance" (whatever that may mean), or dancing of any kind on the occasion. Neither were there any "rare wines" at this wedding dinner, but only the very common native wines of the Cumberland Mountain vineyards, purchasable at the very rare price of one dollar per gallon.

We regret that the inventions of the American's correspondents should have subjected Bishop Quintard to such Pharisaical criticisms from "brethren of the cloth," of another sect. The secular press, with all its badness is freer from that sort of narrowness.

A few words of comment may be in order:

1. We supposed so republish a paper as The American would not misrepresent a Bishop or carelessly misstate facts. Of course we concluded that there was wine drinking and "carpet dance" at Bishop Quintard's or The American would not have said so. And the mors were satisfied of the accuracy of the statement because the kind of dance was specified—it was a "carpet dance." None of our ordinary dances.

2. We quite agree with the American that the facts stated "were not likely to be misunderstood by intelligent readers." Of course not. A reputable journal published that there was a "carpet dance" with accompaniments at Bishop Quintard's residence. A misunderstanding was impossible.

3. How The American can charge us with "uncharitable comments" and Pharisaical criticism, we can not understand. Is it uncharitable to obey the scriptural injunction, to warn a brother and not suffer sin upon him? Is it uncharitable to expose error and thereby save the church from open shame? The American certainly knows the distinction between a sickly sentimentality and Christian charity. And as to "Pharisaical criticisms," our conferees must have used those words because they were handy. It is so easy to call one a Pharisee and then it sounds so very broad and liberal! O no, the secular press is not chargeable with "that sort of narrowness." It is free from "the narrowness" of the gospel. We haven't made this way any narrower than did the Savior himself. But this trouble with some of the "secular press," and secular Christians as well, is that the narrowness of the Bible annoys them.

4. The American says its correspondent was in error—betook himself to "inventions." There was no "carpet dance." Wears delighted to hear it, on the Bishop's own account, for the sake of the church he represents, and the gospel he preaches. And The American farther says there were no "rare wines" at the wedding dinner, but, only the Cumberland Mountain wines, purchasable at a dollar a gallon." So it's all right for a Bishop to drink wine if it costs only a dollar a gallon. Is that The American's casuality? Despite the charge of uncharitableness and Pharisaism, Christian ministers must plead for gospel temperance, which is total abstinence. Men can not preach a pure gospel and tipple wine. That day has past. The Christian sentiment of the hour demands a ministry that tastes not the unclean thing.

Young People and Church.

The relation of the church to the young is manifestly that of teacher to those taught. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." But they can not be taught unless they place themselves within the reach of the appointed teacher. It is a lamentable fact that among the millions of the young, especially young men, a very small proportion attend church. They have largely drifted away. According to recent statistics furnished by the Young Men's Christian Association it is estimated that but 15 per cent. of the young men of this country attend church with any regularity, that only 5 per cent. are church members and that 75 per cent. never go to church at all. They are rarely seen at the weekly devotional services and early graduates from the Sunday-school into all but total indifference. It certainly appears from this statement that the church is waging a very unequal fight against the competitive establishments which open wide their doors to welcome the great army of these young men, who turn with impatient resistance from the divine influences and sacred associations of the sanctuary.

The saloons, billiard rooms, gambling dens and other places even worse, do not suffer for want of patronage. These are the festive places where congregate the vast majorities of the young men of the land. What is to be done? Is the church to retire from the field altogether or is it to resort to some other expedient by which it possible to resist the current which is carrying so many into ruin?

The New York Independent, never at a loss to say something, and always sufficiently independent to be beyond the domination of prevalent has this to say concerning "the great failure of our churches, ordinarily, to find the people." "This we may safely say, that, if the church does not reach the masses, it is from a lack of enterprise. When old methods fail, instead of seeking new ones, it is the church's business to apply Christ's teaching to the new social problems of the day which common people are interested in. If there is a new infidelity or social philosophy coming up, it is the duty of the pulpit to be in haste to grasp what is true in it, which it is misusing and to show how this may serve, rather than oppose Christ. How little enterprise is shown in hundreds of evening services held in our cities before empty pews! The streets are full of people who want to go to an interesting evening service. * * *

The fault is not all with the street people, but in good part with the lack of enterprise in the churches, which do not take pains to make their services attractive." We have recently had the opportunity of witnessing the character of religious services which attracts the multitudes. When an audience of three thousand men assemble ostensibly to attend a religious service, it means there must be something present which arouses a much deeper interest than is easily felt. It may be the man that draws them or the method which enthralls them. It is doubtless both. It must be remembered, however, that these services are generally preceded by widely extended public notices that such meetings are to be held. The best available singers are secured and the most inspiring, popular, sacred songs are employed. There is a service of song preliminary to the preaching, which is itself delightful and attractive.

The Christian workers are ready, by sympathy and prayer, to counsel those who, by personal solicitation, in most instances, have been induced to come. The singing is hushed and fervent, short prayer is offered for the blessing of God upon the service. Again the voice of song catches the ear and listlessness is gradually worn away. Another prayer and yet more singing. Now man of God rises. In a minute he is into the very heart of the theme. Time is precious. The objective point of the sermon is apparent to all. To win souls for Christ is the inspiration of the song, prayer and preaching. Worship does not seem to be the object of the hour. The Spirit of conviction is there. The inquiry meeting follows. It is informal. The awakened ask for light, and the experienced Christian is there to tell whences it cometh. In all this there is a lesson to the churches. Methods are good only as they accomplish the objects designed by their use. It is unfortunate that they should ever become inflexible or stereotyped.

The best teacher adapts methods to the nature and capacities of the one taught. The church must reach the young. It needs them, and they need it. May not some way be discovered of interesting them in the truth? Why not announce a weekly young people's meeting, and give them something to write and talk about? Let them sing for their own entertainment. Intersperse the exercises with music, instrumental and vocal. Appoint some one gifted with elocutionary talent to recite or read. To another, who is thoughtful, religious and ready of pen, assign a spiritual topic. Select a subject which will be sure to excite attention. After a ten minutes essay, invite impromptu remarks. Some visiting Christian may accept the invitation and lead the thought into the channel of personal experience. If not, effect an arrangement in advance with two or three competent speakers, male or female, to speak upon the subject. Let the remarks be brief and pointed. Then let the pastor follow in a short address, bringing the subject to a personal application. Drive the nail in a sure place. This becomes a rare opportunity. Every ear is open. The spirit of inquiry has become excited. Some word or truth may be lodged in some heart that will bring forth precious fruit. The irreligious will be attracted. Some who never attend distinctively religious meetings will become constant attendants and will be among the most pleased listeners. Some of them will be caught for Christ. A word of comfort, of warning, of hope—who knows?—may be the key-note of a new life. The writer has demonstrated the success of this method and, therefore, speaks with no hesitation concerning the large benefits which may accrue. To diversify the exercises, and still further intensify the interest, select a question for debate. Let it be moral or religious. Always have some great moral point at issue. This stimulates study, and gradually interests the young in questions about which they would otherwise have no thought. From such meetings many find it an easy step into the Sunday service. Thus the desire after a religious life is unconsciously begotten, and many of the young who had been supposed beyond the reach of religious impressions, are brought to a consecration of themselves to Christ.

"The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light," said the Master. It may be true concerning the methods of winning the young which largely obtain. The church must be made attractive to them. It must show itself in sympathy with their needs and youthful minds. It does not help the matter to say it is not the province of the church to please or supply amusements to the young. If they are to live in the church, then the church must environ their social, business and religious life.

S. H. W.

The minister of education in Canada has prepared a book of Scriptures lessons for the common schools. When we reflect on the relation of the Scriptures to education and literature, this wonder is that the book of books is not more extensively used in our own schools, both Church and State.

The London Times gives out that our mother, across the waters, is in hearty sympathy with Senator Edmunds' Mormon Bill, and other efforts on our part to rid this Christian age of the foul blot of the Utah spirit and practices. The heaven of Christian purity is rapidly taking possession of the heart of the world.

A London evangelist declares that, "If ninety per cent. of the Christians in London were to die at once, they would never be missed in church work, except in the matter of pew rents." Alas! how many there are in our own communion, who never helped a soul to Christ, and have no definite mission of soul saving before them.

Mr. Spurgeon says he has suffered many things because of the deceptions practiced on him by his brethren in the use of "To conclude, finally, lastly, one word more and I am done, another blessed thought, etc." He says one speaker said, "one word more and I am done," and the reporters found, when the word was written down, it contained fifteen hundred syllables. The same speaker would say, "a single remark," and then talk fifteen minutes. Those English preachers must have queer (?) ways.

Evangelical Repentance.

BY REV. J. B. A. ADAMS, D. D.

Papists erroneously hold that repentance is a sacrament. 1. The sacraments were instituted by Christ and hence constitute a precious peculiarity of the new covenant, whereas repentance was equally obligatory under the old as well as under the new covenant. 2. Repentance is not a means of grace for the upbuilding of faith, but the ground-work for it. 3. Repentance has no outward sign and seal of the inner, spiritual grace. That man found no place for repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears, should not induce us to believe that Calvinistic speculations are founded in fact. The meaning is, that man could not prevail upon his father to revoke the blessing bestowed on Jacob. Tenderly he entreated his father to do so, but without avail.

The Greek words which in English are translated "repentance" do not mean the same thing. The one signifies—painfully learning better after the commission of the deed; hence, sorrow on account of sin, i. e., contrition of heart. The other word adds to this reversion of sentiment, the conversion—turning away from sin to God. In II Cor. vii, 10, both words occur. Godly sorrow, a synonym for contrition of heart, results in repentance to salvation. Here the word is used which expresses turning away from sin. At this stage of repentance salvation is ensured and hence, "not to be repented of." Here the word is used expressing reversion of sentiment. Nay, no one ever regretted that afflictions, together with the word of God, caused a reversion of sentiment and revulsion of feeling in regard to sin, enlivening in turning away from sin to God; for right there and then the light of the other world shone forth into the soul, filling it with celestial splendor.

Like everything else of great value, repentance has its counterfeit. It is the offspring of the sorrow of the world. Anything which falls short of turning away from sin to God is not evangelical repentance. There may be spasmodic reversion of sentiment and even reversion of feeling in regard to sin, even reformation may ensue; yet, if said reversion, reversion and reformation were brought about by a sorrow because of sin per se; in other words, should said reversion, reversion and reformation be simply the result of apprehending and, perhaps, experiencing the dire consequences of sin, and not as sin affecting the righteous Judge, our heavenly Father, the outcome is not evangelical repentance, for it was wrought by the sorrow of the world. Many lament their want, but not the prodigality which led thereto. Thousands bewail their want of health, but not their intemperance and excesses which sapped their constitution of the necessary marrow. Not a few grieve over the loss of influence, but not over their lack of veracity, honesty and magnanimity which caused and pre-empted said loss. Such sorrow, on account of the grievous consequences, not on account of sin itself, is the sorrow of this world preceding eternal darkness and death.

Evangelical repentance sees sin in all its heinous hideousness. Soon the penitent soul laments: "Against thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight." "There is no soundness in me because of thine anger." Conscience sorely troubled, the penitent sinner confesses with David: "My heart is smitten and withered like grass."

Repentance is not, meritorious in itself. Though you should grieve yourself to death on account of your sin, that grief would not secure forgiveness for you. Judas Iscariot could endure the anguish of soul no longer; in utter despair he took his life. But, though not meritorious, it is nevertheless indispensable. It is the natural and fitting expression of our sorrow for having transgressed God's holy law. It indicates our abhorrence of sin. It manifests our compliance with the will of God, which makes repentance obligatory. It causes us to understand the plan of salvation. It demonstrates that our hope of salvation has its sole basis in Jesus.

The intensity of repentance is not in all the same, though, perhaps, equally genuine. Its duration also differs with different persons. Bold intensity and duration of repentance are dependant on the will of God, on the enormity of our transgression, as well as on our temporary mental make-up. It presses God, sometimes to allow a soul to wither in great agony for days and weeks ere forgiveness is secured; others find pardon without such exceedingly torture. It stands to reason that the Prodigal Son's brother, repenting, could not be agitated like the returning wanderer. Neither would, for instance, St. John, repenting, be demonstrative as St. Peter. You would like to repent of your

Do not say that the one that holdeth all
Who came to Jesus at his loving call,
Realized the words he spoke in days of old—
"I've other sleep which is not of this fold."

The Pharisee is narrow in his range,
Exclusive, as with him is never strange;
The golden rule, it seems, he never knew,
His breadth of knowledge only of the Jew.

Remove the bars that ring the gate;
Break down the walls, make wide your Lord's estate;
Make black and white your neighbor, friend,
Visit the poor, to lowly ones attend.

Have we not read our Master's sacred word—
"The one that serves is not above his Lord"?
Glad like him, and as he goes, say,
Forgive the wrong, walk in the better way.

Do not say that in narrow limits dwell
A few who shrink from their Lord's will;
Glad for their faith which makes a new world,
And black fresh blood in an open field.

Remove with care the treasure of the mind,
Glad will we in thought which comes of any kind,
And while we gather in from day to day,
Glad the good, and cast the bad away.

When trials come, and foes enclose you round,
Like an eagle's nest, and an eagle's sound,
And a voice like the whirlwind, and a voice like the rain,
And a voice like the storm, and a voice like the rain.

Out of the din there comes a call to thee:
"Do not say, I have a Lord and a friend,"
Glad by the way the peace and grace has given,
Till thou shalt reach the latter gate of heaven.

—Zion's Herald.

Notes from Kansas City, Mo.

BY REV. JOHN MATTHEWS, D. D.

Sir William Jones, a lawyer, one may suppose, had a broad moral outlook when he divided his hours so systematically and wisely—"seven hours to law; to soothing slumber, seven; ten to the world about, and all to heaven." This man did not live in Kansas City. Here there is so much vim and push men are like birds in a grove, hardly know on which limb to light—if light at all. Were one to describe the incessant business energy, many would regard the statements as the North Carolinians did Bishop Hargrove's California perambulation story. The Bishop felt impelled to prove his statement, and did so by sending on an immense perambulation. As we can not send our great activities, the subject will be dropped.

On church lines, for months past, our city has kept abreast with business energy. A large religious element has been kept under whip and spur. It must be confessed, no one can keep pace with the demand without losing sleep, neglecting prayer, and, in a sense, losing sight of heaven. One grows bewildered and is tempted to cry out: "Lost, lost, amidst a blaze of light!"

It is well to confess that a certain phase of religiousness may be overdone. An overdose of pound cake has a bad effect. It is said of Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, "He arose in his determination to make the young hearts around him as conscious of moral power as they were of other forms of life and being." Had he taught in this "great West," it is probable he would have failed.

The religious world is kept at about as high tension here as the business and political forms of movement.

Indeed, all over Missouri there has been fever heat in many churches, and that kind of heat is not always health giving. Notwithstanding the deliverance of the General Conference of 1885, the whole country is crying out for evangelists. The ordinary workmen are considered inadequate, and the coming of the evangelist is prayed for. There is a church in my eye now, where at a class meeting for a year from one to eight persons professed conversion, and three hundred accessions resulted from the ordinary labors of the year; yet brethren were constantly in their public prayers and private talks intimating there was no revival of God's work. In this city churches are multiplying, and membership largely increasing in all the denominations. This is not satisfactory; evangelists were imported and a temporary fire created; but no extensive work has been developed. It is difficult to recall all the names of these celebrities. Varley, an English evangelist, was invited. He was nobody in the Scriptures. He called things by their right names. As a sermonizer he was a failure; but his Bible readings were valuable. He kept things stirring for a few weeks. He was unlike Sam Jones, who goes for the men tomahawk in hand, Varley had a mission to the sisters. Whew! how he slugged them! The for dew and filled the air. For a period things were at a white heat. We hardly had time to get back into the ruts when the cry was heard—Moody is coming! Moody is coming! Yes, he agreed to visit Kansas City on condition of union of effort upon this part of ministers. Time was spent in getting all ministers into line, committees at work and a place to contain the multitude. Money was expended, prayer meetings in a measure demoralized and ordinary Christian labor suspended in anticipation of a work being done on the wholesale principle. The expected day arrived and Moody appeared! He talked like the man of God that he is. There was no self-glorying, nothing but the spirit of Christ in his words and methods. Great crowds thronged to hear him. The religious community was under high pressure and at fever heat. On Sunday morning to secure seats some went so early that family worship was put aside and private prayer omitted. No one would fall to honor Mr. Moody. He gives forth no uncertain sound for Christ; but one is tempted to rise up, as did Dr. Wayland in an association of Baptists who had been discussing orthodoxy of work, and ask, "Is there any Holy Ghost?" Not one of these good men can do effective work unless supplemented by the Divine Spirit.

After a season a new evangelist appeared in the form of a woman—no doubt a good and useful one. Mrs. Richardson is the least objectionable female preacher I have met. Her labors covered weeks, and our Northern brethren of the Danvers Place Church had a number of accessions. Then the Southern Presbyterians brought an evangelist, who preached with mental strength and deep earnestness, wrestling with the deep problems connected with the atonement made by Christ. He did that church good, and some were added to the Lord.

Our Centenary Church, on Lyilla avenue, imported Louis Mysonbier, literally a boy preacher, aged twenty-two years, small of stature and delicate in structure. He carries a good face, and his manner is simple and unpretentious. His spirit and bearing impressed one that he sought to glorify Christ. His sermons, if we may call his talks by that name, did not create special interest. His urgency, coupled with his efficiency, added to his efficiency. He was not bolder in the least. During his twenty minutes' sermon he passed from one side of the platform to the other, with rapidity, and, without exhortation, abruptly closed; then a certain kind of generalship followed. When the meeting closed (the papers stated) one hundred and fifty professed conversions. His power is mostly over children, and of the one hundred applicants for membership one remarked the great number of little people.

The Presbyterians then imported Dr. McKee, of Kentucky, who labored in two of their churches. After this another Presbyterian, named Dr. Thayer, has opened here.

It seems these evangelists have not satisfied, only whetted the appetite, and the cry is, "Send for Sam Jones," and all along the line is heard the cry, "Sam Jones! Sam Jones!" Our papers have announced his coming. Rev. J. C. Morris, of Walnut Street church, was given as authority for the statement. Do these facts indicate a morbid or a normal religious condition?

Do not infer that I am opposed to evangelists. When the General Conference pronounced against them, some years ago, my judgment stood over against the united wisdom of that General Conference. However, as usual, I kept my mouth shut. Evangelists are not only useful, but necessary. True, I have never had one, by invitation, to assist me, but stand ready to employ one when the way is open. They draw special attention to the subject of religion by novelty of style or method, as did Wesley and his co-workers. It is to be hoped that our people will not put the poor pastor with things and cuts while waiting for the special messenger.

To change the theme, let a statement reach the eye of your readers. Letters from Missouri are frequently found in our Advocates in reference to the movements of our church. Chapman and Bolling write largely; so do others, and readers wonder why nothing is said about St. Louis and the other extreme, Kansas City. Writers from our section say nothing about the centre. The readers must remember Missouri is an empire. Our own church has three Conferences in the State, and each writer represents simply his own Conference. So far as my information extends, our church is prospering in each Conference.

If you ask after our work in Kansas City, the answer is to this effect: The churches are doing well. The new preachers sent to us are doing well and long for great results. The growth of the city is still a marvel. We could build one or two more churches with advantage to our cause. The pastors in our leading churches are expected to move in new enterprises. The writer no longer stands where he is expected to launch a new enterprise, having been appointed in charge of what Mrs. Watkins, of Mexican fame, calls "Washington Street Mission." It takes all of one's time to keep a mission well in hand. During my long and roving ministry no one ever congratulated me in writing on an appointment until this Conference year. One of our wisest D. D.'s applauded me for taking a back seat!

Dr. Cottrell's profile pen is still touching the "change of name." The Annual Conference by a large and decided majority have settled that question, and in the opinion of your correspondent, by that act, settled the fate of the church. In the heart of the South the trend of things is as apparent as in the West. Quite a number voted against any change in our church name on the basis that such a change would hinder the union of the two wings of Methodism. This statement is virtually made by one or two writers in the Texas Advocate. Last fall an article was outlined with accompanying facts urging our friends to vote for the change of name. My purpose was to go upon the record, in the belief that the only hope of our continued existence lay in that direction. Three members of my family were stricken down, and for weary months the angel of death hovered over my household. Sickness seized me, and I did not get to our Annual Conference. That article was never finished. My conviction now is deeply rooted that our leaders have been struck with judicial blindness. This is a deliberate view after nearly five years in this border-work. The minority have a right to be heard. It is well known that certain rights must not be encroached upon. Here is where the moral nature is required to step in and decide, as against mere numbers or power.

At a recent meeting an evangelist said: "An aged Christian woman asked, 'Are you never troubled by the devil that you are always so cheerful?' 'O yes, he often comes to the door, but I never let him come in, nor give him a stool to sit on.'"

He perceived at length that the man who is able to look down and see that part of him capable of disappointment lying beneath him is far more blessed than he who rejoices in the fulfillment of his desires.

Items from Sardis.

For several weeks past religion has been at the front in Sardis. The whole town has been moved, and almost, if not quite, every one has been impressed by a deep, pervading religious influence. Rev. Dr. J. W. Hoyt, Presbyterian evangelist, began a meeting on the last Saturday in January, and continued two weeks—two services each day. The people turned out notwithstanding the bitter wintry weather, large congregations being in attendance day and night. Dr. Hoyt has intense earnestness, magnetism, great plainness of speech and evangelical doctrine to commend and give him success. His methods of work differ from our plan of altar work. With him the front seat is one of decision, to which all persons are invited who are prepared to accept Christ as a Savior. All the other seats are his "anxious seats." While I prefer our methods, the old plan of mourner's bench and altar work, yet many were moved by the Doctor's earnest preaching and methods to come out on the Lord's side and publicly confess Christ. Many children and young people, some of our leading citizens and some hard cases have made profession and united with the church. Christians of the several denominations participated in the meeting, working together in great harmony and reaping a spiritual harvest. About eighty persons have united with the different churches as a result of the Doctor's labors. Forty-one have been received on profession of faith into the Methodist Church, and others are expected to join. Soon after Dr. Hoyt closed his meeting, Rev. B. W. Hatch, a Baptist evangelist, began operations, and still continues with good results. On the close of the meeting of our Baptist brethren, it is our purpose (D. V.) after a short rest, to hold services in the Methodist Church, and so improve the season of gracious visitation with which God has favored our community.

Mrs. M. L. Wells, a cultured Christian lady, has been on a lecturing tour in Mississippi in behalf of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She delivered two lectures in the Methodist Church in Sardis: one on Saturday night, January 24, and the other on Sunday afternoon following. The lecture on Saturday night was well attended, considering the fact that the weather was bleak and wintry, the ground being covered with a sheet of sleet and snow. The attendance Sunday afternoon was much larger, although Boreas still held complete sway over the face of nature. On both occasions, the faces of persons unused to such places were seen in the audience.

Mrs. Wells spoke in a dignified and impressive manner, and yet with easy womanly grace, touching upon the work of woman in her efforts to put down the liquor traffic, and making earnest appeals on the general merits of temperance.

Both lectures were deeply interesting, free from bitter invective against the liquor dealer, and listened to with marked attention.

At the close of the lecture on Sunday afternoon, a Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized for permanent work in Sardis. This Union has steadily grown in numbers, and promises to do a good work for prohibition in the community. Will not the mothers, wives, sisters and Christian women of Mississippi organize for earnest work throughout the State, and enter upon a determined crusade against the liquor traffic?

The prohibition sentiment grows apace, and even now "the purple rim of the morning" betokens the dawn of victory. I take pleasure in endorsing the work of Mrs. Wells, and in commending her to the friends of temperance, as in every way worthy of their confidence and co-operation in the noble cause in which she is engaged.

Mrs. Goodale in Texas.

Mr. Editor: Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, of Baton Rouge, has been with us. Her visit and work was much appreciated by our people. On Sunday afternoon, the twenty-first instant, she addressed a mass meeting of the children and young people in the Methodist Church. A Band of Hope was organized of about eighty members. On Monday night following a large audience greeted her in the opera house. For more than one hour she held them by her eloquence and tender appeals. A typical Southern woman of culture, modesty and refinement she came so well endorsed, that she commanded much attention and excited profound interest. Our little city has been visited by many other consecrated women workers in this field who were more demonstrative and emphatic in manner and utterance, but by no one who leaves a better impression for good or who has more completely won the tender sympathies of the good and the refined. Mrs. Goodale leaves largely the beaten track in her addresses, and none who listen to her can but be impressed with her culture and her consecration. She carefully eschews politics and appeals to the conscience and sense of right, as in the discussion of a great moral question. On Tuesday afternoon, in the Methodist Church, there was a meeting—ladies only—and at night another fine audience gathered in the church, which was well entertained. The local union here was largely increased, and the children and young people are enthralled on the subject.

Our sympathies and prayers follow this good woman, and we predict for her a wonderful career of usefulness.

A Pleasant Occasion.

On February 22 a considerable number of invited guests assembled at the residence of Mr. George I. Pitts, near Mansfield, to celebrate the birthday of himself and his elder brother, William Pitts, of San Marcos, Texas, now on a visit to his relatives here after a separation of forty-two years. The latter was born on February 22, 1803, and the former on February 21, 1810, the one being now eighty-three years of age and the other seventy-six. Of the invited guests, numbering some fifteen gentlemen only, two or three were under fifty, the others ranging from that age to seventy. Younger people might be surprised to learn that these elderly men, representing the pulpits, the bar, the medical and mercantile ranks, were all as happy as good cheer and genial conversation could make them. But evidently the happiest were the oldest, and conspicuously our octogenarian brother from Texas, who was received into the church by Dr. J. J. Vick Pierce, in Georgia, heard George Pierce preach his first sermon, and, after fighting in the Indian wars in 1836, emigrated to the Lone Star State in 1846. His good health, fine sense and sincere piety made him the center of interest in the large assembly, and both the old and the young were entertained by his wisdom and his wit.

The dinner was elegantly served by Mrs. J. W. Pitts, a bright and cheerful younger lady of the family, and all returned to their homes admiring the beauty of a pious old age.

Louisiana Conference Minutes.

Mr. Editor: I observe several omissions in the printed minutes of the Louisiana Conference. The Homer circuit should be credited with $21 for church extension instead of nothing. The Farmersville circuit paid in $35 for foreign missions instead of $15, and the Andrus Chapel Woman's Foreign Missionary Society should be credited with $8.60, and put to the Brushwood circuit report. In making these statements I find no fault with the accomplished secretary, for Dr. Evans has certainly sent out a very neat pamphlet.

$500,000 for Missions.

Mr. Editor: One-half million for missions is no more than their importance to the church, our ability and obligations demand.

An earnest effort, after an hour with the agonizing Christ in Gethsemane, by every pastor in our Southern Methodism, would secure this amount. I think that the greatest want of our people is correct information and intelligence on the subject of missions and our missionary operations in foreign fields and borders and Territories. Never has there been a time when facilities for learning and disseminating missionary information was better than the present. Our Missionary Advocates, Christian Advocates, quarterlies and other periodicals are teeming with facts and figures—records of what the church is doing toward evangelizing the world—and it would seem superfluous to presume to give our people any more information, or attempt to enlighten them on the subject of missions.

But how many of the laity read the reports and keep pace with our advancement and aggression in foreign fields? Not over ten per cent, sir. It is presumed that the pastor is well informed on missionary lines. With all the facilities for knowing and keeping posted, he is inexperienced if he is not informed. Let him preach a few sermons setting forth the gospel claim for missions and give the people the statistics of the general church, and of our own church especially, and ask the people for their contributions, keeping the fact before them always and prominently that the assessment is the minimum of their obligation, and not the maximum. If this course is pursued, I verily believe that that which now seems an impossibility to many will be realized in cash.

Three Ordinations, but Two Orders.

Mr. Editor: Several years ago I heard this question asked, viz: "Why are our Bishops given a separate and distinct ordination?" To me the question was unintelligible, as I had not carefully studied the polity of our church on the subject of orders in the ministry. I am now reading Powell on "Apostolic Succession," a book of the fourth year in the course of study, and the question comes up again. I am puzzled to see the consistency in three ordinations when we recognize only two orders in the ministry. If a Bishop and elder or presbyter be the same scriptural order—a fact clearly established by Mr. Powell—why should we have anything more than the simple election of an elder to the office of a Bishop?

Three ordinations and two orders appear somewhat misleading. I know it might be answered that the ordination service of a Bishop may be considered a ceremony, or form of recognition of our Bishops as such; but why this apparent recognition of a third order? Will you please publish this inquiry, and answer yourself or let some of our church polity brethren do so? I would be glad to hear from any one of the committee of the fourth year.

MEMBER OF FOURTH YEAR CLASS.

Mississippi Conference Brotherhood.

We have eighty-one live, active members who will respond to any call for the good of the order. Six new members enrolled. Ten have forfeited their membership. This ought not to be the case. Number of honorary members—four, including one elect lady. Why can we not find one hundred laymen in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference who will become honorary members? Why can not every Band of Stewards secure an honorary membership? Disciples of Christ, here is an inviting field for you to do good with your money.

Since the resignation of our beloved president—Rev. J. M. W. em—owing to the many duties and cares of his present work, Dr. T. S. West, of Woodville, becomes president.

THURSDAY, MARCH 11, 1886.

We are glad to learn that Dr. Felix R. Hill, of St. Louis, has regained his health, and is recovering the sight of his injured eye. This will be good news to many New Orleans friends. In a private letter to one of our publishers he gives account of a revival in his pastorate. About forty souls have been converted, and thirty added to the church.

The grand parade of the Fire Department in this city took place last Sabbath. It is a fact, that in this, the latter half of the nineteenth century, and in these United States, the Sabbath is desecrated by spectacular nonsense. We applaud the brave work of our firemen and approve a public recognition of their services, but these Sunday parades are a disgrace to our civilization. And some members of our Protestant churches were conspicuous in the ranks! Shame on such a compromise of conscience.

The bar keepers of Vicksburg, Miss., propose to boycott the clothing house of Warner & Scarles because one of its employees, Mr. R. W. Conway, is an active temperance man. Mr. Warner promptly refused the demand of the saloonists that Mr. Conway be discharged. Now let the blind see. If there are any people among us so innocent as not to know the desperate lengths to which whisky men will go they can be informed. We hope Mr. Conway, who is a member of our church in the Hill City, will stand by his temperance convictions. But in the meantime the friends of morality must organize and be more aggressive. Ours is a war of extermination. We propose to close every open saloon in the State.

The Blair Educational Bill, of which mention has been made in these columns, has finally passed the national Senate and gone to the House of Representatives. There was exhaustive discussion of the proposed measure in the Senate, as to its constitutionality, purpose, scope and feasibility. The whole question of public education passed under review and the relation of the general government thereto. We heartily approve the bill and hope it may soon become a law. And now that there is prospect of its passing the House some of its enemies are urging the President to intervene a veto. The South will largely be the beneficiary of the money to be appropriated, as it is to be distributed according to the degree of illiteracy. This lays great responsibility upon our section. These millions should be wisely spent. Our reproach must be removed.

Why not organize an Annual Conference in China, in Brazil, in Mexico or in any other place where we have a growing work? This would raise no constitutional questions would infringe on no restrictive rule. The foreign work would then be governed just as the home work is. The Bishop could go when needed, and if a Bishop were not present the Conference could elect a president just as we do here. Why not do this as the needs of the work require?

Our brother's suggestion has been anticipated. The Mexican Border Mission is already an Annual Conference, the Central Mexican was organized into a Conference, February 26, by Bishop Keener, and it was expected that a Bishop would go to China during the current quadrennium on a similar mission. That is the proper thing to do.

We are obliged to our young friend, Miss Bessie Watkins, of the State Female College, at Columbus, Miss., for kindly remembering the New Orleans Christian Advocate. A Young Woman's Christian Association has been organized in that institution, of which she is secretary. In ordering the Advocate she takes occasion to write some words of personal, which we beg pardon for publishing, hoping they may encourage other young Christians:

I told you last summer of my intention of spending this vacation at the Mississippi Industrial Institute and College, and so here I am busy at my studies and work for the Master. He has given me much of this work to do and many wondrous labors. He is showering his blessings abundantly upon us in this work, and many sin-weary souls have already found rest at his feet.

Local Option in Mississippi.

The passage of a local option law by the Legislature of Mississippi last week will mark an epoch in the history of temperance reform in that State. For years the heroic friends of the cause have been unremitting in their efforts and have accomplished much in arousing public sentiment to the enormity of the liquor traffic and in reforming the drinking customs of society. In this latter respect gratifying progress is everywhere evident. The old "sideboard" with its rare wines and brandies, has been removed. It is no longer a breach of hospitality not to invite a visitor to drink. Indeed these are the very rare exceptions who adhere to the old custom that was once as tyrannous as it was rational. And it is no longer respectable for ministers to tipple wine on social or festive occasions. The reform sentiment is too wholesome and strong for the clerical indulgences of even a decade ago. Society demands that God's ministers shall be men of clean hands and pure hearts.

The law which has been on the statute books of Mississippi for some years, provided that no place for retailing liquor could be opened without the endorsement of a majority of the legal voters of a supervisor's district or municipality. That endorsement was secured by a petition certifying that the applicant was a sober and suitable person to conduct such business. That petition was filed and published in a county newspaper for three weeks. If a counter-petition signed by a majority of citizens was filed within thirty days license could not be granted. And if the same name appeared on both petitions it was counted against license. In addition to that general law there were a number of special statutes prohibiting the sale of liquor in eleven entire counties, thirteen supervisor's districts, and thirty-three towns and neighborhoods.

The law which has just been passed retains the general statute described above with a slight amendment, and superadds an election by counties. Upon the petition of one-tenth of the qualified voters of a county the Board of Supervisors shall order an election to be held at a time when no other issue is before the people. The election is to be conducted in all respects like a general election for county or State officers. If the majority vote against the sale then no liquor can be sold within said county for two years. But if a majority favor the sale, then before license shall be granted to any applicant he must file a petition before the Board of Mayor and Aldermen or Board of Supervisors, as the case may be, signed by twenty-five freeholders. That petition must lie over for thirty days, and if in the meantime a counter-petition signed by a majority of legal voters of such municipality or supervisor's district, is filed, license can not be granted. Thus the friends of temperance have a double chance for prohibition. If they do not succeed in the county at large each locality can petition against the matchless evil. Certain manufacturing and college towns are exempted from the provisions of the law and remain under special prohibitory statutes.

We are especially pleased with the section requiring an applicant for license to secure a petition signed by at least twenty-five freeholders. There are many little railroad towns in the State and the very worst for drunkenness and outlaws, because lacking adequate police force—that can not show twenty-five real estate owners. Of course all such places become absolute prohibition towns. Others have more than the required number, but all will not favor an open saloon. Freeholders, generally, are not signers of liquor petitions. With some exceptions, they are saloon strikers and ignorant colored men. Under the operation of this law the low doggerly will necessarily be banished from many places hitherto untouched by our reform.

We have only hope from the elections by counties. All political and personal complications will be eliminated from the contest, and the sovereign people will decide the simple question of whisky or no whisky. In such an issue we can but think a majority of the counties will declare for God and home and native land. But every friend of freedom must be up and doing. We have a subtle, mighty foe to combat. No soldier can afford to slumber on his post. If the contest in each county is managed discreetly we have no doubt but that fully three-fourths of them will declare for prohibition within the next eighteen months. There must be no divided counsels. Let the ranks close up and every comrade prove a hero.

These are the salient features of the new statute. It is doubtless defective in some particulars, but, upon the whole, is the measure the prohibitionists have been demanding for four years.

Symposium on Bishops for Foreign Mission.

We give below some of the more recent utterances of editors and correspondents on this great question. We are rejoiced that our honored preceptor, Dr. Garland, wrote his article. Something is needed and his paper has led to earnest thought as to what that best something shall be. Our own opinions have been given at length. We believe the plan of a resident episcopacy fixed by the General Conference is unconstitutional and unwise. That view seems to be the voice of the church.

"John Merides" in the Baltimore Methodist, who came out first in support of Chancellor Garland's plan, thus writes:

I can not undertake an analysis of the arguments pro and con, nor attempt a synopsis of the diverse opinions already advanced upon the subject. This only I would say, the thought of the church thus far gravitates toward a plan which would provide for an annual episcopal visit. It is held that a Bishop whose service would be only interrupted by a return to the parent church once in four years would, in a short time, be beset by the difficulties and embarrassments now suffered by a superintendent; that the tendency would be to separation from the home church, that the arguments which would justify a Bishop for one field would justify it for all; that in case a resident Bishop should be provided for all, the expense would be necessarily very heavy; that the experience of the Methodist Episcopal Church is decidedly in support of the plan of annual visitation, in preference to any other hitherto tried; that this plan will raise no question of constitutional authority; that the expense of an annual visit will be so much less, that in this fact alone is found a weighty argument in its favor. Under divine guidance the church will doubtless be led to wise conclusions.

The Arkansas Methodist speaks its mind as follows:

But how do the views of Dr. Garland strike you in comparing a four years' pastorate to a four years' Bishopric. You see he is advancing toward low church episcopacy by the way of the diocesan. We are glad to see such a healthy tone in all our Conference organs. Our future general superintendency must be preserved as well as our hierarchy itself. No infringement must be allowed in either, and we must never elect Bishops for special places. Our episcopacy will never stand that. We would soon have Bishops as common as other folks. Bishops may act as scape goats, but they are not the panacea for all of our Methodist troubles and missionary failures. We will augment our misfortunes if we undertake the line indicated by Chancellor Garland.

The Alabama Advocate closes a calm discussion of the whole question with these words:

The constitution of the church at home will permit either the present plan of superintendents or the plan of resident Bishops; or, what perhaps is best, the plan of annual or biennial visits by the Bishops living here. What is needed is more prayer for success, more money contributed, and more men devoted to the work.

The Holston Methodist says the Chancellor's plan has grave constitutional objections and is "asquinting at diocesan episcopacy." It concludes as follows:

It is evident that we can not have foreign Bishops proper without a change of our constitutional law. We can do nothing but require our Bishops to make occasional visits to our foreign fields. These fields should be set off into autonomous as soon as they can be self-supporting; and they should elect their own Bishops. We hope it will not be long till a self-supporting Conference can be organized in each of our three leading mission fields. Then we should favor independence.

From a clearly presented argument in the Nashville Christian Advocate by the Rev. Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan we make these extracts:

Still less can I yield to his urgent plea for a local Bishop in the missions. There is, under the view of such Bishops as a provision for episcopal presence in the mission field, a very strong, prudent if not a constitutional objection. Say what we will it would be the initial step to diocesan episcopacy. That none of us wants, even in the dim distance or in a shadowy form.

Every important end can be met by having the College of Bishops to arrange their work so as to include annual visits to the mission fields. Let the Board of Missions retain its managing function as well as financial, though modified to suit the exercise of episcopal presence and authority. The Bishop will then go in his full, not quasi-connectional character. The church will have a healthy complement of checks and balances giving a happy mean of forces in her mission work. The Bishop will be a constant medium of living intercourse between the mission and the church at home; carrying thither an informing and molding power drawn from his knowledge and experience in the freshest life and work of the church; and bringing back the facts most needed to arouse the zeal of the church for her missions. As he goes up and down holding conferences, preaching, talking, writing, mingling with his colleagues, he will do far more good than any returning missionary, for he will be all the missionaries returned and speaking through him, while he holds a powerful grasp on the confidence and reverence of the connection as one of its chief pastors and unconfined evangelists. The Bishop will report his mission work and the state of the mission to the Board, and will include these items in his report to the College of Bishops and to the General Conference. Here will be ample opportunity for review and correction. The Bishops making their visits in turn to the missions will have a common and equal interest in those fields, and will both be helped by one another in the work, and inspire a stronger confidence and broader interest in this vital enterprise of the church.

The Baltimore Methodist in a leading editorial on "Shall we Elect Missionary Bishops?" speaks to the point in these paragraphs:

We do not believe that the election of a Bishop for each mission field is either desirable or demanded by the needs of the case. An annual episcopal visitation to each field will meet all the demands, and as the Bishops in rotation visit these fields they will be better prepared to fire and enthuse the church at home on the great question of foreign missions.

The Rev. Dr. R. N. Sledd, of Virginia, in a letter to the St. Louis Advocate thus refers to the question. He states the difficulties clearly, but we dissent from his proposition to set off the China mission, as premature:

With all deference to Dr. Garland's superior wisdom, we have no need for resident Bishops in our mission fields. Nor do we believe that we can create them without an infraction of our constitution. We are not prepared for a measure so radical. But let our episcopal force be increased by the election of two or three Bishops, and our missions may be visited regularly. Such visitations will be little less effective, and more acceptable to the laborers than an episcopacy essentially diocesan. In so far as China is concerned, the easiest and most complete solution of the difficulties of the situation is the union of the two Methodisms, or all the Methodisms there, and the organization of the united body into an independent church.

The Raleigh Christian Advocate expresses some decided convictions as follows:

Simply because the missionaries have a little personal trouble occasionally does not require a resident Bishop among them. Nor would this remedy it. The Bishops themselves sometimes have personal difficulties, as we all know. Abraham and Lot, and Paul and Barnabas, had a few words and separated. Putting resident Bishops in our missions will not remedy these evils. Our present plan of episcopal supervision is the best. Elect enough new Bishops and require one of them to visit our missions annually just as they visit the Conferences.

The Pacific Methodist endorses the position of this Advocate, and in reproducing entire one of our articles, takes occasion to say:

Among all the reviews of that article we have seen none that so clearly and thoroughly answers the argument as the following from the New Orleans Advocate. The editor, in a former article, discussed the constitutionality of Dr. Garland's scheme and in this he takes up the general subject.

Young Converts and Religious Papers.

With the growth of church membership there should be an increased circulation of church papers. Those who come into our fold ought to acquaint themselves more thoroughly with the teachings and usages of Methodism and keep informed as to its current history. If every new convert could become an intelligent reader of one of our church papers, one revival season would mark an epoch in the ecclesiastical history. In the Central Christian Advocate we find an article on this subject so timely and well-stated, as to justify a liberal toleration to our columns:

"They (the young converts) are probably not very familiar with the doctrines and discipline of the church, which, however, they ought to understand as a means of stability and usefulness, and the weekly paper is a constant teacher of these things. In order to make them broad and sympathetic in character and experience, and stimulate them to benevolence, it is vitally important for them to be familiar with the great movements of the Christian forces of the age; and the Christian periodical is the only vehicle by which such information can be carried to them. They have entered upon a new life, and into a new environment, and no one human agency can do more to put them into sympathy with that environment than the religious newspaper. It makes them familiar with the names of the best people, and with the record of the best deeds of these best people. Whatever of good is being accomplished in this world, the convert can read in his religious paper the story of the blessed progress. It enlarges his sense of brotherhood to the great cause, and strengthens him with facts from the best side of the world. He has probably read the tragic and criminal as published in secular papers, until he has grown weary of it, and it will refresh his spirit to read a paper which shows him that the world is not quite full of crime, cruelty, and despair."

"Is it not clear that pastors will do a kindly service to all concerned—to the converts, to the churches, to the pastors themselves, and to the cause of the true, the beautiful, and the holy throughout the world—by leading converts, at the earliest possible moment to become readers of at least one first-class religious paper. Of course, we would be much pleased to receive a large number of such subscriptions to our own paper; but our plea is not for this alone. The Western is not the only good religious paper published, though it is as good as we can make it, and is made as to be helpful to souls that are trying to live for God. But our aim is not simply to enlarge our own subscription list. Our argument and plea are for the sake of the converts themselves, and for the cause of our Lord. We do not hesitate to say that if all converts could be led at once to become regular and interested readers of Christian literature, the question, 'What becomes of the converts?' would lose very much of its significance. Ignorance still destroys many of God's people."

Success of Our Foreign Missions.

The discussion of our foreign missions happily initiated by Dr. Garland, will cause many things to transpire helpful to the church and our work abroad. The suggested "recast" of our methods of administration was born of two considerations—inadequate success of the missions and personal inharmonious among the missionaries. These were charged to the organization—were supposed to be "inherent." The first is a question of fact easily ascertainable by reference to the annual reports. In our first article we objected to that statement and again repeat the objection. Our work in the foreign field has been abundantly successful considering the men and money at command. That the statement to the contrary has been harmful we have reason to know. Some have determined to withhold their usual contributions for that cause and apply the same elsewhere. But the facts are at hand to show how graciously the Lord has blessed the labors of our hands in the mission fields, and with what hope we should renew our efforts to enlarge the work. In the Nashville Advocate of last week Dr. Kelley, the treasurer of our Board of Missions, publishes some interesting statistics which we gladly give space. Read and ponder them:

To answer the call for evidence that our mission fields are not the least productive of all our church work we have taken time to look up a few figures and work out a few comparative results, which we hope, under the circumstances, will be read and pondered until they have their full fruition. They will be given fuller and more accurately in tabulated form in the annual report to be published next May. The table in the report of 1885 is the least accurate of all our tables heretofore published, having been compiled during my illness by another, out of materials we had only partially gathered. As the general minutes for 1885 are not yet published, we take general minutes of 1881, the period is about identical with that covered by mission statistics.

At the close of the mission year, June 1, 1871, the first year of work under the present plan, the annual report (Dr. M. Ferrin, secretary) gave the status of our work among non-English speaking people.

1871. Indian and Chinese, total—

Preachers, 19; members, 3,849; Sunday-schools, 14; Sunday-school scholars, 391; collections, $386.95; church property, $13,000.

Annual Report May 1, 1885—non-

Preachers, 162; members, 11,745; Sunday-schools, 203; Sunday-school scholars, 7,657; collections, $7,689.15; church property, $32,658.

Beside this the Board has done much work among our English-speaking population of Florida and the great West as well as among the people here tabulated. The whole number of missions on the pay-roll of the Board among non-English speaking peoples in 1871 are reported as about 15; in 1885 as more than 223. We will not foot up results for the present year before April 1. We are sure they will detract nothing from the rate of advance in previous years.

The following table shows relative increase in mission fields, non-English speaking, and in home church:

Missions Among Non-English Speaking People.

1871. 1885. Increase per cent.

Preachers, 19, 162, 750

Members, 3,849, 11,745, 305

Sunday-schools, 14, 203, 1336

Sunday-school scholars, 391, 7,657, 1934

Value of property, $13,000, $32,658, 153

Collections, $386.95, $7,689.15, 1988

Home Church.

Preachers, 3,67, 4,711, 128

Members, 61,194, 91,327, 49

In a private note to the St. Louis Advocate, in one of our patronizing Conferences, writes: "The New Orleans Advocate shall visit our household, as long as it abides in the land. It is first in every way. In fact it nourishes our souls. The Lord bless more and more to the glory of Zion, its heavenly minded editors."

From Ruston, La.

At Farmersville we had a glorious time, and found that Rev. Washington W. Nicholson, the new pastor, had met with a most cordial reception, and that he was taking hold of the work with heartiness and hope. Some excellent material was received into the church, and young and old seem disposed to work. We could expect that the class and prayer meetings will flourish, and that the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society organized last year, will, under the kindly interest and frequent presence of the pastor at the meetings, thrive mightily this year. A faithful Methodist pastor is ever ready to help the sisters in all their missionary, and temperance, work. The Farmersville people subscribed the full amount of their six Conference collections. It was positively delightful to the presiding elder to have them, when he took the collection, respond so generously and so promptly. He had no urging to do, but the giving was done as fast as he could write the names down. Surely that is just the way that God's people should everywhere do when the call is made in behalf of missions, church extension, education, etc. At Downsville, Saturday and Sunday at the four services and at the love feast, we had large numbers in attendance. The experiences at the love feast were many and rich unto the edification of all. The assessment for missions and church extension for the Downsville Church was more than realized in the collection taken on Sunday. They have a stove in the church, and have kept the Sunday-school alive through the winter. As at Ruston, so at Downsville there has been begun a ladies' prayer meeting with every indication of accomplishing much good. The newly elected officers of the Downsville Woman's Foreign Missionary Society are as follows: President, Mrs. E. L. Collier; first vice-president, Mrs. N. J. Pardue; second vice-president, Mrs. O. J. Raley; corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. G. Hammond; recording secretary, Miss Dehila Gunby; treasurer, Mrs. N. Reynolds; solicitor for Woman's Missionary Advocate, Mrs. Lou Mosely.

The ladies did a fine work last year, and very much more is expected of them during this year. May the Holy Ghost fire up the Home district on missions, temperance and all else that tends to the glory of God and the good of man.

Ruston, La., Feb. 10, 1886.

Yesterday we held the Brushwood Quarterly Conference, and, notwithstanding the severe rains and heavy roads, a goodly number of officials were present. Our glorified brother, Rev. C. W. Hodge, had charge of this work last year, and had been re-appointed to it by Bishop Keener. The answer to Question 5—"What were the estimated claims, and what the final settlement of the same, in the charge the past year?"—disclosed the fact that this circuit had made a very fine record, and that financial perfection had been attained at most every point. We believe that Mt. Zion Church had met in full every claim, and this is not to be wondered at, for she has a model steward in Bro. James M. Miller, who mixes sound business sense and practical methods with cold piety, the natural result being at the end of the year—nothing unpaid. Many a circuit and church, for lack of just such a man, allows year after year to its preacher a very small salary, and pays year after year somewhere from twenty-five to seventy-five per cent, under which slack-twisted style of financial management the ministry is made to suffer. It is strange it is so, but most any where you can see it that a man noted for his business capacity, and supposed to be pious, is elected a steward and he straightway seems to be unable to plan and execute in the matter of church finances, so as to have his pastor paid his exceedingly small allowance. Oh, how many faithful men of God are made to suffer at the hands of stewards, who, in the matter of their own private business, are eminently successful, and yet can not get, or do not get, rather, from five hundred members the sum of $500 for their preacher! Verily there is much muzzling, official and otherwise, of "the ox that treadeth out the corn."

I see, by a circular sent me, that Rev. Rufus E. Travis, of the Tennessee Conference, has written a book entitled "The Steward; The Member."

It can be bought at the Nashville House for fifty cents, and might prove of value to our stewards and members could they get to read it.

Ruston, La., Feb. 25, 1886.

(From the German.)

I always feel like pulling some body's ears when I hear a preacher in the pulpit name infidel scientists, advancing some of their vagaries, in order to refute them. Such proceedings are levagary itself.

THE SILVER CLOUD.

BY JOHN PHILIP FARLEY.

I saw a silver cloud at eventide,
A gentle little silver cloud;
With outstretched, motley wings, a pale dove,
She sailed toward the west, and thus she said:

"Ah, joy was mine! He bled me in his beams,
He bled me in his beams, and all day long
O'er a thousand fields, a thousand groves,
My happy shadow flitted like a dream."

"Kiss, kiss once more my lips, my pillowed lips,
Bring me once more the bliss I knew at morn;
Cuddled in his arms, and all day long
O'er a thousand fields, a thousand groves,
My happy shadow flitted like a dream."

While yet she spoke her cloudy pallor changed,
And she became a wreath of flaming fire
That did to scorn the silver evening star,
But she had faded like a dream.

How she darkened, slowly, till she was Whiter than ashes on the face of death,
Then came a cold, low wind, and breathed on her,
In a mist of tears did melt away!

A Temperance Revival.

MR. EDITOR: In this metropolis of "the mighty East," we have just passed through a glorious temperance revival, concerning which I desire to say a few words to your readers. Before entering into the details of this recent movement, however, it may be proper for me to say a few words concerning the temperance work that preceded this and in some measure prepared the way for it. The temperance idea has been emphasized here for some time.

We have had within the last twelve months lecture upon temperance, Galloway, Gambrell, Marshall, Benson, St. John, Mead, Hopkins, Brooks, Mrs. Wells, Mrs. Erwin, Mrs. Goodale, Mrs. Kells, Mrs. Chapin, have all been with us. And the local pulpit have not been idle. The clergy in the main have given forth no uncertain sound on the subject. Through these various agencies a very strong anti-temperance sentiment had been created. But this sentiment was lacking in effectiveness for want of proper organization.

Some weeks ago, having learned through Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop something more than I knew before of the methods of Dr. A. S. Reynolds, I induced our W. C. T. U. to write him to visit us. He came, and remained about a week, lecturing every night. His audiences were good all the while, and part of the time, our spacious church was inadequate to the demands made upon it. The results of his labors may be thus partially summarized: Large accessions to the W. C. T. U.; four hundred persons signed the total abstinence pledge; a reform club of 185 male members was organized. Each member of the club is pledged to total abstinence, and to work for the propagation of total abstinence principles. The club continues to grow. It now numbers largely more than 200 members and has plans on foot for vigorous work.

Through this club many pitiful victims of the drink habit have been placed on their feet and started in the pathway of sobriety and happiness. Dr. Reynolds' visit was a benediction to this city. It garnered the results of previous seed sowing. It gave to the temperance sentiment the marvelous power that accrues from organization and concentration. It has created temperance sentiment where there was none. It has wrought a wonderful change in the community. It has given the temperance cause an impetus such as it has never received before—an impetus which in my judgment is destined to give us an ultimate victory for the right. I wish, therefore, Mr. Editor, through your columns to commend Dr. Reynolds to all lovers of the temperance cause. I wish he could spend a week in all our principal towns. Though not what the world calls an orator, he talks in a way that reaches the judgment, the consciences and the heart. He is, moreover, a consecrated, godly man. He is needed all over the State. In those places where rum rules he is needed to create temperance sentiment. In places where temperance sentiment is strong, he is needed to organize that sentiment and set it to work along the line of moral suasion and in other ways. To these brethren who may see fit to solicit his services, I wish to make a few suggestions.

In the first place, advertise him well, rally your forces, and if possible give him a good audience to start with. Then don't fail to get him a good choir. If possible, have an organ in the lecture room. If not, then surround with him the best singers of the different churches. This helps him and helps the cause amazingly.

That Dr. Reynolds will accomplish as much everywhere as he did at Meridian it would be unreasonable to suppose. Sam Jones has failed at a few places; and our Saviour in some localities did little "because of unbelief." But my judgment is, that "Old Benne," as Reynolds is called in the West, is doing more solid and permanent work than almost any one of the numerous lecturers now in the field in these parts.

W. C. BLACK.

A Bishop for Foreign Missions.

MR. EDITOR: Doubtless you will be burdened with many communications both from the aged and young, pro and con, relative to Chancellor Garland's article on a change, or reorganization in the management of our Foreign Missions. As I am classed with the old men, and having been a member of the Methodist Church near seventy years, and a preacher over fifty years, and all the time a conformist to the doctrines and government of the Methodist Church, I trust it will not be considered presumption in me to give my opinion on Dr. Garland's suggestions.

As to the organization and government of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, it would be well for the General Conference to "let well enough alone," and legislate but little, except it be in relation to the publishing interests, finances and missions.

As to our Foreign Missions, the General Conference, doubtless, in the united wisdom of that body, will adopt some plan for perfecting the organization of the mission work, so as to establish a perfect unity of effort, doctrine and government, and thereby lay a sure foundation for our mission to become self-supporting conference at an early day.

In rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem, after the return of the Jews from their seventy years' captivity, there were in Jerusalem priests, Levites, rulers, and elders many; but it required a Jeremiah to bring about a unity of purpose and action in our great work before them. Without the superintendence and oversight of Jeremiah, the walls of Jerusalem, the city of God, would not have been built up. So we have a great work to accomplish in our foreign missions, and we need a Jeremiah there to superintend the work—to appoint each laborer to his portion of the work on the walls of Zion, so as to render them impregnable to the assaults of heathenism and infidelity.

Dr. Garland's plan is to elect a Bishop for the special work of presiding over Foreign Missions. He said, "The Bishop elected to preside over Foreign Missions would be elected and ordained in the same manner, and clothed with the same authority as any other Bishop." According to the third restrictive rule, the General Conference could not elect and ordain a Bishop for a special place or work, or say to a Bishop you must go to this place or that.

There is a plan, however, by which our missions for four years at a time can be supplied with a Bishop, without infringing upon the third restrictive rule, or even a show of evasion; and that is, for the General Conference to elect as many Bishops as may be necessary for the work required; the Bishops then in their council can assign one or more of their number to China, Brazil or Mexico.

WM. SPILLMAN.

The Missions.

FACTS BROUGHT OUT.

We have belonged to the Board of Missions most of the time since 1850. We served the Committee on Missions at the General Conference of 1870. Then the present plan of conducting the enterprise was adopted, and Dr. McFerrin was elected Secretary. Nothing has pleased me more than the present discussion, which has grown out of Dr. Garland's article on the Foreign Missions of our Church. Our younger brethren can pick up the facts brought out here and there, and light up many a missionary discourse.

For example: "Methodist Episcopal Church, South—Whole number of communicants in China, Mexico, Brazil, Indian and German Missions, 11,748; income $184,200; cost of administration, including the printing of Annual Report, four and one half per cent. Such a showing ought to gratify all loyal Southern Methodists. No other Mission Board of our acquaintance is conducted so economically, nor, indeed, any other business enterprise."—N. O. CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Again: "The whole number of missionaries and assistants on the payroll of the Board among non-English speaking peoples in 1871 are reported as about 25; in 1885 as more than 225. Whole collections in 1871 $40,000; in 1885 for Foreign Missions alone (including W. B. M.), $236,552."—Christian Advocate, Nashville.

Again: "Non-English speaking members in 1871, 3,859; in 1885, 11,748."—Christian Advocate.

Once more: "Within five years the names on the Treasurer's payroll and the contributions for Foreign Missions have been doubled."—Southern Christian Advocate.

We publish these few facts and figures with pleasure, and with the hope that no fair writer will base an argument on any supposed failure in our missionary enterprise. There has been a forward movement from the beginning.

But we sat down to write about these "resignations." The wife of the elder Dr. Lambuth cannot hope to regain her health in the city of Shanghai. It has been declining for years, so that removal to some other place is absolutely necessary. But she and her husband are at the service of the Board of Missions, and ready to inaugurate a mission in Japan. The wife of the younger Dr. Lambuth cannot live in Soochow any longer. Her strength is nearly gone. She must be removed. However, they are both willing and anxious to accompany their father to Japan. If we do not establish a mission in that empire, our opinion is that the whole family will return to the United States. The other "resignation," alluded to by Dr. Garland is that of the Rev. J. J. Rameau; but he is heartily willing to remain in South America, if the Board should establish the North Brazil Mission. We look favorably on this undertaking.

Bishop Granbery. When the Board of Missions requested Bishop Granbery to make an episcopal visit to our Brazil Mission he did not hesitate, but went home and put himself in readiness immediately. According to the best calculation we could make, he had time enough to make the trip there, remain ten days, and get back for the General Conference. But a letter from a missionary seemed to deplore the fact that the Bishop's visit would fall in the month of March—the worst time in the whole year for a stranger to be in that country. Then, the steamer on which he had engaged passage was delayed one week, making the time of his stay in Brazil too short. So, in the very nick of time, we arrested his movement by telegram, and followed it by letter the same day, giving all the reasons for the postponement. The Bishop will go immediately after General Conference. On his return, we hope another Bishop will move out for China.

N. A. YOUNG.

Note from China.

MR. EDITOR: Some three months since, the native Christians of Fochow determined to send the gospel to Corea. They selected two men who had expressed a wish to go and preach the gospel of Christ to the people of the "Hermit Kingdom." They soon made arrangements, and in the course of time they came to Shanghai on their way to Corea, and met with us in our missionary prayer meeting at my house; and there one expressed a strong desire to work for the Master among the Coreans. After a few days they left for Corea via Japan. We heard nothing of them until yesterday, when a letter came from Fochow saying, one of the two men who went to Corea, had returned to China, saying he was sick. He was ashamed to show himself to the native Christians for some weeks. Before it was known that he had returned, quite a large number of native Christians met to consider what they could do to help those who had gone to Corea. When it became known that one of the men had returned and that it was fright which caused him to return, they at once called for some one to take his place. Immediately seven or eight men rose up and said they were ready to go. They selected two of the number and are now adding them to prepare for the journey. They will be in Shanghai in a few days on their way, and we shall hope to see them and bid them God-speed in their good work. These men surely need the prayers of all Christian people in every land that they may find an open door for the preaching of the gospel of Christ.

On the 2d of this month, Mrs. John, of Hankow, was buried in Shanghai. She was formerly Mrs. Jenkins, and a member of our Mission. She came to China in 1854, when we came, on the same vessel and around the Cape. She has for years been a great sufferer, but she at last gone where there is no more suffering.

I remain your brother in Christ,
J. W. LANRUTH.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, JANUARY 19, 1886.

From Homer, La.

The Quarterly Conference held at Arcadia was most satisfactory. We found that Bro. Miller, the pastor, had been hard at work during the month since his arrival and had gathered in by letter and on application, nearly forty members. Sunday night the altar was crowded with mourners, and there being so many conversions and so much religious interest in the community, Bro. Miller very properly concluded to protract the meeting. We presume that Rev. Dr. Thomas B. White, of Ruston, is helping him now, and we trust the good work may go on until scores of souls are soundly converted. The Arcadia Circuit, like Bro. Caradine's "Zionne," is "looking up," and as Bro. Miller seems disposed to "walk her around" in the prayer and class meeting drill, (sister Sadler's remedy, we believe,) we suppose she will do more this year than open her eyes and yawn a bit. Life is beginning to course through all her limbs, and under the magnetic manipulations of the new doctor, she will doubtless become by the time of the Ruston Conference, one of the Homer District's most active and fruitful daughters. We easily raised, Sunday, at 11, more than enough to meet the assessment for Missions and Church Extension, our good brother, J. H. Jackson, Esq., leading the list with a handsome subscription. All church divisions have been healed, and in the bonds of love and in the unity of the Spirit the Arcadia dock are moving up to this year's work for God with courage and hope. The ladies there expect soon to organize a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and, as Bro. Miller is a devoted missionary pastor, the matter cannot be long delayed. The Sunday school is flourishing, and the fact is, that the foremost elements and even Ruston Station will have to bestir themselves or this reviving circuit will lead the Homer District. Notwithstanding the unpropitious weather, we have had good congregations at Homer, and the attendance of officials was large from all over the work. The year opens well with Bro. Medlock and his people. Bishop Keener, at our late Conference, took occasion to especially praise this circuit because of its very fine report. The people are determined to do ever so much better. Well, that is according to God's own plan—churches and people should be getting better and doing better every year. We should be careful in our church life and in our individual Christian life to avoid the down grade. We must mention the fact that the Lisbon church quite astonished us by reporting the pastor paid up by them nearly one-third of their assessment—quite in contrast to another circuit where not a church had paid a single nickel though they had enjoyed their pastor's presence and labors for some weeks. The Lisbon style ought to be adopted all over our District, and thus, with a one-third running start like theirs, by first quarterly conference, it is quite certain the pastors could have the very rare experience of reporting their allowance at the end of the year paid up, and may be, some dollars over. However, Bros. Jas. McClelland and L. W. Greer are stewards of solid piety and of faith of the kind that shows itself in works. We go from here to Bro. Godfrey's quarterly conference at Mt. Zion.

HOMER, LA., MARCH 4, 1886.

A Suggestion to the General Conference.

MISSIONARY SECRETARY. MISSIONARY TREASURER.

After four years of experience and observation the President of the Board of Missions has published his reflections and conclusions. They have created "normal stir," because they concern administration. Now, after twenty years of observation and four years of hard work, we propose to give our opinion on the duties of the Secretary and Treasurer of the Board. Just here we say, once for all, that R. A. Young and D. C. Kelley have worked together at home and abroad in unbroken harmony up to this date.

"1. The Missionary Secretary ought to write all drafts on the Treasurer. To make this his duty would require an addition of seven words to the Discipline, on page 183. Then Article VII. of Chapter XI. would read thus:

"The Secretary shall be a minister of the gospel, and may be a member of any Annual Conference, but shall reside where the Board is located. It shall be his duty to keep a permanent record of the proceedings of the Board and to publish an abstract of them in the Church papers; to conduct its correspondence; to write all drafts on the Treasurer; to attend to all its legal business; to prepare its Annual Report, and to publish monthly, (either in a missionary paper, or in the Church papers, as the Board shall direct) statements of the condition, needs, and prospects of the various missions. The salary of the Secretary shall be fixed by the Board, and all his necessary traveling expenses shall be allowed."

The words in italics are those we would add. It is not necessary for our Bishops to write any more drafts. We are sure the Bishop in charge of the China Mission will agree with us. The Bishop in charge of Central Mexico writes no more drafts for that work—we have written them regularly for one year. We think the other Bishops would agree to have all drafts written at the same desk.

The Secretary of the Board, at the close of each Annual Meeting, knows exactly what has been appropriated to each Foreign Mission and Mission Conference. The record is constantly before him. He knows exactly when to write the drafts, and for what sums. And, forasmuch as he now writes most of the drafts, make it his duty to write them all. It will give unity to the business. The draft of the Secretary will be the ultimate warrant on the Treasurer to pay money.

Furthermore, every month or every quarter, when he sits down to write, all the mission fields, and persons, and institutions, and objects will pass in review before him; and will, so to speak, be photographed on his brain and heart. The regular official reports from the missionaries are before him, and he knows who is in place and at work, and who is not. When these drafts are written, scheduled, and sent, he knows the very day when the next are due. Thus, responsibility binds him over to regular work.

The Bishop holding a Mission Conference knows the amount of money appropriated to it, and, with the aid of his counselors he can make an equitable division of the sum among the preachers and teachers. Just here, let him not write the drafts on the Treasurer, but send the Secretary a list of his apportionments. The Secretary will immediately write the drafts and send them to the persons designated. By this method all the Mission Conferences will be brought before his mind and heart monthly or quarterly.

Let no one suppose from what we have written, that our Bishops have ever given us any trouble with their drafts. They have not. Let no one suppose that our object is to lighten the office-work of the Secretary. It will be nearly double what it is now. Our successor will have the pleasure of staying at home much more than we have done. Or, if he should attend fifteen Conferences a year, he will have to employ a competent clerk at his own expense.

"2. Let Article VIII, Chapter XI, defining the duties of the Treasurer, stand just as it is. Even if he should never attend the session of the Annual Conference there is work enough in the office to demand his attention every day, and a large part of the day. Renditions come in by the dozen every morning. These letters have to be opened, acknowledged, and replies returned; accounts have to be kept and deposits made every day. Hence, a heavy correspondence. But then the Secretary's drafts are constantly coming in from the foreign fields and the Mission Conferences. These are all to be attended to. More correspondence here. So it is idle and useless to talk about an unpaid layman or a hired clerk to attend to all this business properly. The unpaid layman can not be found, and the hired clerk does not know how. While we are quietly writing this sentence Dr. Kelly and two assistants are as busy as bees in the adjoining office, and have been for weeks.

But you say the salary is too large. Well, then, cut it down—but the work in this office must go on, and none but a superior man can do it properly. A quarter of a million dollars from a thousand and one sources coming into an office, and the same amount going out to hundreds of persons, and not enough work! Be candid, brethren, be candid. Give us a superior man, and we will add, let him be a minister of the gospel.

We have written this article from a sense of duty. Our age, training and experience entitle us to express an opinion on business matters and methods. We have written our honest convictions. We have spent our life in the service of this Church. There is not a fringe of the tabernacle that we would not take up tenderly if we saw it trailing. And we beg the General Conference not to be influenced by any one who supposes that an unpaid layman or a hired clerk can be found to act as Treasurer of the Board of Missions.

The fourth annual convention of the Louisiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in Baton Rouge, La., April 22 and 23, 1886. All local unions are earnestly urged to send delegates, each union being allowed two delegates. Officers of State W. C. T. U. and Superintendents of Departments are delegates ex-officio. Friends of temperance and Christianity will be cordially welcomed.

Delegates will please send their names at once to Mrs. Mary Reed Goodale, Corresponding Secretary Louisiana W. C. T. U., Baton Rouge, that arrangements may be made for their entertainment during convention.

Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, Superintendent of Southern W. C. T. U. work, and Mrs. W. L. Wells, one of the national organizers, are expected to be present.

CALDWELL F. NERBICK,
President La. W. C. T. U.
MARY REED GOODALE,
Corresponding Sec'y La. W. C. T. U.

—You picture to yourself the beauty of bravery and steadfastness. You let your imagination wander in delight over the memory of martyrs who have died for truth. And, then, some little, wretched, disagreeable duty comes, which is your martyrdom, the lamp for your oil; and, if you will not do it, how your oil is split! How flat and thin and null! Undusted your sentiment about the martyr runs out over your self-indulgent life!—Phillips Brooke.

—Happiness is the desire of all, and the universe is full of divinely appointed means for making us all happy. The reason why so few possess it is that we throw away or neglect the wisely appointed means for obtaining it, and seek for it where it is not to be found.—Methodist Recorder.

—Do you imagine that the Lord will be satisfied with what you can spare? The "strack" of your full measure? Has it never occurred to you that God demands not what you can spare, but what you will miss; that he requires a real sacrifice at your hand?

—Steady is like the winter's sun, that shineth yet warmeth not; but meditation is like blowing up the fire where we do not mind the blaze but the heat. The end of study is to hoard up truth; but of meditation, to lay it forth in conference or holy conversation.

—"One never mounts so high as when one does not know where one is going." This unassuming high was sublime trust forgetful of self; but the man who is blinded by vice does not see his rapid and fearful descent, and so does not know where he is going.

—It is good that we sometimes have trouble and crosses, for they make a man enter into himself, and consider that he ought not to put his trust in any earthly thing.—Thomas à Kempis.

—What a man is, lies as certainly upon his countenance as in his heart, though none of his acquaintance may be able to read it.

I think my venerable brother has also misapprehended the point made by Bro. Abbey, about an expression in one of Dr. Allen's papers. He is correct in his position. It is a point he has made frequently in his books and newspaper articles and which he has endeavored to get the church to recognize. If his position is not tenable, let some one prove it to be wrong. It is his child, and he is watching it with a "jealous eye." We do not know who blunders at this point. But Bro. Abbey will doubtless attend to his own position.

I sometimes find it difficult to distinguish the shades of meaning in words of similar sound, and errors are committed for want of proper information. I am not a scholar, and I am not a linguist. I would be a pleasant and profitable recreation for our young brethren to pay attention to this branch of literature. Either Crabbe's or Graham's synonyms would serve as a text book. Words such as seems and appears, privies and vanities, enough and sufficient, truths and deceptions, accurately and precisely, character and reputation may serve as examples, and though words seem to have the same meaning, there are no two words in the English language identical in meaning. It is a very great accomplishment to be able to put the right word in the right place, and thereby express the idea desired to be presented. Grammarians inform us that words are the signs of our ideas or the means by which our ideas are expressed. But it has been said, that words are frequently used to conceal ideas; and the non-committal politicians in their letters of acceptance or of diploma possess the faculty to write in such a manner, that their language may admit of several constructions, just as circumstances may require.

There is another book which I would recommend to all who desire to improve in the derivation, and in the analysis of words. It is "Town's Analysis of the English Language." It supplies in a great measure a want to those who have not studied either the Latin or Greek language. If they are literary graduates, and have not paid special attention to this branch of study, they will find it refreshing, and will add much to their stock of information. There is one other thing to which all our young preachers should pay special attention. It is orthography, and though they may have been graduated at a college, they have used of application. A college course furnishes only the tools and the manner of using them in further progress. A young man may complete the prescribed course, but he can not say his "education is finished." The proper pronunciation of words is a fine accomplishment in anyone. I would advise all to have a dictionary always convenient when writing or studying, to be consulted in doubtful cases; and should they hear a word pronounced in a manner differing from that to which they have been accustomed, it should be noted and examined.

I heard Bishop Palmer give the word coadjutor a pronunciation which I had not heard before, and I asked myself the question: Have I been pronouncing that word wrong? He was correct in the pronunciation. I will give your readers a few, and ask them, how many they have been pronouncing correctly? Theodasenia, Hosea, Ballah, gun arabic, finance, toward, only, often, progress, process, arena, vehement, cement, discipline, were, are, extraordinary, demonstrated, peremptory, lycium, museum, disputable, irrevocable, artificer, coadjutor, celiacy, bade, exquisite, recess, acorn, photography, bronchitis, recreation, oasis, theatre, leisure, therefore, Rucala.

More unusual words might be given, but these are sufficient for my purpose.

Well, I must pause here without reaching what I intended for this "paper."

Fraternally,
J. M. P.

Delayed Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: One eventful year has passed since I visited the Crescent City, where I enjoyed eight weeks of the World's Exposition. The time has passed when a description of the various and multifarious exhibits would be of interest to your readers. Other pens gave a far more interesting and accurate description than this writer could hope to give. By your permission I will mention some pleasant interviews with acquaintances of former years, together with the formation of new ones.

First, allow me to say, the first day I reached your city, after securing a boarding house, I visited the Advocate office and made the acquaintance of the genial publishers. Not long after you, Mr. Editor, was at your desk, I found you a younger man than I had supposed, judging your age from your full-grown editorials. Since making your personal acquaintance, I have read the productions of your brain and pen with more interest than I otherwise would have done. Shortly after my arrival I was presented with a ticket, from Mrs. S. L. Hill, to attend a festival held in a building adjoining the St. Charles Avenue Church. Here I met with the new sainted Bishop Parker and his bereaved companion, with many others enjoying the social entertainment. The Bishop introduced me to the friends, as "one of the veteran itinerant preachers of Texas." At that time the Bishop was enjoying his usual health and vivacious spirits. He inquired after the preachers in Texas, for whom he felt a warm attachment. I might here remark that this brotherly feeling was fully reciprocated on the part of our preachers.

The first Sabbath I attended St. Charles Avenue Church, expecting to hear a sermon from their favorite pastor, Bro. Carruth. The pulpit was occupied by Rev. H. B. Johnson, D. D., who delivered an excellent discourse, after which the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. I realized that it was good to be there. This day I dined with Bro. Hill, 22 St. Charles street, after which, listened with much interest to the singing of the sweet voices of Zion, to which his sprightly children responded. The evening was pleasantly spent. I also dined with my friend and brother, Rev. Dr. J. B. A. Abrams. I was well acquainted with the doctor during his sojourn at St. Luke University, Carroll Hill, Texas. I remember, to have been elected an honorary member of the Omega Society, after hearing the young German discuss the question debated by the members, I remarked to the young man who was bearing with me: "Mark what I say, young Abrams has more brains than any of you, and, if he lives, is destined to make his mark in the world," and so he has! I rejoice in his perseverance and success. Now in the prime of life, a thoroughly consecrated minister of the gospel; no false eulogy to say, that he is a good preacher, pastor and writer, moving quietly on in the front ranks of Methodism.

I was also pleased to meet with my old friend and brother, Leonard Pash, with whom I had not met since I received the hospitality of his house, in 1879, then a leading commission merchant of your city. If since then he has sustained financial losses, he has not lost favor with God, but is still striving on life's last decade to make his "calling and election sure."

The second Sabbath, I heard a sermon from Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter, pastor of Carondelet Street Church. I was all the more anxious to hear him from the fact of reading and preserving his "Bible Address" delivered, January 1, 1882.

After spending ten days of pleasant sojourn in the city, not regretting the expense incurred, I was homeward bound. Judge of my sad surprise when I reached Marshall, March 5, at a telegram announcing the sudden death of our beloved Bishop Parker! Little did he or the writer think when we parted, and he spoke of his intention soon to leave to hold the Baltimore Conference that his next Conference would be with the angels in heaven and his departed episcopal colleagues in "that house not made with hands eternal in the heavens." In the wise dispensations of Providence, so it is, and we must submit to the church's loss and heaven's gain.

A Hearty Welcome.

"Better late than never" is a wise adage. It is always well to start in time even though one may be late. I entered upon my new work, January 6, in time to preach on the second Sunday. During the month of January I filled appointments as best I could, exposure to the inclement weather impaired my vocal organs, and compelled me to return home. I returned to the circuit in February for the third Sabbath to attend quarterly meeting, and with it came the assurance that our temporal wants would be supplied. At the parsonage gate we were met by quite a number of our ladies, who received us so cordially that we were made to feel at home at once. After seeing that we were comfortably installed in the parsonage, the ladies quietly withdrew and left us to discuss our new work and home over a nice warm supper. After supper we found that there had been provided a full set of kitchen utensils. The table set also was complete. In the storeroom we found flour, sugar, coffee, molasses, ham, and canned goods in great variety. In short everything necessary for housekeeping. We have been greeted at each service with a large congregation. At our first quarterly meeting, on Sunday, the fourteenth instant, after a missionary sermon by Rev. J. M. Weems, our presiding elder, the writer took up a collection to raise the assessments ordered by the Conference, to which the people responded very cheerfully. In about ten minutes $161 was raised. Eighty-five dollars amount in full of our foreign missionary assessment—has been sent to Dr. Kelley. Three hundred and forty dollars has been reported thus far for repairing our church and parsonage. Our people have literally, as well as figuratively, passed through the fire, and we think, under the circumstances, they are doing nobly. Already the Spirit has been felt in power and demonstration, and we hope soon to see times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

LAKE PROVIDENCE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: As I am not in the habit of troubling you with laudatory articles, I know you will bear with me while I tell all the readers of the Advocate of the princely provision made by the generous people of Lake Providence for the comfort and happiness of their present pastor.

The stewards have provided for us the most commodious, comfortable and convenient house to be obtained in the town.

Bro. Woodbridge was seventy-one years of age, and had been preaching fifty-one years. He has been pastor of this church fourteen years. He was a man of extensive learning, deep piety and great pulpit power. His was one among the sweetest Christian spirits I have seen my good fortune to know. I thank God that I ever knew him. I feel better for having been associated with him. He loved his church and was a strong advocate of the doctrines of his church, yet he was free from bigotry and sectarianism. His love for Christ and immortal souls overleaped the narrow confines of denominationalism, and sectarianism, and while he offered the hand of Christian fellowship to all, he exhorted all to follow Christ. Not men nor creeds, but Christ, faith in Christ, love to God and man, were prominent elements in his character. In his walk and conversation, he exhibited the excellency of the gospel of Christ.

The burial service was conducted yesterday, by Rev. W. B. Bingham, of Hazlehurst, who preached an excellent and appropriate sermon from 11. Timothy iv. 7-8. The writer and Bro. Purser, of the Baptist Church assisted in the service. His remains were followed to the cemetery by weeping parishioners, and a host of sorrowing friends.

He leaves a wife and seven children. Three of his sons are honored ministers of the gospel—one is stationed in Chicago, one in Rodney, Miss., and one is a missionary in China. It is a high honor God has conferred upon him in calling three out of five sons into the gospel ministry. We will miss him here. I feel that a comrade in the Lord's host has fallen by my side.

May the same grace that supported him, sustain his bereaved family. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace." Yours fraternally,

PORT GIBSON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Port Gibson sends twenty dollars this morning for foreign missions. Our collections are taken weekly; hence, not quite one-fourth was ready now. But we will result again before long. The prospect of entertaining the Conference next November is already stimulating our people to repair their church. We have spent since Conference about two hundred dollars. Signs of the painter's brush will soon be seen on those massive walls. Bro. Black gave us the benefit of two lectures, from which we received eighty-five dollars net. The lectures were appreciated by our people. Our temple and our homes will be ready for the Conference. Collections thus far are in advance of same date last year. The weekly contribution system is growing more popular with the church here. Many kindnesses by way of "poundings," and a nice suit of clothes, etc., were shown the inmates of the parsonage last fall. For which we will ever be grateful.

Yours truly,
D. P. BRADFORD.

2. The kind and energetic ladies have amply supplied said house with all necessary furniture from kitchen to parlor, including beautiful window shades and matting for floors.

3. They have also supplied the lauder generously with almost every article of provision the market affords, and on the arrival of my family they had the table set and a beautiful supply of excellent provisions elegantly prepared, and a right royal feast we had.

4. Not satisfied with all this, they have provided a good cow for us, that we may have milk and butter, and knowing the loneliness of Methodist preachers for chickens, are supplying us with quite a number of them. In fact, Mr. Editor, you can hardly conceive of a want that has not already been anticipated by these ladies, nor a recurring one that is not immediately supplied.

This kind of treatment more than counterbalances the inconvenience of itinerant life, and makes me feel like recommending myself to the great work of the ministry. I pray, Mr. Editor, that the Lord, through my instrumentality, may supply them with spiritual blessings as they have supplied myself and family with temporal things.

Yours truly,
THOS. J. UFFIN.

HATTIESBURG CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Since my former note of things, the publication of which was delayed (necessarily, no doubt), the situation has materially changed, greatly improved. We are in the parsonage at home once more. With some additions and improvements, which are being provided for, this will be a comfortable home for the preacher. Our people are poor; the church is weak, but with a revival of spirituality will come other good things—consolation, liberality, etc.

Our prayer meeting and Sunday-school interest is growing, and with pleasant weather I have no doubt we will see a better time generally. We have not had the "pounding" that some preachers' families have enjoyed, but we have not been forgotten. A few good friends anticipated the wants of the "inner man," and rations for several days were generously provided. A good sister, whose kindness we will not soon forget, superintended the preparation of the parsonage and acted as a committee of reception for my family on their arrival.

Our people are taking a lively interest in the temperance reform. We have here at Hattiesburg a Prohibition Club, made up of both sexes, and a Woman's Christian Temperance Union beside. Our women are working nobly in this good cause. Next Tuesday evening we expect a visit from Mrs. Wells, and anticipate a good time. Pray for us.

J. J. GARRIS.

A Church Needed.

MR. EDITOR: We are but "a feeble folk," yet we hope by the help of the Lord and our friends to build a church at Pearl River station, on the Norfolk and Western Railroad. This is a new appointment in the Poplarville circuit. Our young pastor, Bro. Selby, is endeavoring himself to the people, and is trying to make his flock appreciate the fact that they can not "be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease." So he has set them to work.

Last year we talked about building a church. This year (D. V.) we will build one. A committee of young ladies, who believe in success, have been appointed to carry it through. They are at work in earnest.

We want to build a church "plain and decent with free seats," as advised in the Discipline. If that means a barn we have not so read the Discipline. We wish to build a church that will not make us ashamed to ask any of the "preachers" who "desire the office of a Bishop" (if any such there be), to come and preach for us. With all expected means we will only be able to build a very common "plain and decent" one, so we thought as others that were, perhaps, no more needy or deserving had appealed to the generosity of the readers of our Advocate, we would do the same. The church will do much good at this point. It is the junction of Messrs. Poltovent and Favre's private railroad from Abita Springs, now completed or nearly so, and the church will have a work to do in the future.

We would be thankful for any sum that would enable us to go on with our good work. We do not want to hang "our harps upon the willows," or have to weep with Nehemiah because Zion is desolate. Any one feeling able or willing to send us any aid will have our grateful thanks, and I will also acknowledge the same through the Advocate, and hand all sums to the young ladies Building Committee. For their comfort let all who send read Nehemiah xiii. 11.

MRS. L. GRARY SAILER.

Resolutions of Regard.

The Woman's Missionary Society met the first Monday in February, 1886. They appointed a committee to draft resolutions in regard to the removal of our much loved Sister Weems to another field of labor.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we, as a society, regret her removal so sincerely. We miss her presence more and more as time moves on. Her kind, tender and loving sympathy, her worth and merit we highly appreciated. While exerting an untiring energy in behalf of heaven, she was ever ready to aid suffering humanity in every way possible. With her intuition she could divine plans and execute them, while the thought would have lain dormant with others. How often has she spoken words of encouragement to the allotted sisters, advising them to do their duty, that God would comfort, sustain, and strengthen them. She was ever ready to work for the church and Sunday-school. As a society, we feel that our brightest light has been removed, and our most faithful worker taken from our little band. Let us pray that the star that shed its brilliancy over our society may also as beautiful and bright in some other society. We feel our loss deeply. None knew her but to love her.

Resolved, That we commend her to the love and sympathy of the women of the Brookhaven district, trusting that she will prove a blessing to them, as she did to us.

Adopted. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on the minutes, and a copy sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

MRS. DELLA DAVIS,

A Work for Women.

MR. EDITOR: Women may not be called to preach, as some of our good brethren just now are saying, but if you will allow me, I think I can suggest a work which none will deny them the right to do with all their might. That work is in the Sunday-school. Call it preaching, or prophesying, or what you please, it makes no difference as to the name, so the work is done; and in my judgment, backed by long years of experience, there are none so fitted, called, if you please, to it as women. The only difficulty is to make them see their duty in the matter. That there is a work, a great work in this field for some one to do, let the thousands of children growing up without any sort of Christian influence answer. Whose hand should lead them, whose tender, loving heart should guide them, whose sweet voice should cheer them, but woman? Who knows the pitfalls along their life's way better than woman, and who should be more ready than women to draw them into the sure way? Whose heart throbs with stronger pulsation for the little ones than mother's, and who should be more willing to forget self, ease, comfort, in the effort to save these dear ones from mother's? Then why is it that so many Sunday-schools drag along in nominal existence with half or less of the young people in their neighborhood attending, and few, if any, mothers taking part? Why is it that so many neighborhoods are without Sunday-schools or anything else to take their place? The children are growing up; life, with all its duties and fearful responsibilities, is opening before them, while no one seems to care what will become of them. Oh, it is a dreadful to think of such a state of things, and of the mothers who can sit still and contemplate the terrible fate which awaits their children! Can it be that the contemptible arrogance of men so long denying to women the right and the duty of doing all, she can in God's vineyard so chilled her energies that she can sit down and see her offspring grow up around her in ignorance of God and all the civilizing and ennobling principles of the gospel of Christ, because some man can not be found who is willing to forgo his ease and take the trouble to work up the people to a sense of their duty. Oh, ye mothers and grown-up women all over the land, you have neglected your duty and are unexcusably failing in your obligations where you have not boldly come to the front in this matter. No man on earth has more obligations to train up a child in the way he should go than has woman, and man's failure here does not excuse her at all. Woman's duty here is as much personal as the exercise of faith, and I beg you, oh woman, to act well your part, for some day you will have to give an account of those perils entrusted to your care. God will hold you guiltless because your hands and some other man has not got the moral courage to pray in public and lead a Sunday-school, nor will you be excused when you try to avoid responsibility by turning over the religious training of your children to some other person. You can not delegate your work to another, no matter how good or faithful. Upon you alone rests this fearful responsibility. The Sunday-school is the best help ever offered a mother in this matter, and how can she fall to embrace it? It will not do to simply send the children. This, of course, is better than no effort at all, but is not enough. She must go in person, must be interested, must work in some way, must show the little ones her interest, and preach (yes, preach) by example, the best of all preaching, before her responsibility is fully met.

ORIGIN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

THURSDAY, MARCH 18, 1886.

When whiskey men begin the day, cutting business, it is high time for the friends of morality to organize. We must help those who belong to the household of faith.

Rev. J. N. Tucker, of the Terry circuit, Mississippi Conference, has sent to Dr. Kelley two thirds of his assessment, and has the balance secured in good subscriptions.

The execution of Ford and Murphy on Friday last, ends the most remarkable case in the history of Louisiana criminal jurisprudence. From the day of the dreadful murder of "Cap. Murphy" until the hour these unfortunate men died upon the scaffold, the case has been ever present in the minds of the community. After conviction every effort was made to save their lives. At one time success seemed assured, but the Board of Pardons refused to recommend a commutation, and this condemned had to die. The night before the execution the two men took poison, and up to the hour when they were carried upon the scaffold had not fully regained consciousness. Our opinion upon the merits of this case has been freely expressed. It is a fearful thing for mortals to dictate the end of a hangman's rope, but the safety of human life demands a rigid punishment of crime. No doubt this execution will teach a much-needed lesson to this and other communities in the State. We believe in the enthronement of law as our only protection of life and property.

We had occasion recently to reproduce an item about this number of ministers received into the Presbyterian Church from other churches since 1883, and made some comments thereon. Having just listened to a discourse from Rev. Dr. Bunting, agent of the Southwestern Presbyterian University, on Christian Education, in which he lamented their lack of ministers and said for a number of years their candidates did not equal the deaths and removals, we made some observations on the general subject. Our remarks were certainly kindly in spirit and were not intended to be hypercritical. But to our utter amazement our near neighbor, the Southwestern Presbyterian, takes offense and resents our observations as an unwarranted impertinence. Referring to the ministers who leave other churches for his, Dr. Smith says: "We do not hold that these are as thoroughly qualified, in all respects, as ministers trained in our own schools, but we receive them as brethren and treat them as such." Complacent to be sure. And then the Doctor proceeds to discuss our "most extraordinary blunder" and to relieve our "lacerated sensibilities." All of which we submit is purely gratuitous. Nothing was said or intended to provoke such a display of temper. The Doctor has discussed Romanism so much until he has unconsciously become inoculated with her pet dogma. To use a paraphrase of Sidney Smith, we must say of our neighbor that his fort is theology, his foible, infallibility.

The Nashville American, of March 11, contains a two-column article about the Southern Methodist Publishing House and the books issued during the past year. It is certainly a very gratifying exhibit of the success of the House. The writer makes extended mention of several volumes now passing through the press. Of that one in which we have some special interest the following is said: "Still another rare volume will soon adorn the bookshelves, and will thence quickly find its way to libraries and center-tables. This is the life and writings of the late Bishop Linus Parker, by Dr. C. B. Galloway, editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It is on a somewhat unique line—not so ponderous a work as that of the Georgians, it is true, yet replete with a fund of philosophy and criticism remarkable for its charming variety and its sprightliness of tone. The biography by Dr. Galloway is eminently faithful to the subject. He wields a most graceful pen. In the colloquial of the Bishop's writings he has evinced well-nigh faultless taste. Altogether he seems to have been the right man for this undertaking. Bishop McTear has supplied the introduction, which is a characteristic performance, bold, just, and sensible throughout."

A Resident Episcopacy.

The discussion of our foreign missions and their superintendence, necessarily involves some vital questions connected with our episcopacy. There is general agreement that the election of Bishops for a foreign field is violative of our constitutional law. It infringes upon the principle of "itinerant general superintendency" and tends to develop a diocesan episcopacy. That point is settled. But another question is raised of scarcely less importance—the power to fix the residences of Bishops. As a prudential measure, and in the interest of more thorough administration, the domiciles of our chief pastors should be arranged somewhat according to the geography. They ought not all to reside in the same locality, but in the different sections of our wide connection. This is important, and has been so regarded by the Bishops.

But is there compulsory power to specifically fix their residences? And if so, where is it lodged? These are questions of vital significance and invite the careful review of the constitution of the church. We have no hesitancy in saying that such a power is not delegated to the General Conference. That body may suggest or request a distribution of episcopal residences, but can not authoritatively command it. Such a doctrine is inimical to the Southern Methodist theory of episcopacy. One who has intelligently studied the great debates in the General Conference of 1844, needs no further argument to prove that proposition. The constitutional argument of Bishop Soule and the masterly state paper of Dr. Bascom, known as the "Protest of the Minority" clearly set forth the principle to which we of the South have jealously adhered. We have no patience with ecclesiastical lordship, but our integrity as a church depends upon adherence to constitutional and statutory law. If the suggested measure is desirable or necessary, let us change this constitution.

To sustain this position let us look at some facts of history. The discussion of Bishop Andrew's case, in 1844, developed two theories of Methodist episcopacy. That entertained by the majority, and which was most elaborately expounded by Dr. Hamline, made the Bishop a creature of the General Conference—a "mutual functionary"—to be relieved of office or deposed according to the will of a majority of that body and without form of trial. The minority held that the episcopacy is a co-ordinate branch of the church government, and is subject to the General Conference only within certain prescribed limitations. In support of that doctrine the "Protest of Minority" said: "The power to appoint does not necessarily involve the power to remove; and when the appointing power is derivative, as in the case of the General Conference, its power of removal does not accrue at all, unless by consent of the co-ordinate branches of the government, expressed by law, made and provided in the case. When the Legislature of a State—to appeal to analogy for illustration—appoints a judge or senator in Congress, does the judge or senator thereby become the officer or creature of the Legislature? Or is he the officer or senatorial representative of the State of which the Legislature is the mere organ? And does the power of removal follow that of appointment? The answer is negative in both cases, and applies equally to the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who, instead of being the officers of the General Conference, are de facto the officers and servants of the church, chosen by the General Conference, as its organ of action, and no right of removal accrues, except as they fall to accomplish the aims of the church in their appointment, and then only in accordance with the provisions of law." By this doctrine our section has consistently adhered and on it organized the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The logic of the above necessarily forbids the General Conference interfering with the itinerant general superintendency even to fixing their domiciles. That matter Bishops themselves should arrange, and we repeat, according to our ecclesiastical geography.

Holding the theory of the majority in the General Conference of 1844, our brethren of Methodist Episcopal Church assign their Bishops to residence in certain localities. Bishop Harris resides in New York, Bishop Foster in Boston, and Bishop Malleson in New Orleans, by General Conference appointment. That question of law was presented to their committee on judiciary in the General Conference of 1884, with the following response: "It is the opinion of the committee that the General Conference has power to fix the residences of any of its Bishops in any part of the territory occupied by the Methodist Episcopal Church."

That is entirely consistent with the theory on which they deposed Bishop Andrew. But our authoritative interpretation of the third restrictive rule forbids such an assumption of power by one co-ordinate branch of the church government over another.

On this subject our uniformly lucid and logical conferees of the Wesleyan Advocate is betrayed into some confusion. He concludes an article as follows:

It strikes us as very strange to see persons writing against a Bishop's going to live in China, as though his doing so would make him a resident Bishop. Suppose the General Conference should say by resolution, or the evident drift of debate, a Bishop ought not to live in Tennessee, would that be any more violative or evasive of our economy than to say by like action or debate that a Bishop ought not to live in China?

Did not Bishop Granberry move from Richmond to St. Louis? Might not Bishop Wilson move from Baltimore to Shanghai without violating or evading any law?

Of course a domicile does not make a resident Bishop in a technical sense. Certainly there is no violation or evasion of any law for a Bishop to reside in Richmond, Nashville, Baltimore or Shanghai. But when our brother intimates that the General Conference by resolution can fix these residences, we do claim there is legal objection. The Bishops can and should arrange this important matter themselves, but the General Conference can not do it.

We most earnestly approve the plan of our chief pastors residing in the different localities of our connection. Some sections have doubtless suffered for lack of episcopal service in consequence of the distant residence of the Bishops. This should be considered and arranged by them in view of the wants of the church at large.

Dr. Garland Speaks.

At the suggestion of the Texas Advocate Dr. Garland has written a short communication explanatory of his letter which has occasioned so much interesting discussion in the church press. We reproduce below from the columns of the Nashville Advocate, the Doctor's entire article. He states quite explicitly what his plan does, and does not propose. Had his first letter been as positive and clear in statement, many points discussed in the papers would never have been raised. This article is in accord with what we have advocated. That his plan does not look toward diocesan episcopacy he refers to his original communication. We are quite sure that this Doctor did not favor such a probability, but as to whether that would be the tendency of his plan is a question. The unexpected often occurs with the best laid plans of the wisest men.

It is matter of pleasure that while there has been free interchange of opinion, Dr. Garland's article has been fairly discussed and its distinguished author treated with profound respect. He certainly awakes the ecclesiastical slumbers of the church and stimulated inquiry along its most important lines. We rejoice at its publication and its thought-provoking suggestions. The merits of his plan may yet be considered. We have spoken at length on the general subject and continued investigation only confirms our published convictions. Read the article:

When I published a communication on "Our Foreign Missions," it was designed to provoke a discussion, out of which might emerge, first, a conviction that our foreign missions need re-organization; and second, a plan by which they may be rendered more efficient. My object has been fully accomplished. The subject is discussed in nearly all of our church papers; and I hope that the wisdom of the church, under the guidance of the Divine Spirit, may be brought to just conclusions concerning it.

I have no wish to enforce my opinions upon anyone. When I stated them I gave the grounds of them—the reasons which commended them to my own judgment. I expected them to be antagonized; indeed I preferred that they should be, for if they are unopposed no one can be more interested in knowing it than myself, and no one will be more ready to discard them. I have no desire for personal triumph in debate, but I feel a deep concern in the triumph of truth. Let me might mislead anyone, I desired my views to be settled to the bottom and candidly criticized, that they might stand alone upon their intrinsic merit. I expected, however, that they would be criticized fairly, by counter argumentation, and not by bald assertion. It was my purpose to make no reply to any thing that might be written concerning them. Having made my statement, as I thought, plainly, and having offered reasons to sustain them, I was willing to leave the issue, without another word, to the public verdict. But from this purpose I am driven by the direct appeal of the Texas Christian Advocate, which heads this article. My answer shall be brief.

My plan does not embrace the election of a Bishop for any field exclusively. It does not propose to elect any Bishop with localized functions and powers.

It does not propose to elect any one Bishop in a manner different from all the rest. But it does propose to use our Bishops, alike equal in office and general in functions, in a manner, in my judgment, best calculated to promote the interests of the church.

For proof that nothing in my plan looks toward a diocesan episcopacy, I refer to my original communication.

General Conference Sessions—Where.

In a characteristic letter in the Nashville Advocate Dr. Lafferty discusses the propriety of holding the General Conference sessions at the White Sulphur Springs, in Virginia. It is argued that the body is becoming too large for comfortable entertainment in any of our large cities. The matter is also being considered by our brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church. At their last General Conference a commission was appointed to devise a better plan for entertaining the great law-making body of the church. Of course this new suggestion of meeting at a great watering-place will involve largely increased expense. Such a necessity is not yet upon us. We have cities able and ready to provide for the General Conference and will be amply repaid in the personal intercourse and ministry of the members.

We suggest the old plan with shorter sessions. There is no need to consume three weeks or a month in the ordinary work of a General Conference. It is a business gathering and should be devoted to work. The afternoons should be given to committee work and the mornings and evenings to legislative sessions. However pleasant and desirable to hear much preaching, that is not the occasion for it. Let the business be transacted carefully but promptly, and the preachers return to their pulpits and the laymen to their professions and vocations.

We copy a few paragraphs from Dr. Lafferty's letter:

The month of May in Atlanta was hot to the men from higher latitudes. In Memphis Dr. Bond mopped his face and anatomized the mosquitoes. He wrote, "Everybody is sick." In Nashville the percentage of guests going around with Jamaica ginger in side pockets was surprising. New Orleans on the edge of June is as Nebuchadnezzar's furnace to the people from the Potomac and Montana. This soda water tickets and car fares would well-nigh pay a bill at the White Sulphur.

At the famous Virginia Fountain every delegate could dine at the same hour—not a moment lost. The grand parlor will seat five hundred—high pitched, airy, full of windows—no low basements, stifling and dark. There are no visitors in May. Rooms are ready for a thousand and more. Each delegate could "be at a hotel" and have his own quiet and elegant cottage. He could bring his wife. The miles of avenues under great oaks, amid acres of the blue grass campus, would exercise the sedentary and cool off the excited church statesman.

Mrs. M. L. Wells addressed the citizens of Moss Point on the night of the first instant, on the subject of temperance. The large and intelligent audience present were highly delighted and greatly edified by the remarks of this Christian woman. Deep impressions were made; the hearts of women and men, young and old, were stirred and fired, and the cause of temperance received an impulse that we hope will roll it on to ultimate success in this community. The women of Moss Point had organized a Woman's Christian Temperance Union and were nobly working in the good cause. The visit and lecture of Mrs. Wells helped them greatly and made a fine impression in their favor. Lingering prejudices against woman's lecturing were removed from the minds of good persons, and many warm hearts are grateful to God for her visit and lecture, and fervent prayers ascend for blessings upon her and her good work.

R. J. JONES.

MOSS POINT, MISS., March 8, 1886.

Rev. T. W. Lewis, of the North Mississippi Conference, writes us as follows: Yesterday I asked my Carrollton Church for all the Conference collections, the amount being $61, and I got $122. Two months ago I got $21 for Bishops' fund and one-fourth assessment for foreign missions, making the total amount paid, $143.

Rev. J. W. Honnoll, presiding elder of the Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference, and a delegate to the General Conference, thus writes on an important question: The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of March 11, has come, I think, to the correct conclusion on the subject of Bishops for foreign missions. Organize an Annual Conference in every mission and let the Bishops serve them as they do other Conferences, and in the absence of a Bishop let the Conference elect its president. This would certainly meet every demand and give satisfaction to all. This is the plan. Speak it out plainly and pass it around. CLARKSVILLE, MISS., March 14, 1886.

The Central Mexican Mission Conference.

BY BISHOP J. C. KEENER.

ITS FORMATION, STATISTICS AND FUTURE.

Mrs. Editor: The Central Mexican Mission Conference adjourned this morning. I send you herewith a list of appointments. In all, forty-five persons were appointed. During the last year we were put upon short allowance, and had to discontinue the employment of several valuable ministers for lack of funds. On the whole, the preachers endured patiently the restricted support; and the narrow income was not without its wholesome influence in eliminating superfluous expenditures. Good work has been done; many have been added to the church, and we have a membership of 1,810, as against 1,620 of last Conference, besides 22 local preachers; 65 Sunday-schools, with 1,369 scholars—a considerable gain; 22 day schools, with 736 day scholars; 451 adult baptisms and 240 infant. There were $190 60 collected for missions, $9 75 for education, $71 39 for church building, $384 35 for charitable objects, $402 52 for Bibles and Testaments. Bibles sold, 1741; other books, 208; given away, 207. Raised for periodicals and books, $74 83; subscribers paying, 696.

Received on trial—Francisco Mendez, Higinio Lezada, Apolo Rios, A. Blanco, Torrvio Rodriguez, J. Flores, Delfino Sandoval, Silvario Ocampo, Sacramento Vera, Agatio Portugal, Lazaro Hernandez, Sebastian de Tovar, Eulogio Gomez.

Remaining on trial—Feliciano Maya, L. A. Morales, A. V. Vega, Sothenes M. Reyes, D. O. Monsalvo, Primitivo Martinez, F. Gonzales in class of first year.

Admitted into full connection—Luis G. Prieto, Bruno G. Reyes, Antonio B. Lopez, Domingo Romero, Jose Oliva, Jose B. Alarcon, Margarita H. Cuevas and S. Gallegos are continued in class of third class.

Readmitted—Cruz Martinez.

Deacons of one year—Tranquillo del Valle, Donaciano Paz.

Elected deacons—Luis G. Prieto, Bruno G. Reyes, Antonio B. Lopez, Domingo Romero, Jose Oliva, Jose B. Alarcon.

Ordained deacons on Monday, March 1—Luis G. Prieto, Bruno G. Reyes, Antonio B. Lopez, Domingo Romero.

The next Conference meets at Toluca. The vote on a change of name stood—ayes, 0; noes, 17. Dr. Patterson was elected delegate to General Conference, and K. F. Aguilar, clerical alternate. There being no lay members, no laymen were elected.

The Central Mexican Mission Conference, though regularly formed at this session for the first time by the transfer of those missionaries who belonged to Conferences at home, and by classifying the Mexican preachers and helpers, was virtually working all during this past year in Conference system—that is, the several presiding elders were receiving, each one, his drafts for the support of his preachers and schools; so that now everything went off as promptly and smoothly as at any of our older Conferences. I believe that a large majority of the body would have been well pleased to continue indefinitely in the leading strings of a superintendency, simply because it was easier than to take the responsibility of walking alone. Dr. Patterson has certainly so managed the mission as to attach all its members strongly to himself. We have the most perfect harmony within. And it is but proper I should say, now that his superintendency closes after his seven years' work, that he has been quiet, wise and courageous in the development of the Central Mexican Mission from its narrow proportions in 1878 to its present breadth. The centres have been wisely selected, which now constitute the heads of the several districts. Should the Conference move forward in elements of strength during the next dozen years as much as it has since 1873, we shall have several Methodist Conferences, each as strong as the present one.

Our greatest need at present is a good Mexican biblical training-school. This we expect to locate permanently at Tacubaya—a delightful suburban town within fifteen minutes' car ride of the City of Mexico. It is on high, rolling ground, and the residence-place of many of the best citizens of the State. Property is cheaper there, and the site in every way is desirable for a school. Next to this is a demand for a larger paper to be published twice a month, at least, which shall maintain our doctrines and instruct our people in the Wesleyan theology. The Evangelista has done good work; but it has created a demand for more effort in the same direction. The Mexicans are a reading people. The word of God, tracts, religious periodicals are mighty agencies here in support of the missionary. They are all anxious to learn and willing to be taught.

The repressive policy of Rome, keeping the Bible from the people and discouraging the exercise of private judgment in the things of God, only intensified their desire to search for themselves the mine of spiritual truth to which their own Mexican Reformation has introduced them. It is either for books of saving truth in accord with Christianity—the religion of the Bible—to command their attention, or it is the literature of rationalism and sheer infidelity that will preoccupy and possess their minds. The church can not remain ignorant of the strength of this arm of Protestant Christianity—the steam press.

During the year the Holy Spirit has set his approving seal upon the labors of our preachers at several points, and souls have been clearly converted. The mob has been quieted, and numbers have filled the house and stood about the door and heard patiently the discussion of Protestant doctrine as compared with Roman dogma. In places where no one could preach without peril of life a few years since, now we have the fullest access to this people and are protected by the authorities.

It seems to me that the missionary work in Mexico, both in the bounds of the Border Mission and of the Central Mission of our church, has had as large favor of God and genuine success as the most hopeful and sanguine Christian could have possibly conceived at the opening of these missions, now fully thirteen years ago. What missionary work in the world could have done more than to have developed into two full-orded Annual Conferences from one single Mexican convert—Alcio Hernandez!

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, March 12.—The House committee on education is holding itself in an effort to kill the educational bill. The programme is to delay reporting to the House until a late day, when the calendar will be crowded and the way pretty well blocked. By not to report the bill until the third Friday in April, a day so late that little may be expected of the House. By that time the appropriation bills will all have been reported, the tariff bill will probably be undergoing discussion, and the silver and other bills will be pressing for attention.

It is asserted that only four members of the committee favor the bill, and among other influences at work against it is the threat, based only on conjecture, that the President disapproves of it. The belief is that, given a fair chance in the House, the bill would pass. It would be necessary for the West and South, the two sections largely interested in it, to stand solidly together to secure that result. The situation may undergo a change, but the present outlook for the measure is a gloomy one.

CINCINNATI, O., March 12.—Nat C. Goodwin, who was indicted for appearing in the theatrical performance of Sunday, entered a plea of guilty to-day before Judge Houston, and was fined $10 and costs. The latter amounted to $10. In the Police Court the cases of Miss Lillian Lewis, Sadie Henson, Hattie Pike, J. J. Dowling and Max Arnold, charged with taking part in theatrical performances last Sunday, were called. They all pleaded guilty and the Judge fined each $10 and costs. He took occasion to arraign Mayor Smith for not exercising his power to close concert saloons on Sunday.

Leading men of both parties are anxiously waiting to see if the Sunday question—a local issue—will be identical with one or the other of the great political parties. The speeches of both Judge Fitzgerald and Archbishop Elder last night at the reception of the latter were conspicuously in favor of law and order, of Sabbath observance and of temperance.

In the case of the actors in the same Judge Fitzgerald's court to day the judge took occasion to read a lecture to the Attorney of the Law and Order League and to the mayor, for not suppressing the Sunday concert saloons. He said it was in their power to suppress them under the law against common law on Sunday, and was against selling liquors on premises.

The impression is gaining strength here from such facts as the above that the Law and Order League will have the backing of the consolidated powers of the Catholic Church in enforcing the Sunday law, or so far as to stop theatrical performances on Sunday.

New York, March 12.—Henry J. Hall, seventy-two years old, committed suicide to-day at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. He was by profession a mining engineer, and is said to have sunk the first shaft in California at the time of the gold discoveries. He became interested in several paying mines, and lived handsomely.

Mr. Hall had been suffering from liver trouble and dyspepsia in an aggravated form. His wife was in an adjoining room when he killed himself by shooting through the right temple. He is said to be a millionaire.

New Boston, Mich., March 13.—Myron Nowland, aged thirteen, while in school Monday last printed some letters on the back of his hand with red ink. Later the hand and arm began to swell rapidly and soon after convulsions set in, continuing all Thursday, when the boy died. He was undoubtedly poisoned by the ink.

PITTSBURGH, March 13.—At a meeting of the miners of the Clearfield region at Tyrone, Pa., to-day it was resolved to strike for an increase of 10 cents per ton. The Clearfield district includes sixty mines employing 3,000 men. The miners have all quit work and the action taken at to-day's meeting makes the strike general. It is estimated that 10,000 miners are engaged in the strike.

DE FENAR SPRINGS, Fla., March 14.—The Sabbath at the Florida Chautauqua opened with a devotional hour, led by Dr. Alder of Pennsylvania. Dr. Deems of the Church of the Strangers, New York, preached at 11 a. m., and Rev. G. W. Clark, brother of Bishop Clark of Rhode Island, preached at 2 p. m. Dr. McKee of the Presbyterian Church of Danville, Ky., held a children's meeting at 4 o'clock, and Dr. Norton conducted vespers at 5 o'clock. Dr. S. G. Smith, of St. Paul, Minn., preached at night.

De Witt Miller of Philadelphia, opens to-morrow the intellectual feast of the coming week with a lecture on "Love, Courtship and Marriage."

New York, March 14.—The publishers of cheap fiction are in haste to get forth stories made up of labor strikes. Every establishment in that line of business has gone at it tremendously. Two rival story papers here are printing each an addition of 6 million copies of sheet containing the opening chapters of a novel on the subject, and these are forwarded as fast as possible for free distribution in cities where mechanics are most numerous, especially where strikes are in progress. Ten cent books, too, are being heavily printed. In some instances old novels are revised or edited and others rapid composers are dictating the matter to short-hand writers. There are six large concerns in this line of publishing, and about all their presses are working on strike fiction. Indiana, detective and news for the time being relegated to the background, and the hasty crop of heroes are leaders of strikes.

The Methodist Episcopal and the Protestant Episcopal churches will this week go into open antagonism on the temperance question. Each desires to impress its way of reform on the State Legislature, with a view to influencing the members in the forthcoming enactment as to liquor. Some change of the existing law is nearly certain. The Church Temperance Society is an organization of Protestant Episcopalians, headed by Assistant Bishop Potter, and embracing most of the city rectors, and it advocates moderate drinking instead of total abstinence. It has sent to Albany a bill fixing high license for alcoholic beverages, and the ministry is requested to promote that measure in the pulpit and elsewhere. The Methodists are strong for total abstinence. At this week's meeting of the city pastors, held at the Episcopal church, it was voted to preach to-day in favor of submitting a constitutional amendment to the people prohibiting the manufacture and sale of rum in the State. These sermons will be followed by special meetings during the week.

and the sentiment thus aroused will be directed upon the Legislature.

New York, March 14.—The steamer Oregon was run into by a schooner between 3 and 4 o'clock this morning while east of Fire Island, having two holies stove into her. She commenced sinking at once. From 8 to 11 p. m. the work of transferring the passengers was proceeded with. All were transferred in safety, not a single life being lost. Capt. Cotter was the last man to leave the ship.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The members of Congress were very much surprised to-day to learn of the sudden death of Judge Michael Hann, Representative from the Second District of Louisiana, which occurred last night at Willard's Hotel.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, March 13.—Three thousand unemployed workmen held a meeting at Hackney to-day. Red flags were displayed and inflammatory speeches made by Champion and other Socialist leaders. A large force of police, mounted and on foot, prevailed order.

BERLIN, March 13.—Emperor William has recovered from his indisposition and will attend the banquet which is to be held here to-morrow, the anniversary of the accession of Alexander III to the throne of Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 13.—Prince Alexander, of Oldenburg, has started at his own expense a hospital for the treatment of persons suffering from the bites of animals afflicted with rabies. The institution is to be conducted on the principles discovered and at present possessed by M. Pasteur.

ON OLIVE.

BY CELIA E. GARDNER.

Who thinks so madly, O my heart, to know this mortal soul
Whom I stand, long years gone by, was trodden by a God?

To know his blessed human feet this rocky soil have pressed;
And here, beneath olive trees like these, have often
I used to rest!

Preacher right here, he still, my heart—here, where today I stand Beneath, and over Jerusalem stretched out a yearning human hand.

Woe in his pain from love so pitiful and great Beet, O city of my love, I would, but ye would not!

Because, through your gateway bowed mine eyes can plainly see,
Ere in triumph with the crowd that crowd him hither.

Angels garden, where the dew of night lay wet on the Drooping with the human pain whose night can never be told.

Angels garden, on that night—O shame it should be so!
The nation's fatal kiss betrayed a monarch to his foe.

And then, as that delicious way his weary foot steps pressed,
While drooping his shoulders "neath the cross there on so cruelly placed.

His shoulders, formed to bear the sun of an immaculate
World, which, while he entered in its stead, scorn and contumely banished.

The only crown "his own" could give from out his hearted store,
A crown of thorns upon his neck, pure forehead meeting there.

"A Great Door and Effectual."

Mr. Editor: Wide currency is given to a paper from the Rev. W. C. Dunlap, entitled "A Great Door and Effectual." The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, of March 4, assists in this currency. It is well. The object to which Bro. Dunlap is so earnestly devoting his energy commands itself to the confidence and support of us all. The work designed to be accomplished by the Institute is of prime importance as a means through which Southern Methodists are to reach the colored people of this section. That is the line along which to conduct our organic work. Give to the negro preachers and teachers of his own race, but taught and trained as much as can be by the superior race. In such a school we have the closest and surest access we can command for doing him the service he needs of us, and which, I must think, we are ready to render him have been ready to render by whatever door has been really open to us. Let the church, in all sincerity and godliness, do the utmost that can be done in the development and use of the Institute and other such schools. But I must insist that we shall not base our operations and services on accusations and castigations for past so-called delinquencies and neglects. Let us say, as I believe we honestly can say, that on the whole we have done and are doing the best at command, and in this spirit move on, watching, praying and working as the Lord shall give us light and opportunity. The negro question in all its aspects and bearings is one of profound concern to our people, and they are neither indifferent nor inactive in its study and disposition. It is not a Gordian knot that can be cut by some Alexander; nor is it a question that can be settled by vote of an assembly. It must find its solution in the process of great laws and forces which belong to ethnic elements and relations. Whatever these subtle elements are, they affect the mental and moral complexion as distinctly as the skin is affected by physiological elements of the body. There is more in the Ethiopian as such than the color of his skin. There is more difference between the white man and the negro than the mere fact of slavery or freedom. He will not be competent to write the history of the case, nor to judge of what shall be written, who does not give full place to the facts which have obstructed the passage of Southern Methodists, as well as other people of the South, to the masses of this colored race, especially for their moral and religious instruction.

I wish particularly to express my objection to Bro. Dunlap's statement of the cause of these shocking cruelties to which he refers in the first paragraph of his communication. He asks: "Why is this? Why is it that after the lapse of twenty years since the negro became a free man, that crime, especially the more brutal, seems to be on the increase among them? Some will answer one thing and some another; but I say it is because Southern Christians—white men—have well nigh, I might say altogether, ceased to preach the gospel, or to feel that they are any longer charged with the responsibility of looking after the moral and spiritual welfare of the negro."

The answer which Bro. Dunlap here gives to his own question makes a charge against Southern Christians, especially Southern Methodists, which I do not believe can be sustained, and which ought not to be put forward as a motive for our favor to the Institute. The preaching of the gospel to the negro slaves no doubt had its restraining effect, but surely was not the only force that protected our women from the brutal violence of the negro lecher. If it was, why has not the preaching of the same gospel had a like effect on the freed negro? He has had the gospel preached to him as a "free man" for the past twenty years. One of the marked facts of his history for these years is his excessive attention to church-going. He has been served by a constant ministry both of white men and of his own color. He has his own ecclesiastical organizations in which the same doctrine and discipline are ministered, which were in force when he was a slave, and which still prevail in the evangelized churches of the land—the doctrine and discipline of the Scriptures. Southern Methodists have participated in this ministry to some extent. He has also had access to free public schools and to schools of higher grade; he has had also the whole force, whatever that is, of his elevation from slavery to freedom. The negro has had a great opportunity and great advantages. Bro. Dunlap justly magnifies "the work done among the freedmen of the South by our friends from up North since the war." "They have spent millions and given many valuable lives." And he is right to emphasize the fact that to the colored millions, more than all other agencies, has the work of preaching the gospel to their people been committed. Some of these criminals are found in those communities which possess the fullest advantages, as is shown by the case which occurred in one of our towns last summer. Is it the simple fact that all this teaching and preaching has not been done through Southern Christians, that this cancerous lechery has broken out and spreads in the negro? The preaching of the gospel to the slave was accompanied by the powerful authority of the master and the sense of submissiveness and regard on the part of the slave. The wide difference between the races was expressed by this authority and this sense of submissiveness and obedience. Freedom and much bad teaching broke down the force of this difference and look off the restraint. He has been made a factor in trade and politics in a way that has introduced him into a degree of fellowship with low and vicious white men who become his examples in crime, and by association blunt that sense of difference and regard which is natural in the negro towards the white man. The release of any race of people from the restraints which have kept them from crime will let their passions loose for sensual gratification.

It may be said that the fact that the negro has had the gospel preached to him for these twenty years of freedom by pastors of his own color and by "our friends from up North," does not release Southern Christians from doing what they can. Certainly, this is admitted in full force. I have only tried to show that the negro as a "free man" has not lacked the restraining force of the same gospel which he had when he was a slave. But it is claimed that Southern Christians have had and now have the same access to the negro since the war as before that civil blunder, and that the changed relations and conditions of the parties have not modified our obligations? "Before the war it was the glory of the Southern Methodist Church that they preached the gospel to these people just as regularly as to the whites, and that she numbered them among her membership by the hundreds of thousands"; and she would glory now to do the same work, if now as then she had the same spiritual custody of this people. She has not. What became of these "hundreds of thousands" when the war was over? Did we cut them off? No; we would have rejoiced to keep them still and to minister to them as before; but they would not. They went from us "by the hundreds of thousands" under the preferred leadership of "our friends from up North since the war." They demanded a ministry of their own color and organizations under their own control. The union of the two races in the Methodist Episcopal Church has been a source of friction and dissatisfaction. Most of the freedmen were taught and learned to regard the Southern whites with suspicion. Our service became incidental and occasional, partly because the people to be served did not want us, and partly because they had others to serve them and we had those wholly dependent on us enough to engage all our organic energies. A fugient held faith with us, but wanted a separate organization, which they should control, but which should receive our favor.

"The Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America is a providence to us. She is our own ecclesiastical child; set up by us fifteen years ago. * * * They were a part of us; but in their changed relations politically and socially, it was judged best by us and them that there should be two ecclesiastical bodies." Indeed, there was nothing else for us to do, except to see these colored members, as we had seen others, bolt from us and set up for themselves. It was the only body of colored Christians that proposed to allow us any close fraternity and to give us a channel through which we could yet exert our helpful ministry for the welfare of that race. I feel that Southern Methodists and Southern Christians have done well nigh all they could do through organic instrumentalities for these freedmen, and I am unwilling to wear the blame for this prevalence of flagitious crime among them. Doubtless we have not done all we could have done as individuals in urging upon them attention to Christian obligations; but on the other hand, our approaches have often been met with resistance or indifference. Time will bring changes for the better; the barriers to our efforts are weakening, and we will work as the call demands. Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory, but all to the edification of the body of Christ.

The Missionary Question.

Our church papers are beginning to show very plainly the near approach of General Conference, and great connective questions are being freely discussed. The most important matter under consideration is the readjustment of our missionary operations, and I am glad that the whole question is being thoroughly ventilated. I am so fully committed to the cause of foreign missions that I only one heathen was converted in twenty years, I would still be in favor of supporting missionaries abroad, and at least of doing our duty in the premises. As has been often said, the question is not whether God can save the heathen without our help, but whether we can be saved if we neglect to send the gospel to them. The subjective influence of foreign missionary enterprises on the church at home, amply repays us for all the money and labor expended.

But Dr. Kellie's figures in the last Nashville are suggestive and encouraging. By a comparative tabular statement, he shows that while since 1871 the membership of the home church has increased 51 per cent., that of the non-English speaking missions has increased 202 per cent., while the number of Sunday-school scholars in the foreign field has increased 1843 per cent. as against 57 per cent. in the home field. The increase in other directions has been in a similar ratio.

These figures show conclusively that our missionary operations have kept pace with those of other churches. The foreign missions of the Protestant Churches of the United States reported an increase of over three hundred and fifty per cent. in the last thirty-five years. The increase in the Protestant missions in China during the last ten years has been about one hundred and twenty per cent., while during the same period, the increase in our China Mission (in membership) has been about one hundred and ninety-four per cent. Surely, by the light of these figures we may thank God and take courage. Our church may not be accomplishing all that it should in China and Brazil, but we certainly have no cause for discouragement. If Judson could preach to the Buddhists in Burmah for six years without a convert, and at the close of that period say, in answer to an inquiry as to the prospects for the conversion of the heathen, that they were "as bright as the promises of God"; if Robert Morrison could wait seven years for his first convert in China, or the Baptists give and pray twenty-one years for twenty-one converts among the Teluguos, surely we may not say that the missionary operations of our church are a failure, when the increase in fourteen years has been from 389 members, in our foreign fields, to 11,748.

Friction there undoubtedly is in some departments of our mission work; but the Lord has blessed us, and to say that "for the effort put forth we have had least success in our foreign fields," sounds like ingratitude.

I have long thought that there should be sufficient love for God and for the heathen world for Methodism to unite in its missionary operations. Why can not the great Methodist bodies of this country organize a Board similar to the American Board of Foreign Missions, which stands in the front of the missionary organizations of this country, and inaugurate a place for the conversion of the world?

Emerson says that "every great and commanding movement in the annals of the world is the triumph of enthusiasm," and such a movement as this would kindle an enthusiasm such as has never been known in the history of missions. What could not be accomplished by four million of Methodists, organized for the conversion of the world? As fast as practicable, let the autonomy of the churches in India, in Japan, in China, and elsewhere, be established, and let other mission fields be occupied. I believe that God would bless such a movement, and that it would go far toward a practical solution of our missionary problems.

Among the Presbyterian missions in Japan such a plan has been carried out, and during the present year all the English and American Presbyterian missions have joined in a single body. And this is the forerunner of a grand movement to unite the Foreign Mission Boards of the presbyterially-governed churches of the United States and Canada. At a meeting of a committee from all these churches, a short time ago, in the City of New York, steps were inaugurated looking to the accomplishment of this most desirable result.

Now, is there more brotherly love and Christian fellowship among Presbyterians than Methodists? It seems to me that there is so much to be said in favor of such a movement that it must meet the hearty approval of every earnest Christian man who looks for the evangelization of the world. The only question is as to its practicability. It is certainly in accordance with the spirit of Christ and the genius of Methodism. Can any man give a satisfactory reason why two Methodisms, teaching the same faith, should preclude the same fields? And is it possible to make those to whom we go understand our differences?

It would be a grand movement for such a plan to be inaugurated at our approaching General Conference, and I believe the great heart of the church would endorse it.

Strikes.

"Man in society is like a flower
Blown in its native bed. 'Tis there alone
His faculties expanded in full bloom
Shine out; there only reach their proper use.
But man, accosted and injured with many
By legal warrant, or self-joined by bond
For interest-sake, or swarming into class,
And huddled close to fill some crowded vessel,
Fades rapidly, and by compression marred
Contracted to a form not to be colored.
Hence these great masses of our common kind
Are struggling out the noblest type of life.
Hence, too, our no more unimpeded of sin
Against the charities of domestic life,
Incorporated, severed, sure to lose
Their nature, and, disclaiming all regard
For mercy and the common rights of man,
Build factories with blood, and make their trade
At the sweat's point, and dyeing the white robe
Of honest commercial justness red."

—Cooper.

Just a hundred years ago were these words written, and yet they seem a chronicle of to-day. In such repetitions of history we have a proof of the sameness of human characteristics, tendencies and needs. It is merely the circumstances of being which change from age to age, and these, perhaps, not as rapidly nor as radically as we are apt to believe. Since the memorable strife between the herdsmen of Abram and Lot, how many of earth's teeming millions have struggled for the well-watered places!

At present we have rather a striking illustration of such a conflict of interests in the extensive disturbances now in progress among the laboring classes in various parts of the country. New York critics are scarcely through penning satirical paragraphs upon the London riots, when a scarcely less creditable outbreak occurs right under their uplifted noses, giving them a delicate reminder that all social embarrassments are not necessarily "inherent in the narrow and selfish antrocity of an old civilization." Rotten eggs smell no sweeter on Atlantic avenue than in Trafalgar Square.

Now, what is the significance of such movements? Why is it that the same newspaper containing glowing editorials upon American peace, progress and prosperity, has its news columns prefaced by such headlines as "1200 New York Car-Men Quit Work," "The Mallory Boycott," "Strike on the Texas Roads," "Ten Thousand Idle Railroaders?"

It is undoubtedly true that with the large and constant influx of European immigrants, America is becoming more or less tinged and permeated with some doctrines, maxims, and practices which we might well wish forever beyond the ocean. Communism, socialism, "free thought," theosophism, and other likeisms are not compatible with our "noblest type of life." The otherwise admirable freedom and charity of our institutions afford a wide license for the propagation of many theories fatal to the purest elements of society and of personal character. No one denies the advantages of immigration; but in a nation where already more than one-seventh of the entire population are foreign born, it surely would be well to guard our continental gateways against every encroachment of such influences as are calculated to warp us in the direction of lawlessness, impurity and godlessness. I have thought that the situation of the United States with reference to the vast tide of new settlers pouring in upon it year by year might be compared to a planter living in a charming villa, who has arranged for the inundation of a portion of his land by a muddy current abounding in fertilizing properties. Wealth floats embodied in the thick stream, and settles upon his broad acres. But suppose the waters should get beyond his control—what will the harvest be? Or suppose that even in subsiding they should breed a foul miasm, floating in the windows of his happy home on the hill-top, laden with disease and possibly with death?

The oppression of the laborer by the capitalist, however, has borne its part as a factor in the troubles of the last few weeks. The great commoner was right who said that corporations have no souls. The business policy of the world is essentially cold-hearted and selfish. This oft-repeated cry of ill-treatment of injustice, of want, of suffering, is not altogether the cry of a demagogue. Woe that has associated with the working classes does not know the sad story of their wrongs? The Song of the Shirt has crossed the Atlantic, and the sordid power that grinds down the wages of the scum-sucker or the pay of the brakeman must sometimes suffer the rebound of the screw from the excessive notch to which it has been forced.

Another potent cause of trouble in these conflicts between labor and capital may be found in the mode of life prevalent among our working people. Extravagance and improvidence bear much of the fruit that is charged against other trees. The vices of an employee will bring him to want nine times as often as the greed, fraud or oppression of his employer. If discontented strikers would cast aside a few of the vile and expensive habits in which so many of them indulge, their cause would be heard with more sympathy and a better show of justice.

Lastly, there is need of Christianity here. Nothing short of moral reformation and revolution will correct the abuses and errors of human society. There is no theoretical conflict between labor and capital; but, gnawed by actual conditions, there is a practical issue, and nothing can meet it except the sweet clarity of the gospel, a spirit of purity and love, deep as the inmost recesses of the human heart, subtle as the shrewdest combinations of human thought, and strong enough to break down every barrier of formality and selfishness between man and man.

Note from Texas.

I write to ask all my friends in Mississippi and Louisiana to pray for me and my people here. We now have a great revival going on in Nacogdoches. This was originally an old Spanish town. Dr. Thrall, in his history of Texas, says that the Roman Catholics established a mission here in the early part of the last century. An "old stone fort" stands here, which he says was built in 1778. But some of the oldest Mexicans say it was built about 1750. Our meeting is in its third week. Thirty-nine have been converted and thirty have joined the church. The work has now begun to deepen and widen. The whole community is stirred. We have a very small church building, which will not hold the people. We need money to build another. Will my friends help me? If they can do anything, write to me. In the long history of this town there has never been a revival here before. Wickedness, infidelity, and the devil have held high carnival. But, thank God, the people are now repenting and coming to Christ. Will all who read these lines pray for us? We are trusting the Lord for at least one hundred accessions. I will write again.

Bro. C. F. Smith, who was transferred here with me, and stationed at San Augustine, is well received among his people, and the work is advancing under his administration. Fine reports are heard of him and his work.

"We have seen it mentioned as a wonder by old Puritan writers," says a puritan, "that certain fish live in the salt sea, and yet their flesh is not salt. We have met with far greater singularities in the spiritual world—namely, men who live in a sea of grace, and yet are not gracious."

MAYNERS.

BY APPOINTMENT.

I hold him close who, for love's sake,
Chide him with generous earnest will;
Yet he who takes for love a secret sake
I think I hold more precious still.

I bow before the noble mind
That feels some great wrong forgiven;
Yet holds the one for whom
Who bears that burden well and lives.

I may be hard to gain and still
To keep a love, a steadfast heart,
Yet he who loves has to fill
A harder and a truer part.

Glories it is to wear the crown
Of a devoted and pure soul;
He who knows how to fall has won
A crown whose lustre is not lost.

Great may be the while's command
And rule with just and tender sway;
Yet is the wisdom taught
Better to him who can obey.

Blessed are they who die for God,
And earn the martyr's crown of light;
Yet he who lives for God may be
A greater conqueror in his sight.

Another Bugle Blast.

Just back from Mt. Zion we found after the rains that the waters were up and traveling somewhat difficult. The congregations were large under the circumstances, and the love-feast one of the best we have yet had. The Haynesville circuit is starting off well under their new pastor. Bro. Godfrey was paid something over one-fourth of the entire assessment for his support, and the Sunday collection for missions and church extension was more than the amount apportioned to the Mt. Zion Church. The printed minutes show a fine report for last year, and the pastor is looking for them to surpass themselves this year. Three Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies are needed on the Haynesville work and two more on the Homer circuit, and we trust that the pastors and sisters will soon be reporting their organization to Mrs. Claiborne J. Foster, corresponding secretary of Louisiana Conference Society. We are glad that the "bugle blasts" of the Homer district, never of uncertain sound, have awakened in the far-off South Louisiana the horn blower of Rayne and Plaquemine. Yes, "the bugler is in the spirit," and how could he be otherwise? We assure you, Bro. S. S. Keener, that nothing occurred before, neither during nor since, the late session of the Louisiana Conference to in the least ruffle the placidity of the Homer bugler. On the contrary, several things transpired calculated to fill him with pleasurable emotions. Among other duties, he was, as chairman of the Conference Temperance Committee, called upon to prepare and submit a report with certain resolutions attached. He did so, and a storm (shall we say of the "tempest in a teapot" order?) began with our highly esteemed Bro. Manly, growing steadily in intensity as it bore the heroic and impassioned Paunt Leffoy aloft, gathering in its folds the newly discovered horn blower of South Louisiana and bringing to the front Von Valkenburg and "Zion's" doctor, and centering all its fury upon a very polite, neat and well-dressed resolution endorsing that glorious body of glorious women, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, not of the United States and the wide world, but of Louisiana.

Could such good temperance people as the polished S. H. W., the Mendelsohn pastor, the valiant Colonel from Shreveport, the North Louisiana, bugle and others remain still? Certainly not, and the storm boiled on until a dear brother, respected by all, moved an amendment striking out the strong, manly word "endorse" and putting in its place something or other about co-operating, giving our sympathy or such like cheap help. Centenary College would have been built up years ago and would now be immensely wealthy if sympathizing, co-operating resolutions could have done it. Ah! what has been done for that noble institution has been done by each man as Bishop Keener, who have been in labors abundant in her behalf. Well, put to vote, the amendment was carried by a very small majority. Failing in securing a reconciliation, we moved to lay the motion as amended upon the table. Of course, this was quickly done, the horn blower and the bugle blaster likely both voting in the affirmative. This writer was astonished at being charged afterwards with having made a grave mistake in moving to lay upon the table. Why astonished? Simply because he had one only motive in his motion, and that was, since the Conference would not endorse the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Louisiana, to save the grand Christian women of that useful organization from being "damned with self-praise." By laying the amended resolution on the table they were saved from a cruel blow at the hands of temperance men and ministers. We are well satisfied and so are the ladies, no doubt, at the turn that things finally took. We do not know anything about the views of Dr. Potter; but, whatever they are, he has a perfect right to hold them and express himself freely by tongue or pen in regard to them.

No have Dr. Godfrey and other distinguished men in Southern Methodism, who are beginning to demand for women the right of suffrage. Surely, Bro. Keener and the rest of you, who opposed the endorsing resolution, you have since Conference had the fairness to read up the proceedings of the State Conventions of the Louisiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It would seem that this much at least is due to those ladies. When it is remembered that Mrs. Libus Parker, Mrs. Capt. Pharr, Mrs. William H. Wise and many others of the first ladies of the land take an active part in the work of the State Woman's Christian Temperance Union, it is surely the duty of those who refuse their endorsement to look into their official record and bring forth "proof as strong as holy writ" of their being as a body for woman's suffrage. Let them hunt up some resolution adopted or official address made committing them to that thing.

The Louisiana Conference were only asked to endorse the body known as the Louisiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union, a thoroughly Southern organization, and that only in their temperance work. They have done no other than temperance work and have wisely kept aloof from all other aims, and especially woman's suffrage; and hence, in endorsing them, the Louisiana Conference would have endorsed temperance only. They have wrought grandly in this thing, and our Conference would have honored themselves in endorsing the Louisiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union. About taking that annual job of bowing and etc., we will simply say that the Louisiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union are not likely to lack champions among the brethren of our Conference so long as they act as prudently and labor as effectively as they are now doing for the freeing of the masses from the slavery and curse of the liquor traffic.

As to this writer's attempting to drag on the Louisiana Conference if he were to be hung to-morrow, he would have still to declare that it is to him a brand new idea. This thing never occurred to him before; no, not even in the heated discussion of that very innocent resolution. It has remained for S. S. Keener, in brooding over the late event of the Conference session, to bring out one of the mildest of men in the full character of a dragon monster. Now, wait a bit and we will do our level best to recall our language on that occasion. Yes, we believe we did say something to the effect that the Conference would have it to do at Ruston. We meant only that the ladies would demonstrate even to the satisfaction of Bro. Manly and the rest that by the next annual session the cause would have grown so much, or the brethren by that time would have so much more light and information on this first question of the day, that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Louisiana would be readily endorsed. Some one said that "Bro. Sawyer shook his fist in our faces." Well, if he did he did not know it, carried away as he was by honest warmth and righteous indignation at the cold-hearted style in which the matter was treated. However, we hereby make the amende honorable and withdraw the fist, and now all may sleep soundly and not feel like they must come to Ruston prepared for fight.

This writer, Bro. S. S. Keener, has no monopoly of the Holy Spirit; wishes, however, that he had more of his presence and power and constantly prays for the baptism of his power upon yourself and upon every other member of the Conference. May the Holy Spirit enable you this year to gather in hundreds of souls for your Master and to bring up all your collections and over. Bro. Keener says: "We would like to ask Bro. S. how many people he has brought to trial or expelled for drinking spirituous liquors. Really that is the test of ministerial fidelity to the discipline on this temperance question."

When we are questioned it is natural to wish the question to be one we can answer. We can stand the test, we think. Unpopular though it be, and attended with misunderstandings, misrepresentations and many hardships to him who administers discipline, still we have tried to do our duty in that line. We do not suppose that Bro. S. Keener will be particular to know the exact number of those we have disciplined for selling and drinking spirituous liquors. Though some few may have escaped by reason of lack of available evidence or from other reasons, nevertheless, some considerable amount of judicious pruning has been done deriding our various pastorates, and since we have been on the Homer district we have not failed to require of our preachers the enforcement of discipline in their charges. We can without the least hesitancy declare that we have enforced the law of our church in regard to liquor. Some of our best friends have been the subjects of discipline at our hands and, having taken hold of them with kindness and firmness they live to thank us for it. If Bro. S. S. Keener wishes the actual facts and figures, we presume he can get them from the charges we have served. Let us all cheerfully help our temperance sisters.

HOMER, LA., March 8, 1886.

Woman's Work.

To the Vice-Presidents of the Louisiana Conference W. M. S.:

I have thought it expellous, my dear sisters, to address a few words to you through this medium on the subject of duties and obligations as officers of our Conference society.

It is generally supposed that the office of vice-president is merely nominal, and that as long as there is a president to preside in the Annual Conference of the W. M. S. there is nothing for the vice-presidents to do. I beg leave to call your attention to Section Third of the by-laws of the Seventh Annual Report of W. B. M. on page 79, which reads thus:

"Vice-presidents shall organize auxiliaries and have an oversight of the work in their districts—reporting quarterly to the Conference corresponding secretary."

Do you feel, my dear sisters, that you are living up to this commission? Remember the motto of our organization—"She hath done what she could."

Just as surely as you will have to answer for the perfect discharge of your domestic duties will you have to render an account of this trust. You were selected to the office by your sisters in council, as probably the most capable and available women within the bounds of your districts. You have been called to this duty, and you can not put aside the cross without loss to the work and spiritual loss to yourself.

A dear old mother in Israel, who had been made perfect through suffering, once said to me: "We dare not crawl from under the cross that is laid on us." The blessed Master Builder has laid burdens on every workman, and if we refuse to carry ours, we interfere with his wise plans. The great eternal structure must and will go on to completion; but idlers may be removed as obstructions to give place to more efficient workmen.

Our corresponding secretary is faithful in the performance of her duties, and she writes me that her heart is heavy laden with the seeming fruitlessness of her labors and her hands grow feeble in her unsupported efforts to uphold our cause before the Lord of battles until the going down of the sun. Will you not come to her relief by fanning in the vineyard about you and breaking up the soil ready for her planting, otherwise her distribution of leaflets is like scattering seed broadcast over stony ground and sterile soil. Your trust is as important as any in the whole field. I know the temerity with which most women take hold of this work is the outcome of genuine modesty, with no pretense about it. But in the cause of your Savior, who braved every danger for you, can you not be brave-hearted? Cowardice is fatal to vital religion; therefore, we should "endure hardness as good soldiers." Take up this cross and follow where duty leads you. The very weight of the burden will incline your head downward and your vision thus directed to your pathway will aid you to avoid stumbling-stones which might otherwise cause disaster.

If you will allow me to advise you a little as to methods, I will suggest that, first of all, you will consult the presiding elder of your district and get his co-operation in the work. Happy are ye if he is a broad-minded man fully alive to the mission spirit of the present day. Communicate by letter with all the ministers, and, as far as possible, get into close sympathy with the churches and the auxiliaries which they may be induced to form. If you will attend the quarterly meetings as far as possible, you can get the ministers to call a meeting of the women of the church. Prepare yourself beforehand to tell them what the women are doing, and what we want to accomplish; then organize societies, adult and juvenile. No matter how small the beginning, if only you can get the women to organize and put them in communication with the State Conference corresponding secretary or the president, you have accomplished a great deal.

If you will thus panoply yourselves in the armor held out to you by the Captain of our army, and heed those who are at ease in Zion, we will soon go up and possess the land. Another great power for good within your domain is to get subscribers for our Women's Missionary Advocate. It is a telling fact that from our 693 members of the W. M. S. there are only 50 subscribers for our own only organ. Such an evidence of lukewarmness should shame our souls into more zeal and energy. If we could get our beautiful inept little sheet into every home, the response to our roll call would resound from one side of the State to the other, and the work accomplished would be grand. In some of our State Conference the vice-presidents are factors of great power. In the reports presented at the last session of W. B. M. I find much credit is given by different corresponding secretaries to the systematic labors of vice-presidents, and some of the letters in the Woman's Missionary Advocate, telling of their meetings at District Conferences, are full of overflowing of grace and good works.

Let your zeal be stirred to emulation, my dear, good sisters. The call of our laborers at home and in foreign fields is every urgent. Our opportunities for extending our work are increasing. The children of heathendom are clamorous for more bread of life. The cry from Macedonia—"Come over and help us"—is ringing up from continents and the isles of the sea. Our W. B. M. is answering the call as speedily as possible, meanwhile imploring the women of the church to come to the rescue.

A letter from Miss Mary Helm, of recent date, is before me, written to Mrs. Foster, urging every exertion on our part. Through her, our corresponding secretary, Mrs. McGavock, speaks to me and you and every Christian woman. She says, "The deficit in our work is not yet made up, and we will need to bend every energy in the effort to make the collections meet our appropriations." She urges the collection of back dues, the introduction of mite boxes into auxiliary and families, to receive thank and memorial offerings, birthday gifts, etc.—all of which to go into the general fund. In all these highways, will you not glean, my sisters, while the day lasts. You can not turn a deaf ear; the call has reached you. You can not close your eyes and refuse to see, for the light of Heaven has illumined your soul. There is nothing to do but to be up and at work. I am anxious that our Conference shall be represented in the next session of our W. B. M., which meets in June, in Augusta, Ga. A contingent fund for this and other expenses should be provided annually.

We have never sent a delegate to these conventions, and our Conference Society languishes for the help and inspiration of such communion. At our Annual State Convention in Minden, last July, the Conference instructed our corresponding secretary, Mrs. Foster, to attend the session of W. B. M., next June. I hope she will bring back with her a new impetus into our ranks. Our Annual Conference W. M. S. convenes in Baton Rouge, on Friday, July 2, 1886. We pray for a large delegation embracing every vice-president, and we entertain a fond hope that our coming together will result in the advancement of our cause beyond all previous bounds in our own State.

To this end, my dear sisters, let us pray and work and work and pray; each one determined to lay aside all slothful ease and do the work appointed her, leaning on our Father for support. I comment the sentiment of the following beautiful poem to each one of you, with my earnest love and sisterly sympathy in our Christ.

MRS. E. J. FULLAMORE,
Pres. W. M. S.

LEAN HARD.

Child of my love, "lean hard,"
And let me feel the presence of thy care;
I know thy burden, child; I shaped it,
Poised it in mine own hand, made no proportion
In its weight to thine unaided strength:
For even as I laid it on, I said:
"I shall be near, and while she leans on me,
This burden shall be mine, not hers."
So shall I keep my child within the circling arms
Of mine own love. Here lay it down, my dear,
To impose it on a shoulder which upholds
The government of worlds. Yet closer come—
Thou art not near enough; I would embrace thy cure,
I might feel thy child reposing on my heart,
Then I would rest. I know it. Doubt not, child;
But, loving me, lean hard.

FANNIN, MISS.

Mr. Editor: Our home last year was in the pine forest, but at Meridian the Bishop and his cabinet changed us to the prairie. Last year we could roll over a carpet of pine straw and hardly soil our buggy wheels; this year we are almost at times unable to roll at all for the mud. My husband says this is my kind of a country. He does not like the mud. He is an Alabamian, and I a Mississippian, and I believe they tell us mud-heads.

Mr. Editor, when we reached Fannin we found our passage in a very dilapidated condition. We needed a new cover, new fence, ceiling, repapering and furnishing. We have succeeded in getting a good fence about the entire lot, which is about seven acres, and to-morrow the members of the church are to meet and receive it. We hope between this and our District Conference (which we are to have the honor of entertaining this year) to have the personage in at least a respectable condition. We are living in a hired house, but anticipate moving to the parsonage next week. We are having a well dug. The preachers' families before us have lived there without a well; but I must have water, and plenty of it.

Our people on this circuit generally are poor, but some of them have large hearts, and will do what they can to make the preacher and his family comfortable.

My husband has sent up his missionary money according to promise made at Annual Conference at Meridian.

Mr. Editor, you must certainly come to our District Conference. Our people will be more than pleased to entertain the editor of the Advocate, and hear him preach, and we need just the kind of a lecture you gave the District Conference at Hattiesburg last summer.

ARCADIA, LA.

Mr. Editor: Allow me to speak through the Advocate to magnify the Lord for his goodness and mercy bestowed upon the people of Arcadia. At my first appointment, just one month ago, we had evidences of special interest in the services. Our Baptist brethren were at that time conducting a protracted service in their church, in which they had considerable success, and they had an accession to their church of about twenty members. About a week after their meeting closed our first quarterly meeting commenced. Our presiding elder, Bro. Sawyer, was with us with a full spirit of his mission, and preached with great pointedness and power. Sunday night the altar was crowded with mourners, and the interest so general that we determined to protract. Bro. Sawyer had to have Monday morning for his next quarterly meeting. The meeting continued to increase in interest, and the power of the Holy Ghost was upon the people, and at every service there were conversions and accessions. Bro.

White, from Ruston, came to our help Wednesday, but only remained one night, and was called back home by a telegram to bury a member of his congregation. Bro. J. H. Jordan, a local preacher, rendered good service, and the membership came up faithfully to our help; but above all "the Lord of hosts was with us, the God of Jacob was our help." We were not able to get the exact number of conversions, but we have received into the church since we came here, and during the week's service just closed last night, fifty members. Perhaps one-half of them were received by letter, many of them having been here for two years without identifying themselves with the church. A number of the Sabbath-school scholars were converted and joined the church. The membership, who for years have been struggling to guide the ship into smooth water, are wonderfully built up and encouraged. Prayer and class meetings will now be established, and we hope that many family altars will be revived. "We praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works unto the children of men."

We find that the kindness of the people in our hospitable reception was not spasmodic, but hardly a day passes that we do not receive some fresh token of their kindness. I feel like singing the old long-meter Doxology all the time. We hope to keep up this general interest all the time, and work and pray for a revival meeting at each service, so that when you come up to our District Conference in August, you may find a church all alive to God. The pro rata share of this church for foreign and domestic missions and church extension collections has all been subscribed, and we hope to collect enough in cash to pay our one-fourth.

Sunset.

It was at the close of the golden autumnal season, in the very midst of Nature's gala days, when "rocks, hills and doles and heaven's high places" were declaring the wonders and glories, the infinite love and goodness of the King in his beauty. When looking from the western terrace of the "Old Hall," I saw the woodlands on the hill-sides clothed in Nature's coat of many colors, showing the touches of a Divine artist, exquisitely and delicately painted upon the canvas of Nature, tinting with beauty and rarest conception the volume upon which is painted the matchless ideas of the Infinite. None of the great masters have yet painted this scene as it is in reality, nor ever will or can, for it is his handiwork.

Where in all the manifold conceptions of Milton, Dante, or of the numerous imaginative and descriptive writers, do we find word painting as suggestive as "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge." The cedars of Lebanon rejoice, and heaven and earth are one glorious painting of Divine love and solicitude. The massive oak in its emerald garment and swaying vestments of gray moss, seeming to be the high priest presiding over Nature's sacrifice to the chilling, frosty god of winter's court and temple. The majestic pine, the graceful cedar, the humble and pathetic weeping willow, each drop its leaf, emblematic of the mourner's tear, upon the bier of Nature, now cold and dead in the sunset of its unknowing, unthinking existence. I saw the shady dell whence sprang the laughing, chattering brook on its way to the rushing tide of mighty river and rolling ocean, each ripple shipping one over another, as the smiles of pleased and happy children pass away with their morning life.

But above all, the sun, in evening robes of effulgence, slipping behind the hills, leaving touches of his illuminating power on distant spires and eastern horizon, giving a golden-bued beauty to the hoary forest swains, similar to the mingling of childhood's golden locks with age's silvery gray. Lower sank the sun down behind the high place of earth. Apparently this was his death and burial; he was sinking, sinking gradually into a grave from whence his beauty-breathing light could nevermore come forth. But what? Oh, no; in the very act of setting, he was only slipping beyond the horizon of my transient abode; but at the same time he was scattering abroad the sheaf of light and glory, breathing forth the sweet influence of his life and beauty-creating power upon the palace and homes, the rivers and gardens, mountain tops and valleys of the other—aye, more beautiful—land. So must it have seemed to the disciples of old, when Jesus, "the Sun of Righteousness," "the light of the world," was setting, sinking down beyond the shadows of Calvary. Looking back to that time, we have a vision of transcendent beauty framed in the Judean hills. It is a painting of marvelous loveliness, executed by the wonderful, invisible artist of the spirit land. It is the life and wondrous labors of Jesus, the Lamb of God. We see the exquisite details of the tomb where he lay; also portrayals of a halo of Divine love crowning the heads of those weeping ones. How wonderful is the perspective of that life, where we see, flowing down the hill-sides of persecution and suffering that bordered his path, those brooklets of Divine love and compassion, slipping away to that pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb—that river that shall make glad the city of God, which flows into the crystal sea. That death and burial of the Lord, the Prince of Peace, was but the setting, for even as he was setting, the light of his life was illuminating the spires and minarets of the moral world he had developed, the brightness of his inner perfect glory was being scattered abroad throughout those avenues of gold, through those gates of pearl and crystal, life, over and beyond the towers of those "mansions in the sky," far off to the waving trees of Paradise, beneath whose shade and in his light are resting those weary ones, looking forward to the dawning of the resurrection-morn. He is not dead, "for he is living as he said," to set no more in the kingdom of his love. And, thank God, the Jews in his setting and rising made the path plain and clear, so we may follow! And to those of us who have seen the sun of our earthly felicity pass into the "silent land," who have had the horizon of life darkened by sorrow, this setting sun teaches us to weep not, but rather rejoice; for we know that this weary sun will attain its state of perfect rest and tranquility until it is loosed from this poor, weak, infirm and wretched body. And in the setting beyond this life, the liberty to the soul is given, and it comes like him, for it sees him as he is. But more than this, we know that the body, through the grave, shall come forth renewed and fashioned after his own glorious body, and become perfectly worthy of being the dwelling-place of the perfect soul.

O, the hour when this material shell has cooled as a clod.
When amid the wide ether,
All the invisible shall crowd;
When the naked soul surrounded
With realities unknown,
Triumphs to the view unbounded,
Feels herself with God alone.

In that sudden, strange transition,
By what new or finer sense,
Shall she grasp the mighty vision
And receive its influence?
Angels, guard the new immortal,
Through the ether-rolling space,
To the everlasting portal,
To the spirit's resting place.

The Tramp Lecturer.

A recent number of a secular paper contains two articles denouncing, the one a man, the other a woman, lecturers both of whom might justly be termed "tramps"; yet both were professionally working in the great cause of temperance.

It came in the writer's way to make some inquiries about the first mentioned party (a man) who styled himself "Reverend," but certainly had nothing about either appearance or manner to denote the prefix, and these inquiries developed the information that he was sent out by the National Temperance Alliance, and was vouched for by a man who professed to be the secretary of that body. Doubtless, nothing could be further from the truth than that either secretary or lecturer had any connection whatever with the Alliance or with any other respectable association. Nevertheless, as many worthy people are being imposed on, and a good cause may be injured by these fraudulent persons, a word of warning may not be amiss.

As far as could be ascertained this about the way of working of these men. The president of a temperance society, or some other permanent worker in the same cause, will receive a letter indicating, or proposing to introduce, the Rev. Mr. So-and-so, and signed by the secretary of such and such an association. If the bait is seized, the Reverend produces a circular, headed "The Battle Ax," or the "The Glorious Hammer," or "The Mighty Maul," and sends forth his many tremendous demands for his gifts and graces (?)—a printed sheet of paper of suspiciously economical size, with a vacant space for inserting the date and hour of his proposed lecture. Those filled and circulated, his work is easy, leading naturally up to the contribution basket—for the female tramp lecturer, the writer can only speak from hearsay, but it is presumable her methods are not dissimilar. This much is certain, that the temptation to adventure, both sexes to trade on the unsuspecting nature of good people is very great. The remedy, however, is very simple. Perhaps it can not be better described than in the words of Tennessee's remarkable statesman, "Be sure you're right, then go ahead." Let every man or woman engaged in this great cause and having charge of any branch of it be careful that every unknown lecturer is endorsed by some reliable person or association, not trusting to later unless the writer be known by name, at least, and not then except on document he unquestionably genu-

Over the Road.

Mr. Editor: An article in your paper, of last week, from "Gillie," has some very good advice in it for young preachers about staying in the plain theological road. Now, let me tell you there are two sides to the question. The overseers have called out the "brushed" road from one end of the other, except where it was too hard and even there you can see where the axe has dug at it. After all that the result is, the roads are well impassable. It puts you on a constant hunt for a path that looks better. You Pistol selling is not likely to be a thriving branch of business in Mississippi hereafter. The recent Legislature passed a law levying a privilege tax upon the sale of such articles as to amount to a prohibition. Some hardware merchants have boxed up their stock of "Smith & Wesson's," "Lightning Bolt's," "Ball Dogs," and "Self-Loading Trainers," and shipped them back to the factories. That is wholesome legislation. Such an act years ago, richly enforced, would have saved many useful lives to the State.

On the current question, the administration of our foreign missions, our central organ at Nashville falls squarely into line as follows:

"Our own clear conviction is that our episcopacy, as it is, is flexible enough to meet the present emergency. Under our law, as it stands, the college of Bishops can distribute their services in such a way as to provide adequately for any special conditions existing in any part of the work, at home or abroad. It is not necessary, in our judgment, to add or erase a word in our law creating and defining the functions of our episcopacy."

The Nashville Advocate favors the election of five new Bishops, "four men to take the places of the four who have died since the last General Conference, and one more to meet the wants of a rapidly growing church." Our brother's arithmetic is slightly at fault. We have lost three men from active service and of those only one was counted on for full work. Bishop Palmer retired to the superannuated relation on the first day of the General Conference. It was not expected that Bishops Pierce and Kavanaugh would be able to do more than the work of one man. Now if we estimate to supply vacancies and add one for the enlarged demands of the church, three or four will be sufficient. It is not probable that the General Conference will elect more than four. The Bishops will not recommend so many.

The Alabama Advocate speaks some plain words on the subject of "quadrantal croaking," and advises very slight tinkering with the Discipline. We quite agree with our cotemporary that the statutory law of the church needs very little revision at this juncture. Conservatism should be the watchword of the Methodist statesman just now. Dr. Rush says:

"The fact is, the Discipline needs very little alteration. If nothing of the sort should be done at the ensuing General Conference, the church could get along very well for another four years. Bishops and other officers must be elected, but this can be done without croaking a t' or dotting an 'i.' If the words of the Discipline should remain exactly as they are, we can live and prosper, even though croakers should return home without seeing their pet schemes adopted."

The following concerning Fletcher's Inkstand, a sacred Methodist relic, we find in the St. Louis Advocate, taken from the Christian Journal. It is an interesting item:

"Mr. James Clayton, a member of the Sands Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., is the possessor of the Inkstand used by Rev. John Fletcher, vicar of Madeley. Mr. Clayton, who comes of an old English family of that name, resided, when a boy, at Madeley, and the Inkstand was presented to him in 1843 by Miss Mary Tooth, who was a devoted friend of Mrs. Fletcher. It is of Britannia metal, of medium size, round and with a glass bottle in the centre, and a loose metal cover, and is inscribed: 'The Rev. John William de la Fletcher, Vicar of Madeley, England. From Miss Mary Tooth to James Clayton.' Into this Inkstand (says the New York Advocate) Mr. Fletcher dipped his pen while writing his polemical works. He used it constantly until his death; and for the thirty years that she survived him it always had a place on a small desk besides the chair in which Mrs. Fletcher usually sat. It was used by her during the composition of her Journals, her 'Monday Night Questions with the Children,' her 'Watchwords for the Society,' and all her other works."

"Wholesome Skepticism."

The most felicitous phrase-maker of this generation is the venerable Premier of England, the Rt. Hon. William E. Gladstone. He has won many a victory in parliamentary debate by his marvelous command of words and his genius for coining suggestive phrases. Many of his sayings have passed into proverb, while others have become the shibboleths of his party. It was a happy response to the great orator made one evening last week in the House of Commons. To silence the fears of friends and dissipate current rumors about a crisis in his ministry, among other things, he said: "You are exhorted to exercise a wholesome skepticism in regard to rumors of dissension in the Cabinet." That was a delicate, yet forceful expression, and signally achieved the end desired.

But it is not with the artful orator we are concerned or the genius of the masterful statesman. The phrase is a fresh statement of an important truth and a useful lesson. Some practical reflections thereon may be fruitful and helpful.

There is a skepticism that is wholesome—that form of it which is reluctant to entertain and retail reproach against a neighbor. St. Paul exalts this among the leading characteristics of true Christian charity—the charity that "thinketh no evil." This is a virtue as radiant as rare. And none needs more careful, cautious culture. Detraction is so common and suspicion so universal, that the Christian is tempted to depreciate, and loose faith, in his fellow-men. Not every tongue wears a gospel bridle, and some are as swift and reckless as the wild horse of Mississippi. They retail reproach with an enterprise and ingenuity that would elude at once the greed of a ghoul and the genius of a parricide. To guard against the evil they spread abroad, we must cultivate the habit of a "wholesome skepticism." Be slow to accept a mere rumor of wrongdoing on the part of a brother, and never retail it. Reputations have been ruthlessly assailed and noble, upright Christians injured in their influence, because of a sinful eagerness to hear and repeat mere surmises, as vague as they are vile. We are the divinely appointed keepers of our brother—the sacred guardians of his influence and reputation. And we can bless or blast him, just as we rebuke or retail reproach. We are not to condone wrong. For the honor of Christ and the purity of the church we are not to apologize for sin. But a "wholesome skepticism" as to guilt should be preserved, until thorough investigation has discovered all the facts.

This lesson of caution is especially necessary as applied to ministers of the gospel. The world is eager to catch and cast the faintest suspicion upon one of the Lord's prophets. Each is under perpetual espionage. Every movement is watched and every word is re-echoed with variations. Faults are magnified into crimes, and indiscretions into gross transgressions. Now, while it is wholesome, in one sense, to be under such surveillance, it is perilous to give ready credence to the world's suspicions. More than one true man of God has suffered in influence and reputation, because his brethren failed to exercise a "wholesome skepticism" about mere rumors, given currency by some vile tongue "set on fire of hell." Let every unworthy priest be unfrocked and every moral monster, who masks in the livery of heaven, be exposed and punished. But the spirit of the gospel and the imperatives of a pure Christian charity demand that we shield and save those who are the true household of faith. We need the grace of a "wholesome skepticism."

We find this interesting item in the Wesleyan Advocate:

Well done for Emory College School of Technology. They do things at Oxford, and do them well. This school was opened only last October, and now they offer for sale first-class engine works for gun, mill, and general farm work. President Hopkins means to put the boys under him in condition to fight the battle of life in competition with boys from every part of the country, North, South, East or West, and on any arena, the laboratory, the forum or the great workshop, where skilled labor finds remunerative employment.

This fine passage may be found in Dr. Lipscomb's "Studies Supplementary to the Forty Days," and is worthy of repetition: "There is no providence like providential lineage; the laws of blood reign paramount in nature, and are forever the one stubborn fate in life. For it is there we see the involuntary man, and we shall never find the voluntary and self-conscious man until we have found his predecessor in the genesis of individuality."

The Carrollton Tragedy.

On Wednesday of last week a tragedy was enacted in the town of Carrollton, Miss., which exceeds in its shocking details some of the bloody massacres of the Modocs. It resulted in the brutal murder of thirteen negroes and the serious wounding of several others. And this blood was shed in the county court-house, while a justice was on the bench trying a criminal cause. Some weeks before, a difficulty had occurred between a white man and several negroes, in which both sides sustained injuries from pistol shots. Reports circulated as to who was the aggressor in that first encounter. The negroes made affidavit against the white man, and the case was undergoing investigation when about a hundred men, armed with Winchester rifles, rode into the town, and took possession of the court-room with the result described above. It is enough to fill every true citizen with horror and sorrow, that such a botchery is possible in this land. Are we indeed a civilized people? Must we surrender to the reign of the mob? If such outrages are to be condoned and the perpetrators go unpunished, Mississippi ought to pluck from our national flag the star that answers to her Statehood.

The theory that two of the negroes were aggressors in the first difficulty and that they were intemperate, dangerous men, can not palliate, or apologize for, this outrage. And it is the very exhaustion of absurdity to say that the killing was not "premeditated," but resulted from "momentary impulses." Was it a "momentary impulse" that brought a number of men together from scattered houses, on a certain day, organized them, and guided their horses along the public roads for miles to the county town? All such attempts to condone outlawry only increase trouble and tend to undermine the foundations of social order. The best way to prevent such horrible and humiliating displays of violence is to insist upon the rigid, impartial administration of justice according to the forms of law. It is to the interest of all citizens that the imperatives of law be sacredly regarded and every infraction fearlessly punished.

Marginal Notes and References.

I have been surprised of late to find so many intelligent people, both young and old, who do not know how to use a Bible containing marginal references and notes. Many who have bought family and Oxford Bibles have said to me: "Look here, do you know what these small letters mean all along in the body of the text? and what is the use of this small print along the margin of my Bible?"

I answer, "Yes, when you see a small letter in the text, refer to that letter in the margin and you will find the references to parallel passages in other parts of the Bible. In this way one Scripture helps to explain another. You can find all there is in the Bible on that subject. These things were intended to aid you in the study of God's word. When you see a numeral in the body of the text refer to the corresponding number in the margin and you will find another rendering of the word or words. In many places the marginal reading throws much light on the passage under consideration. In some Bibles the star, the dagger, parallel lines and other marks are used in place of numerals, but the design is the same."

But they ask again, "Why are some words printed in italics?"

"Because there was no word or words in the original corresponding to the English word or words used. The italicized words were inserted by the translators to make in English what they thought to be the sense of the original. A vast amount of labor has been spent upon the Bible to simplify it and make it useful to the people."

Would it not be well enough for our Sunday-school teachers to explain these things to children and young people under their care? I find many children who are charmed with the idea of being able to hunt out all the references on a given subject. This is all the more important since so few people, comparatively, own a concordance or know the value of one. In some places the people wait for days and weeks for the preacher to come around to ask him where such and such a passage of Scripture can be found. They are often surprised that the preacher can not name the book, chapter and verse in an instant; and they are anxious to know how he can take the family Bible and find it so readily. The means of knowledge are at hand but they do not know how to use them. The people should be taught how to help themselves in the study of God's word.

GILDEROY.

The Lust of Praise.

BY THE LATE BISHOP LINUS PARKER.

Praise has its uses for good. Many a boy has been helped and stimulated by it while plodding his weary way up the hill of knowledge. To the young, when judiciously bestowed, it is healthful and inspiring, promoting self-respect, and encouraging effort in the direction of self-improvement. To the diffident it reveals the possession of powers and capacity not before suspected. To the discouraged and timorous it is often as an elixir of life, inciting them to fresh and successful enterprises. It is natural and right that men should desire the good opinions and commendations of others. Solomon declares of his model woman that "she shall be praised." Paul speaks of "the brother whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches," and he does not fail to commend by name many who were eminent for their piety and usefulness. The desire of praise, as it comes from God, is appealed to and sanctioned as one of the noblest principles, and in its due degree and place the love of human approbation is a most beneficent and elevating feeling.

Like almost every other good thing implanted in man, it is liable to perversion and abuse. Christ condemned the chief rulers who shrank from his open discipleship, because "they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." He exposes this inordinate love of worldly honor as an insuperable barrier to salvation when he puts the question: "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" The praise of men may be opposed to the praise of God, and the love of earthly honor may lead to the forfeiture of the divine. No doubt the passionate fondness for personal admiration keeps many in the circles of gayety and fashion, who, but for it, would espouse the discipleship of Jesus. The thirst for applause and social distinction outweighs the convictions of truth and duty. A cowardly deference to the tone and maxims of the world overcomes the motives which would otherwise lead to a profession of religion.

Even in the Christian character an inordinate love of praise may assume the proportions of a deformity. It becomes an evil disease, growing with what it feeds upon, until it assumes the nature of a monomania. It takes the form of a propensity to extort commendation and to fish for compliments. Friendships and associations are determined and prized only as they yield their tribute to this inexorable appetite. The only use which the slave of this passion has for society is to extract from it the honey of adulation and flattery. Notoriety and publicity are sought as the means not so much of doing good, or as incidental to posts of usefulness, but as affording the requisite occasions for self-glorification and display. When this plague-spot gets into the soul there is a morbid sensitiveness lest the man shall not get credit for all that he is and does, and lest what he claims should in any part be attributed to somebody else. There is no joy in the work unless the worker is made conspicuous. Wherever the stream flows, the fountain must be remembered. Wherever the light shines, the luminary must not be shorn of a single ray of its glory. It is not enough that the good is done and that God knows who has done it, and that eternity will make it manifest. Such an egotism could never have contented to perplex the world about the authorship of Juulius, or to have tolled beneath the sea to build the foundations of the Indias. The meed of praise must be accorded, and without it there is unrest and dissatisfaction. To be beautiful and not to be admired, is not to be beautiful. To be good and useful and gifted without popular recognition, is to be nothing.

This lust of praise is self, made offensively prominent, and demanding the pre-eminence. Obscurity is worse than death; moderate commendation is resented as an insult. Weak stimulants might have satisfied at first, but like the toper advanced in his cups, only the strongest in quality, abundantly supplied, will meet the cravings of a long-pampered appetite. The fulsome encomiums, which nauseate and disgust everybody else, are appropriated with greedy complacency. Of course the sweet and gentle graces of meekness and humility perish in such a moral atmosphere as this. Mephitic gases do not extinguish life more surely than does this morbid love of praise destroy these most rare and perfect plants of holiness. It is like poisonous vines and noxious weeds in the garden of the soul, overrunning the soil and choking out the good seed of the gospel. Humility and meekness are likely to be lost from the graces of the Christian life, and to be substituted by egotism and pride. Modesty is so rare as almost to be ashamed of herself, and to need an apology where her moderation and self-abasement are supposed to exist.

This lust of praise is one of the most prominent and pernicious perversions of the times. It is an insidious and stealthy enemy to spirituality, and rests as a blight upon thousands who are probably unconscious of its presence. Preachers and hearers, writers and readers are liable to the infection. It has come to be the style and habit of the day—a disease which has well nigh reached the epidemic point of virulence. Personal puffery was never, perhaps, carried to greater and more sickening extremes, and self-praise is so common as hardly to excite remark. From being merely tolerated as the weakness of eccentricity or of mental aberration, it has come to be a virtue and a merit. It is indeed a vicious habit of the times, pervading worldly literature and society, and seriously invading those precincts where "the mind that was in Christ" should be supreme. It is for the religious press to set an example in accordance with the spirit of the gospel, and for Christian men to cultivate a better taste and a more scriptural type of character. Among the most beautiful attributes of love are these: "Charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own."

Saving Faith.

BY REV. J. B. A. ADDRESS, D. D.

Not to believe would be as unnatural as not to hope, or not to love. The elements of belief are found in every human soul. We believe each other, believe our physician, our druggist. In matters of religion none are unbelievers. They either believe the truth or a lie. If those who are conversant with the will of God oppose it and believe a lie, it is because they love darkness rather than light, for the manifest reason that their deeds are evil. Difficulties in the way of believing the gospel? Yes; but no other than your sins. Seek and obtain forgiveness of your sins, and your supposed difficulties will appear to you, what they really are: vile subterfuges.

Saving faith is a healthy exercise of the innate faculty of belief in matters of our holy religion. This exercise is threefold: 1. It seeks and builds on solid foundation. Scriptural information is hence a necessary prerequisite. How shall they believe of whom they have not heard? 2. It accepts the holy Scriptures as the revealed will of God, solemnly binding upon men. Though it transcends human understanding, that understanding has learned to deem it an exceedingly folly for a creature to criticize its Creator. 3. A trustful reliance on Christ as the propitiation for our sins.

Saving faith is demonstrative and palpably manifest. While on the one hand it constitutes man the passive recipient of divine life, light and power, it converts him on the other hand into a diligent actor. True, this action is not faith, but it affords the necessary proof of its existence. Faith is the tree, works are the fruit. We must show our faith with our works. Faith worketh by love. The sun is known by his warmth and light. Faith by its works. Saving faith overcomes the world and this is our victory, even our faith.

Whether saving faith is the gift of God or merely the result of human effort has been much discussed. It is both. God is the author and finisher of our faith. It is God who worketh within us both to will and to do, according to his good pleasure. Nevertheless, we are enjoined to have faith in God. Horribly the apostle tells the jailer: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." This injunction and hortation would be the quintessence of nonsense if man were not capable of acquiring faith. Besides, non-possession of faith is laid down as the cause of banishment from heaven. "Whoever believeth not shall be damned." Could, would the righteous Judge condemn a human soul for not possessing what he alone could bestow but had failed to do so? God gives us saving faith as he gives the rich harvests to the farmer. The farmer's hands are not miraculously filled. He had to till, plow, plant, hoe, reap. But with all this toil had to give the increase.

Saving faith may be either weak or strong. Jesus chides his disciples with: "O ye of little faith." Those same disciples pray: "Increase my faith." Nevertheless, a helpless infant is a perfect human being, not withstanding its weakness. Even so may saving faith be weak. Alford nourishment and time, and maturity will ensue. We are saved like the Israelites, bitten by fiery serpents. They looked up to the brazen serpent and were healed. No doubt, there were many of impaired vision; they beheld the exalted object very indistinctly; but they tried to see. They turned their faces in the direction of the brazen serpent. All who made an earnest effort to see it were healed. If you can not see Jesus, turn your face toward him anyhow, for

"If you die with mercy sought, When you the King have found— That was a death, delightful thought, As sinners never died."

Faith, saving faith, may be lost. Paul informs Timothy that some of their followers had made shipwreck of faith. Like the fog bell on the near cliff, the words of the apostle resound in my ear: "Demas hath forsaken me." Alas of the wreck which bleaches on the shores of the river of history and experience! The foolish Galatians have a numerous progeny. Did I not see thee in the garden with him? said the day-sel to Peter. But Peter denied the Lord and said: "I know not the man."

Saving faith saves. It saves from sin and from sin's consequences. It makes us happy here and unlocks the door of paradise. It makes children of here, and secures for the heritage of a crown of glory.

I recently met with an exquisite commentary on Luke xviii, 17: "When the son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth." Nay, when Christ shall make his majestic appearance in celestial splendor he will not find faith. His approach will rapturously convert faith into sight and we shall experience what the Israelites of old confessed, Psalm cxxvi, 1: "When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream."

Baltimore Conference.

This body met in its one hundred and second session on the tenth instant, in the city of Saunton, Md., with Bishop McTeirre in the chair. Dr. John S. Martin was elected secretary for the thirty-third time. Bishop Wilson was present and presided short time. His health is yet feeble. But there was vigor and freshness in his address to the assembly in full connection.

Dr. McFerrin was in attendance and made a characteristic speech. He had quite an ovation. Dr. Keen represented the Board of Missions, an able address and the Conference resolved to raise one-fourth of its assessment for foreign missions by the first of September. Rev. W. C. D. last spoke and sang for Palmer's tribute and raised $519. Dr. Ladd of the Richmond Advocate, who also present and in a short address asked the Conference to send looking delegates to the General Conference, as he was going to publish their pictures.

The election of delegates to the General Conference resulted as follows: Clerical—John S. Martin, Samuel Rodgers, J. S. Gardner, Smithson, P. H. Wilsner, S. S. Cox; alternate—David Bush, J. A. Kern; Lay—T. J. Magruder, Frank Hereford, J. B. Wilson, J. H. Figgatt, J. P. Houck, E. B. Bryant; alternates—P. Hamill, McCoy, J. W. Newton.

The amount received for missions was as follows: domestic missions, $2,622; foreign missions, $8,956.

T. J. Magruder chairman of the Board of Finance made the following report:

The Bishops' fund, $1,177 assessed $923 collected; superannuated for assessed $7,364, collected $5,231; national, $1,961 assessed, collected $1,153; Bible cause, collected $1,153; the amounts paid per member, $1.00 more, 31 cents; Washington, 26 cents; Winchester, 22 cents; Rockingham, 15 cents; Monrovia, 14 cents; Louisville, 16 cents; Moorefield, 13 cents.

Randolph Macon College represented as in a prosperous condition. Already $50,000 has been subscribed as an endowment fund.

Mr. Gladstone gives timely rebuke to certain indiscriminate declamations against theological science in his controversy with Prof. Huxley. The following has application to certain scientific egotists:

"I am not, therefore, with against him (Mr. Huxley) who remark upon the habit of treating theology with an affection of contempt. It is nothing better, I lievo, than a mere fashion, having no more reference to permanent principle than the mass of ephemeral fashions that come from Paris with the immovable types of books. Those who take for the burden their songs, 'respect religion, respect science,' seem to me to be rational as if a person were to 'admire the trees, the plants, the flowers, the sun, moon, or stars, despise botany, and despise astronomy.' Theology is ordered knowledge, representing in the intellect what religion represents in the heart and life of man."

—The last words of John Gough were: "Young man, your record clean."

CHRISTIANITY.

I wish you to send the Advocate to a little girl in a cabin in the Blue Ridge. She will gather chestnuts near the river to pay for it. No paper goes to her cabin. It is only a child, and I will pay for it this year, and if the crop of chestnuts turns out well she can renew. She is only twelve.—Rev. J. D. L. Bedford, Va., in Richmond Christian Advocate.

A paper for a twelve-year-old, she lives within the mountain glen; she has no merchandise of gold—far from the rock and push of men. Will yellow leaves where chestnuts fall? She'll pick your pay and send you all.

Send on the paper—never fear! These editors! You'll make a name! The child who reads you for a year, And gathers chestnuts, always pays, And sweeter chestnuts never grew Than those which she will send to you.

Life may end, yes, "dust to dust" is written on the funeral case; But send the paper on, and trust That you will promise grace for grace; For send his word, "Well done," That gold or chestnuts—either one.

Estimate next year! Maybe not—Right fall on sunset crops, I know; Who now may fall to sleep, but what Can be expected who falls to sleep? To be, Editor, beware, And stop that paper if you dare!

Then go while yet the sleety rick Has low in spring o'er other's peaks, And earth's responsive lilies back The Thrush's kisses on her cheek, And watch your maiden tread and grow Like a sweet violet near the snow.

Return some halcyon in June, After the sun has gone to rest, When bees have hushed their busy tune And breezings all are in the nest; Your maid beneath the chestnut trees Is sweeter than the birds or bees.

They grow and hurry for the day, But hush their hum when comes the night; And she and chestnuts grow away Beneath the stars whose gleam is light. Two lives on others hinge thus here, Right up among the chestnut-burns.

And now, at last, 'mid yellow leaves, As autumn's dreariest weather, Go forth, O paper, for the sheaves; Break on the maid and you together; And of these chestnuts at your feet An angel would be glad to see.

Woodville Notes.

The first Monday in this month of April visiting seemed to have been the chief subject before the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting. About the same time the same subject was before the Woodville Preachers' Meeting. The Episcopal clergyman, the chair called on the Methodist preacher of Woodville station, first, and then on the subject. He said the subject was important. The pulpit was shorn of much of its power without this assistant; that no amount of trotting around would come for negligence or laziness in preparation. He said there was a difference between pop calls, social visits and pastoral visits. The pastoral visit might begin with light, pleasant conversation about wind, weather, or news of the day; then quietly lead to religious topics, and end with Scripture reading and prayer. Prayerful preparation for the visit is very proper, and common sense necessary. He found it convenient to announce his visits. This committed him to the visit at the appointed time, and helped in systematizing his work. He could not just himself to moods, darting out in a red-hot fit of love, and then wait until he felt like going again. That way might suit some, but he had to do his work with some system and in regular order, whether he felt like it or not. He tried to get each family once a quarter. The Jewish rabbi was next called on.

He agreed in the main with the Methodist preacher, though much caution was necessary to prevent envy and jealousy among the flock. Some places were much more pleasant to visit than others. This opened an easy way to partiality, and this readily provoked jealousy. He knew a rabbi in a large city that did not visit at all, and yet he was quite popular. He said people can be trained to much or little at this point. In Jamaica he served a charge, and many of them would not come to his synagogue unless he visited them. The Baptist brother said he had read the life of an eminent minister who died with regrets that he had spent so much time in pastoral visiting. He felt that he had been too much with his people and too little with his God. A brother said he thought he understood the case thoroughly, if being with his people separated him from his God. The Campbellite said it was a subject that he knew but little about. The chairman visited considerably, but with no regularity; quite a good deal for a time, then scarcely any for quite a time. He had thought of trying to visit with more regularity.

The temperance cause is gradually winning friends here, and widening its influence. Eight drinking saloons have been closed in this county recently. This has been mainly through the efforts of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It can be shown that over $100,000 worth of whisky has been used in and around this town in twelve months. That was when we had seven drinking saloons in Woodville, and several others near by. This vast expenditure for strong drink caused not one ear of corn or pound of cotton to grow where none grew before, but rather the reverse. This sum would have placed a barrel of pork and three barrels of flour at the door of every family in the county. The action of these ladies will add to our material wealth, to say nothing of the tears they dry up, and the blood they stanch. Yet many excellent men are horrified at the idea of a woman getting out of her place. I once met a company of Indians traveling. The women and girls carried large baskets filled to the brim, the head of the "pussies" frequently sticking out at the top of the basket. The men carried nothing but their guns, and some of them were mounted on little ponies. These partially bare, but fully bronzed, gentlemen certainly believed in a woman keeping her place. In the east the birth of a daughter is counted a calamity. There woman comes into existence under protest, holds a subordinate place as a girl, and in womanhood is a secreted chattel. The women of the East to this day go veiled and hooded, and that is preferable to the short sleeve and low-cut bodice we sometimes see, feasting the eyes of vulgar men and pleasing silly women, but disgusting better men and more sensible women.

In the days of St. Paul it was considered immodest and reproachful for a woman to go without her veil in any public place. So he prudently recommended conformity to this custom, and says the "woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head." The rabbins taught that a woman should know nothing but the use of the distaff. One of them writes, "Let the words of the law be burned, rather than that they should be delivered by a woman." But Joel prophesied of a time coming when the Spirit would be poured out on all flesh, "and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." The time is rapidly passing in enlightened lands when woman is to be regarded as a sort of semi-servant and semi-property. I am unable to understand how it can be perfectly proper for a lady to take part in tableaux, or light drama on the stage, to raise money to paint the graveyard fence, and improper for her, at the same place and before the same audience, to read or speak a piece against an evil that is painting her brother's nose, and hurrying him prematurely to the grave. I can't see how it is perfectly proper for a lady to spin around over the floor in the arms of some stranger, and improper for her to raise her voice against "a traffic that holds a mortgage over the cradle, and a deed written in heart's blood over human life." I know gentlemen who see no impropriety in a lady dancing the round dance, but are horrified at the idea of their wives and daughters doing so unladylike a thing as joining the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

We have had at Woodville that admirable temperance lecturer, Dr. H. A. Reynolds. He talks in a simple, plain, frank, emphatic manner, and seeks not to amuse with mirthful anecdotes. He gives facts, solid arguments upon them, and inevitable conclusions from them. "By God's help," is his sheet anchor. His last lecture here was full of sympathy for man, firm reliance on God, and total abstinence in practice. He is not in sympathy with "The Church Temperance Society," headed by Bishop Potter, and encouraged by many rectors that recommend moderate drinking instead of total abstinence.

We had a meeting here in the interest of the temperance cause last Tuesday. Upon best methods there was free interchange of opinion. J. Burrass McGehee, president of West F. railroad, gave us a very spirited and spiritual talk, and spoke of the mammoth evil of intemperance in wringing terms, but thought high license the best way to combat the evil. Rev. G. B. Rogers, of the Baptist Church, put in very aptly about a dozen pointed objections to high license. Rev. Mr. Turner, the rector, in some very clear remarks endorsed the views of the first speaker. He said they were in keeping with the teaching of the Episcopal Church on this point. Col. Nelson, a prominent lawyer, and a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, thought the time had past for the granting of indulgences. Shall the State say: The liquor traffic is wrong; it hurts my people; you are forbidden to engage in it? Nevertheless, you may do this evil thing for one year, if you will pay me $1,000. He said the time for the discussion of this subject, at least, was past with us, for our State had already enacted a prohibitory law, and it remained with us to comply with its conditions and test its merits.

Yours etc., T.

Woodville, Miss., March 20, 1886.

A Self-Supporting Mission.

Some of our people have been completely carried away with the idea of "Bishop Taylor's self-supporting mission in Africa." They do not seem to care so much about Africa, or the salvation of the Africans, and they are not deeply interested in the heroic labors of Bishop Taylor and his self-sacrificing assistants; but they are wonderfully taken with the idea of "self-supporting missions." That word self-supporting has music in it. They are willing enough for that mission, or any other mission, to go along and prosper and do good if it will only be self-supporting, take care of itself without any cost to them or the church at home. Indeed, this is the very thing they have been looking for this long while. Somehow they always thought the gospel ought to go along and make its own way without much vexation and worry about money in the church at home. In this country we build our churches and pay our preachers without help from outsiders, and other countries and people ought to do by this gospel as we do. They say, "The Bible says, 'God hath ordained that the gospel shall live of the gospel.' You see this makes the gospel a self-supporting institution."

Now, "God hath ordained," not "that the gospel shall live of the gospel," as you read; but "God hath ordained that they which preach the gospel shall live of the gospel"—that is, the preachers are to be supported by the people whom they serve; and a preacher who is sent by your church to preach the gospel to the heathen in any country ought to be, and must be supported by the people who sent him. As long as he is your servant doing the work you sent him to do, he must be supported by you. The obligation to send the gospel to all men bears equally on every Christian.

If you are not called to go and carry it, you are certainly called—yes, commanded, to furnish the means to send it. A self-supporting mission, in this sense of that term as used by some clever people, is a misnomer and a grave and serious mistake. No mission can go along of itself without expense to someone, or some church.

All honor to Bishop Taylor and the noble band of workers with him who are trying to plant the seeds of Divine truth in the minds of the sable sons of the dark continent.

The expenses of that self-supporting mission will have to be paid. Mark that, will you? They will have to be paid by the Christian people of this and other countries; or by the labor, toil, sweat and self-sacrifice of the missionaries themselves. No mission can be self-supporting in a sense that will not involve expense of one kind or another. Indeed no kind of business—neither the Lord's business nor our own—can be carried on without expense. Business will not go of itself, neither in Africa nor in any other country. God commanded the preachers to go into all the world, and he commanded the church to furnish the money to meet this expense involved.

I now pick up the supplement to the New York Christian Advocate for March 4, 1886, and I turn over to the report of Richard Grant, treasurer of the "Transit and Building Fund Society of Bishop William Taylor's self-supporting missions." A treasurer in New York for a self-supporting mission in Africa! Why, that sounds strange—indeed it does. Yet, here is his report, a long one, item by item—report of receipts and expenditures for a self-supporting mission for one year, from February 18, 1885, to February 5, 1886. This report affords food for thought, and it ought to bring penitence, repentance, faith, prayer, emulation—yes, noble daring for God and the progress of the gospel among men. Let me see. In one year the treasurer received for this self-supporting mission the net sum of $45,148 1/2—not a cent too much even for a self-supporting mission. The expenditures for one year are set down at $28,696 67, leaving a balance of $16,451 85 in the hands of the treasurer.

When I showed these figures to a gentleman who is a great advocate for self-supporting missions, he heaved a deep sigh, and said: "My conscience! You astonish me! I thought this was a self-supporting mission! What on earth do our people mean by spending all this money in Africa? We are not under any obligations to Africa. We don't owe them anything."

"Perhaps we don't," I replied, "but you must remember Africa didn't owe us anything when we were getting shipload after shipload of negroes from that country to cultivate our lands for us. We have a good chance now to pay back in the coin of pure love all the wrong we, or our people, did the people of that country."

"Well," said he, "I have about lost faith in self-supporting missions."

"Thank God for that loss, my brother. Would that all our people could make shipwreck of that kind of faith!"

Memorials to the General Conference.

The following papers were adopted at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference.

Whereas, The demand for Christian literature in the cheap forms of tracts and booklets has come to be almost universally felt in our church; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Mississippi Annual Conference, that we regard it as one of the first importance that our several churches, communities, and fields of labor be supplied with cheap pamphlets, tracts, and booklets on the themes of thought now occupying the public mind, and in order to meet the accomplishment of so desirable a work, we recommend to our ministers and laymen the preparation of such productions for the enlightenment of the people, the defense of our holy religion, and the philosophy and practical workings of our own church, its polity, doctrines and institutions.

Resolved, That we respectfully urge upon the consideration of every church and congregation the propriety of organizing a society or association for the purpose of purchasing from our Publishing House such tracts as may hereafter be published under the direction of the General Conference, and such other cheap tracts and pamphlets as may be procured at other places of the publication of such religious literature.

Resolved, That every preacher and minister, both local and traveling, be requested to assist in the formation of such societies throughout the entire boundaries of this Conference.

Resolved, That we also respectfully request the delegates elected to the next General Conference to urge upon that august assembly the importance of providing our churches and people at large with the lighter forms of such papers as above referred to, whether they be home productions or the republications of valuable documents, papers and tracts from over the seas.

C. K. MARSHALL,
W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

Whereas, The Nashville Christian Advocate is the sole property of the church, and was founded and has been maintained not for the realization of financial gains, but specially for the defense of our polity, doctrine, and the spreading of Christian truth over the entire field of our occupancy; And, whereas, A considerable sum of money is received at the Publishing House annually in the shape of the net profits of the Advocate alone; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Mississippi Annual Conference, that we respectfully memorialize the next General Conference to meet in the city of Richmond, Va., on the importance of inquiring into the obligation and possible duty of said Conference to change the direction now given to said surplus earnings of the said Advocate, so that they may be employed in printing and distributing pro rata to every Annual Conference, upon some plan to be fixed, as many papers as the said sum or sums of money so earned will pay for at the minimum cost of the paper, printing and mailing; and that said papers may be sold to the churches for gratuitous distribution to hospitals, prisons, and among the poor, which is desired regularly in large numbers at the minimum price. But they must not be distributed to regular subscribers, so as to diminish the profits and earnings of the paper, but when sent gratuitously shall be sent into destitute places under and by the advice of the presiding elders and pastors, as may be hereafter provided for.

C. K. MARSHALL,
R. ABBEY.

Sunday Newspapers.

1. There is no necessity for a Sunday press. Not twice a year is there news of such a character that the people could not wait for it twenty-four hours. In the stress of times like those in the late civil war, when the fate of the country is involved, or when the President lies at the point of death, Sunday bulletins might be desirable, but Sunday papers never. The editors show a keen perception of this fact in the make-up of their Sunday editions. They do their utmost to make these editions entertaining. Sunday issues of the same size and character as week-day issues would not command circulation now claimed for many of the Sunday papers. Long special cable dispatches gathered up the gossip of European capitals, stories, racy sketches, and a vast amount and variety of news, gossip, etc., are provided to tempt men to buy, not for their instruction, but for their entertainment. The Sunday press is not conducted to furnish simply news that will not keep, but to make money for the proprietors and to extend the influence and circulation of the regular week-day editions. One could miss every Sunday paper and lose nothing of value.

2. The Sunday newspaper interferes with church-going. Sunday being a day of leisure, people do not, as a rule, rise so early as on other mornings. After breakfast, which is an hour or two later than usual, the Sunday newspaper is taken up. It is not a large eight-page paper, with the news of the day and editorial discussion; it seldom consists of less than twice the ordinary number of pages—often many more, the articles being so arranged with display lines and intimations of spicy reading as to be almost irresistibly attractive to the ordinary reader. Amassed with the almost infinite variety of secular matter, the time to prepare for church comes and goes unheeded. Sunday newspapers are made to be read on Sunday. If not read then, to any considerable extent, they are not read at all, and they are bought, therefore, to be read on Sunday. What wonder that those who read them should often be kept from Sunday morning worship! We have secured a file of the Sunday papers of this city for Sunday, February 21—the Sunday nearest the writing of this article—and we find that the Sun, which usually consists of four pages, has twelve; the Tribune adds four extra pages, the World sixteen, the Herald ten, the Times four. We doubt if there is any other single influence operating more strongly to keep professing Christians and others away from church Sunday morning. A picture in Puck, in the last number for February, intended to be funny, conveys a very serious lesson on this subject.

3. The Sunday newspaper prevents that interruption of secular thought, that escape from secular influence, which the Sabbath was mercifully and providentially designed to afford. Too much emphasis can hardly be laid on this point. This is an age of intensely commercial life. The struggle of the six days in the various marts of trade and industry demands the utmost power of brain, and nerve, and muscle, and it is hard, with all the help the Sabbath can give, to turn the mental and physical activities into restful and spiritually helpful channels. The Sunday newspaper connects the business life of Saturday with the business life of Sunday. Stocks and politics, labor and capital, the course of trade, the price of products of the field and mill, questions of finance and taxation, new opportunities of investment, and a thousand other sources of profit and loss, of care and anxiety, attract the eye and absorb the thought of the reader of the Sunday newspaper, and if he fills a place in the pew at all he is too preoccupied to join heartily in the worship or follow attentively the teachings of the sermon. What is to become of the spiritual nature when the preparation for its cultivation consists of the cramming of the mind with the doings of politicians, the details of crime, the plots of new plays, the news of horse races, of divorces, of scandals, and the like? No man who cares for his soul's interest can afford the risk he takes in thus secularizing the Sabbath.

4. The Sunday newspaper is not designed to advance the religious interests of church people. Its influence is overwhelmingly secular. It makes no special effort to furnish suitable religious reading. As much matter of this character may be found in almost any week-day edition, with one or two possible exceptions. The Tribune, of February 21, gave one column out of 51 to religious topics; the Herald three out of 50; the World two out of 86; the Times two (half Roman Catholic) out of 55; the Sun, making a most liberal allowance, one out of 69. Such religious reading as the average Sunday newspaper furnishes is merely incidental. The tone is far from being religious.

5. The Sunday newspaper is not, to say the least, any better in character than the week-day newspaper. In most cases it is worse, taking the papers of this city as a standard of judgment. If those who do not take Sunday papers deem it proper to indulge in secular reading on the Sabbath, they can make their selection from a library, and choose that which is not only not harmful, but helpful, in some degree, to the religious life. Those who read the Sunday newspapers read what somebody else has selected for them, with no regard for the requirements of the day, morally or religiously. Of the Herald's contents on February 21, over twelve columns were devoted to news of crime, scandal, races, theaters, balls, etc., and the Sun gave over thirteen, the World over eighteen, and the Tribune ten, to the same kind of matter. Much of this is unfit to be read at any time, at least by a Christian.

We have set forth no Puritanic view of the Sabbath in this article, though if we were forced to choose between the Puritanic and the Parisian Sabbath we would unhesitatingly accept the former. We have simply assumed what every evangelist Christian concedes: That Sunday should be observed as a day of rest and religious duty, and that whatever unnecessarily interferes therewith is Sabbath breaking. Upon this ground alone we have sought to prove that the Sunday newspaper is a sin against the Sabbath.

Stated in the briefest form, the grounds of our condemnation of the Sunday newspaper are these:

1. It is not necessary.
 2. It creates a large Sunday traffic.
 3. It is not proper and profitable secular reading for the Sabbath.
 4. It interferes with church-going.
 5. It carries the business and secularity of the week into the Sabbath.
 6. Its influence is unfavorable to spiritual improvement.
 7. It is not designed to supply the Sabbath wants of church people.
 8. It is, in no moral or religious sense, superior to the week-day newspaper—often inferior.
 9. There is no ground upon which it can commend itself to sound Christians.
 10. It inspires other forms of Sabbath breaking.
 11. It is a powerful enemy of the Sabbath, and therefore
 12. It is an enemy of the church.
- How any Christian who believes that Sabbath breaking is wrong can, in the face of the considerations we have named, patronize Sunday newspapers with a conscience void of offense we can not understand. Nor can we understand how any Christian can fail to perceive that the Sunday newspaper is designed for those who are irreligious, and who have no conscience on the subject of Sabbath breaking, and recognize no religious obligation.—New York Christian Advocate.

How difficult it is to estimate the significance of acts or events in their own occurrences. The seeds whose nature and proper growth are unknown, and whose planting we tell whether they will spring up in modest flowers or mighty trees, would have supposed that Kung and Maga, the two Chinese revolutionaries, were the liberator-loving nineteenth century? When the indignant Bostonians emptied the tea into their bay, how few among them could have foreseen the results of their deed. When the convention called on the people to elect their representatives to a national legislature, how few could have anticipated that it would elect a slaveholder to the Presidency, and a non-resistance to the war of Napoleon I. John Brown's martyrdom, the burning of Harper's Ferry, the execution of the anarchists, and the short time that the anarchists were in power, were exalted to the rank of historic events, and each comes to the attention of the student of history. When, in the year 1848, Louis Napoleon, deciding to meet the Socialists in the Chamber of Deputies, was assassinated in the Capitol, the course of Roman history is changed. Charles I., refusing the overtures of the Parliament, is brought to trial, and the English Revolution is inaugurated. Louis XVI., refusing to sign the Declaration of the Rights of Man, is guillotined, and the French Revolution is inaugurated. THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1886.

We shall publish full and accurate reports of the General Conference proceedings. Now is the time to subscribe for the ADVOCATE.

Dr. L. G. John, of Huntsville, Texas, contributes to the Nashville Advocate a clear and convincing article on our foreign missions.

A correspondent of the Nashville Advocate makes a suggestion with reference to the approaching General Conference that ought to be adopted: In view of the great interests involved in the conclusions of that body, and most especially the election of several new Bishops, he suggests Friday, April 30, as the day of fasting and prayer by the whole church. As we believe in Divine guidance in these things, the assurance of which has been our glory in the past, our hearts ought to be humbled before God and his unerring counsel sought at this time. So long as the church believes that her chief pastors are selected by a wise Providence her loyalty will be unaltered.

In a delightful letter to our central organ about the Central Mexican Mission Conference, Bishop Kremer makes these pertinent observations:

"To talk of missions, to give to missions, to philosophize upon missions, or to suggest errors in the conduct of missions, is much easier than to do the work itself. Those whose persons who sit at a respectable distance, wearing green goggles, and criticize the way our missionaries enter the lions' den are remarkable as spectators, but for nothing else. It is high time our church at home should place broadly against these critics the actual results of our mission work in the last ten years, and with high anthems of praise hush their complaints."

Sentiments similar to these expressed in the following from the Northwestern Christian Advocate, we uttered some days ago to a college president:

"What has happened to our college presidents and professors? One might almost conclude that most of our schools have suspended, or have been driven into silence by adversity. Church-paper columns are wide open, and faculties should see to it that their work is kept before the church. Many grave men fear, doubtless, that their news-sending savors of egotism and self-seeking. Not so. We tell pastors truly that they should tell the church what God is doing in their midst. So, also, in the church school, which is doing gospel work in the name of the church. Honor should be given to him who vouchsafes success. In this just exhortation we do not include the suggestion that such uncharitable silence aids parents and conferences to forget that the church has good schools."

Censorious Celibacy.

We find the following extract in the columns of the Morning Star of this city, the Roman Catholic organ of this archdiocese. It enjoys the "Episcopal approval" of the Archbishop, the Bishop of Natchez, and the Bishop of San Antonio. We would like to know if these venerable ecclesiastics approve this deliverance in their organ:

There are two sects in this country that are exceedingly aggressive, the Baptists and the Methodists. They are not politely aggressive, nor intellectually aggressive, but ignorantly aggressive, bigotedly aggressive. Their ministers are not gentlemen as a rule. Neither are they charitable, if they were charitable they would be gentlemen. In fact they are like all half educated people, humbly.

We understand that the present editor of that paper and the author of the above, is a veritable "father" in the church, with all the vows of ordination upon him. That accounts for the change in the Star. It reflects a different colored light. The rays are now positively green.

But the immediate cause of this celibate becoming so censorious does not appear. Is this a normal expression of celibacy? These venerable "fathers" are supposed to "keep themselves so far aloof from the society of both men and women, and, especially of Protestant clergymen, as to have little opportunity of passing judgement upon them. The source of the knowledge assumed above needs explanation.

To the Friends of Prohibition in Mississippi.

This address was read before the State Prohibition Executive Committee and the publication was requested by publication. Its importance to a large number of our readers entitles it to editorial space.

The Legislature has met and adjourned, and left on our statute-books a local option law. Its passage will mark another epoch in the history of temperance reform in Mississippi. If in all respects it does not fully meet the wishes of some ardent friends of prohibition in the State, it is substantially what we have demanded for the last four years in our annual conventions. Adhering to our declared purpose to keep the movement disentangled from party politics, we have appealed to legislators without regard to political creed, to give the sovereign people the privilege of determining, by counties, whether or not the matchless evil of the age shall be tolerated in their midst. Our appeal has been heard, and such a law has been enacted. Upon application by petition being signed by one-tenth of the qualified voters of any county in the State, the Board of Supervisors shall order an election, to take place within forty days, to determine whether or not any alcoholic, spirituous, vinous, malt or intoxicating liquors or bitters shall be sold in said county. This election cannot take place within two months of any general election. By this provision, the question is eliminated from any county or State political contest. If a county, by majority vote, declares in favor of the sale, then before license to retail can be granted to any applicant within an incorporated town or supervisor's district, he must present a petition signed by twenty-five owners of real estate within such municipality or district. That petition must be filed and lie over for thirty days to await counter petitions. If within that time a counter petition signed by a majority of the qualified voters of said incorporated town or supervisor's district be presented, then license shall not be granted. That provision is eminently wise, and whatever the result of the county election, will of necessity secure the protection of prohibition to a large number of the towns within the State. All places now under special prohibitory laws, where chartered manufactures and institutions of learning are located, will remain undisturbed by this general law.

This, friends of prohibition, is our position to-day: we have eleven entire counties in which the sale of liquor is prohibited. In not one of those counties can a saloon be opened until a majority of the legal voters at the ballot-box shall give their permission. With the growth of moral sentiment in said counties, educated and strengthened by the operation of a prohibitory law, we expect to hold every one of them firmly in the advancing column of reform. We start out afresh in the conflict with eleven counties and a number of college and manufacturing towns, already secured. The next few months will witness other victories, as one county after another shall express its convictions at the polls. The issue is sharply defined. Personalities are eliminated, and the one question for the people to decide is, whisky or no whisky. In such a contest it is difficult to forecast what the people of Mississippi will do? On which side of the line of public morals they will stand?

Our friends are multiplying and the weak are becoming strong. The little company of a few years ago has become a great army. Statesmen and political leaders have heard the distant thunder of the tramping hosts. We are "no longer derided and denounced as fanatics and ignorants, except by a certain ignorant elite and stamp, and the principles on which we stand are recognized as fundamental and righteous as the throne of God. Prohibition is the watchword of moral reform. Around it public opinion is steadily crystallizing. Communities and shadowed homes claim this as their surest protection.

The following suggestions are made to our friends in the several counties:

1. Do not bring on the contest precipitately. Develop and organize a sentiment before the issue is joined. Arrange for a vigorous, vigilant, aggressive campaign.
2. Perfect your organizations in each county. Let there be well selected county executive committees, with a representative from each school district. Appoint no man to complement him, but because of his force and fitness. Invite the cooperation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. With the unions organized in each neighborhood we will have efficient co-laborers.
3. Avoid personal and political controversies. We have no enemies to punish. Our mission is to win friends and shield the sorrowing. Let nothing discount the purity of our purposes, or beguile us from our only and holy mission. We are moral reformers, and not "regulators"—or political doctrinaires.

4. Sow down each county with wholesome temperance literature. Thus we will educate mind and conscience. We must induce the people to think in order to get them to intelligently act. Agitation begets consideration, and that is the life of real reform.

5. Let special attention be given toward assisting the colored people in their temperance organizations. We need their hearty co-operation; their untiring condition appeals to our patriotic consideration. Whisky is the greatest enemy to their elevation. They can never be fully emancipated until every open saloon is hermetically sealed. Their church organizations have spoken with no uncertain sound. In the great contest at Atlanta a majority of the colored people voted for prohibition. A like loyalty to their church vows we may expect in Mississippi. It will be an honor to the race lately enfranchised, if, by their ballots, they shall wave the flag of freedom over the empire of rum and ruin.

Friends of temperance reform, ours is a great opportunity. We have "come to this kingdom for such a time as this." And this opportunity is the measure of our responsibility. Every friend of freedom must be up and doing. No soldier can afford to slumber on his post. If this contest in each county is managed discreetly there is little doubt but that three-fourths of them will declare for prohibition within the next eighteen months. There must be no divided councils. Let the ranks close up and every comrade prove a hero.

Practical and Important.

The relation of baptized children to the church has been a subject of much consideration and consultation. Our Advocate and Quarterly have from time to time published the views and reviews of scholarly and godly men, but the question is yet up for discussion. One of the most interesting debates in the last session of the English Wesleyan Conference was on that subject. The great leaders, including Dr. Osborn, Dr. Pope, Dr. Rigg, Mr. Jenkins, Mr. McDonald and others took prominent part. It resulted in the appointment of a committee to formulate some expression for consideration and adoption by the next Conference. That committee has recently been in session in London and have agreed upon a report. We find a synopsis of it in the Methodist Times and take pleasure in transferring it to our columns. It is altogether the most practical suggestion we have seen. If adopted by our Methodism on this side of the sea, it would be a great gain at a most important point. The Methodist Times says:

"After a full and earnest discussion, in which every member took part, and which was extended over two sessions, the Rev. Dr. Osborn moved, the Rev. Dr. McKee, vice-president of the Irish Conference, seconded, and the committee heartily adopted the following resolutions: That as all baptized children have been admitted into the congregation of Christ's flock and publicly recognized as disciples of Christ, it is incumbent on the ministers of the connection to extend to them a larger measure of systematic attention and pastoral care than they have as yet generally received, and we recommend the connection to direct as follows: 'that such increased care and attention should be more distinctly based upon the relation which is created by their baptism, and should embrace their fuller instruction in their duties and privileges as professed disciples of Christ. That to facilitate such instruction it is desirable, first, that the names of all baptized children should be inserted in a list to be kept by the superintendent, and the number reported annually to the quarterly meeting, the district meeting and the Conference. That arrangements should be made that the children so registered should, when of suitable age, if the parents consent, be met by the superintendent or his colleagues, as a distinct portion of his charge, and that the object of all the care bestowed upon them should be to bring them to acknowledge and carry out the obligations resting upon them as having been baptized, and with the earnest hope that their present provisional connection with our body may in due season lead to full and accredited membership.' The committee then provisionally adopted various practical and detailed resolutions, carrying out the above suggestions. These details will be revised and finally approved at another meeting to be held before Conference."

We had the pleasure of spending Sunday last in the beautiful and delightful town of Grenada. Repeated invitations from Rev. T. J. Newell, our pastor there, and an urgent solicitation from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, occasioned this visit. Reaching the little city at 10:30 o'clock Saturday night we found Bro. Newell in waiting with a carriage, to convey us to the Grenada Collegiate Institute, over which he successfully presides. We were pleased to learn of the growing prosperity of this institution. The current term is by far the most successful under the present management. It seems to be established in the confidence and affection of North Mississippi Methodism, and has every promise of an honored career. President Newell is evidencing more and more his fitness for educational work and will possibly sustain a long and honorable connection with this institution.

On Sunday morning we had the privilege of preaching the word to a large congregation. Such helpful hearers do not constitute every worshiping assembly. Nowhere have we seen so large a proportion of children in attendance upon the eleven o'clock preaching service. That is a fact worth considering. The children ought to attend church and occupy pews with their parents.

We are glad to report the church in a good spiritual, hopeful condition. There has been a number of accessions to the membership, the prayer meetings are interesting occasions, and the Sunday-school is on a "boom." More than half the assessment for foreign missions has been paid and all the connectional collections will be forthcoming.

By previous arrangement the afternoon meeting was held at the courthouse, no church being sufficiently large to accommodate the audience. It was a great gathering. For a weary while we discoursed on gospel temperance and exhorted Christians to renewed diligence. The town is aflame with zeal on the question. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has one hundred and fifty members, and every one is an evangelist. A leading lawyer remarked to us, that he thought the county would certainly vote for prohibition.

About six o'clock a heavy rain commenced falling much to the relief of a tired editor, who was announced for another sermon. A delightful Sabbath day it was we spent with the Grenada friends. Assured that the latch string hangs on the outside, we shall call again.

Rev. S. M. Thomas, presiding elder of the district, and Rev. W. S. Lagrone, pastor of the neighboring circuit, both reside there, but they were absent at their "loved employ," and we failed to meet them.

The Carrollton Tragedy Again.

We expressed our convictions last week on that horrible butchery at Carrollton, Miss., in which thirteen negroes were murdered. Never have we been so shocked and humiliated by such a display of bloody violence. Every patriotic citizen of the State and nation ought to condemn it. It is idle to talk of such outlawry as a "cudden impulse." There is too little regard for the forms of law in our section. Human life is too cheap. We must enshrine the authority of the courts or surrender to the reign of the mob. And to effect this the pulpit can not keep silent. Let it speak with the voice of thunder.

We have been pleased to read its fearless denunciation by the secular papers. With one or two exceptions they have condemned the outrage in unmeasured terms. The following from the Jackson Clarion we give most hearty commendation:

It is hard to realize that there could be found in Mississippi one hundred men who could be led to avenge the personal wrongs and injuries of a friend in the heartless, conscienceless and cold-blooded manner which characterized the conduct of the mob at Carrollton. It is harder still to realize that the place selected for this exhibition of hideous atrocity should be the temple of Justice and at the very horns of the altar. Has it come to this that there is no place so sacred that the bloodthirsty will not enter to do their damnable deeds? If so, then indeed we are worse than Heathens.

Do the people of Mississippi realize that at the door of the courtroom in Carrollton in Carroll county, the bloody bodies of its slain citizens lie heaped one upon another? They have not been removed. They can not be removed. There they will stay as a monument to the folly and the wickedness of their ruthless slayers.

There can be no adequate punishment for the injury which has been inflicted upon the good people of Mississippi, by the murderous mob at Carrollton. There will be no punishment of any kind. Time spent in an attempt to bring them before the bar of that temple whose sanctity they have so grossly violated would be time thrown away. We do not know who took part in the bloody deeds. We do not care to know. For their sakes would that all know-edge and all remembrance of them could be blotted out. They may be powerful and influential citizens whose favor it were well to court and whose displeasure it were dangerous to arouse. To such considerations we can close our eyes and our ears; but we can not be blind or deaf to the appeals of the weak who claim and deserve our protection, nor can we be unmindful of the indelible blot that has been put upon the reputation of the State.

The people of Mississippi who do not wish to rest under the odium of acquiescence in wholesale butchery have a duty to perform. They must speak out in denunciation of all deadly assaults upon the persons of its citizens. There must be an assertion of the rights of all to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. We know that a large majority of our citizens are law abiding; but if they do not condemn such an outrage as that at Carrollton, the judgement they will receive and merit from the civilized world would aptly fit a nation of savages.

We must re-assure the negro. We must call a halt to his murderous enemies.

Foreign Missions through Alien Agency

The discussion of Dr. Garland's plan for remedying the evils of the present method of conducting our foreign missions has been earnest and enlightening. Facts, highly interesting, have been brought out. Dr. Young assures us that the "friction" in the foreign fields is by no means as great as some seem to suppose; indeed, is very small, and that want of health, rather than want of harmony, accounts for "those resignations." Then Dr. Kelly informs us that the great evil of non-success, which we are called on to remove is really non-existent, since, as he shows by the figures, our foreign missions have increased in members and in several other evidences of growth far more rapidly than the home church during the last five years. Finally Dr. Garland surprises many by saying he does not propose to elect Bishops for any particular places, and thus knocks the gist out of most of the arguments on both sides of the question. No wonder brethren fell into several logical abstractions with these unknown or imaginary quantities involved in their premises. So then, after full and free discussion, it seems to be agreed on all sides that we are not to have any Bishops elected with special reference to the foreign work.

The church will neither locate nor diocesanize her Bishops, but make them more itinerant than before, if need be, that the uttermost parts of her dominions may be inspired and blessed by their presence.

Let us now inquire if something besides more episcopal service is not needed to increase the vigor and success of our work in foreign fields.

First, ought we not to stress the work of preaching the gospel directly to the people, instead of trying to convert them by the slow and roundabout methods of education? Is not education, and especially of a high order, rather an accompaniment of or a successor to the preached word, than its vehicle or its antecedent? Are we not in China and South America putting more emphasis upon the scholastic and collegiate education, than upon the simple preaching of the word after the manner of the Master? I am led to infer that this is the case, from the comparative amounts of money appropriated for schools and colleges, and also, from the reports of several earnest workers in the foreign fields who have witnessed the results of methods and know the wants of the heathen. Educational appliances are useful adjuncts to missionary, as to all other preaching of the gospel, but are we not in danger of giving them disproportionate importance in our scheme? The school is of man, the pulpit is of God. Let the pillar of cloud and fire go before us as we clear the way for the army.

Secondly, ought we not to use greater efforts to secure and employ native helpers in the work of preaching the gospel among the heathen? The gospel was at first brought down from heaven only because it could not be originated on the earth. God seems at all times to have employed the fewest possible of foreign agents in making known his will to man. Angels must not preach it, but men may. An archangel must not bring it down from heaven, but the Son of God must become the son of man that he may bring it. His genealogy must show him to be not only a man, descended from Adam, but a Hebrew of the Hebrews, descended from Abraham. Nothing could have been more obstructive to the mission of Jesus among the Jews, than for it to have been believed or known that he was a foreigner. He took on him the seed of Abraham, to be their brother indeed. Did ever Jew dislike or suspect a Gentile more than the Chinaman of to-day suspects and hates all foreigners? It was a wise and happy suggestion, attributed to one of our Bishops, that of the 150 missionaries for China, at least one hundred of them should be natives of China. The difficulties attending the maintenance of a foreign mission, chiefly through alien agency, are immense. The expense of travel, the laborious delay of learning a foreign tongue well enough to preach in it, the failure of the health of many who must return at great loss of time and money, social obstacles to the work of foreigners, incident to all countries, the greater cost of supporting a foreign teacher in any place, together with the impossibility of overcoming the prejudice of heathens against Christians make the work of a foreigner almost incalculably greater than that of a native in preaching to any people. Ought we not to pray that God would at an early day put the seal of his approval on our China mission by raising up one who shall be to our mission in China what Paul was to the early planting of Christ's doctrines among the Jews? So far as this argument relates to China, its force is greatly enhanced by the fact that it is altogether possible that at no very distant day all Americans may be driven out of China in retaliation for ill treatment recently inflicted by Americans upon Chinese in this country.

Is it not a sad commentary upon our thirty years' work in China that we have not even one native minister of signal zeal, power and popularity as a preacher of the word? Ought not the church at home to pray God to raise up strong men in China to preach the gospel? And ought not our church to establish at once a mission in Japan, a great nation, far more ready than China for every gospel agency?

Certain Persons and Things.

MR. EDITOR: There are doubtless many letters reaching your forwarding office which have not the forwarding stamp upon them. I have no disposition to be obtrusive, but I do feel an interest in certain persons and things and to those persons I want to write about these things.

First person is not I in this case. Second, not you, third not he. But I will classify.

1. Suggesters. The other day some of our boys were permitted to bore a hole in a great pine log and, containing powder in the hole, they produced an explosion equal to a cannon. One lame little fellow, who chewed a very large quid of gum, did the lighting of the train. After one tremendous explosion the log flew apart, some of the fragments being hurled a hundred yards in the air, the little fellow ran up and taking the gum out of his mouth squeaked "I teched 'er off." The suggester who buys no powder, bores no hole, lays no train but chews gum and borrows a match, rubs the match on his pants and "teches 'er off."

2. Memoirists. These brethren are like the friends I and another man had when our borrowed mule got sick on the way home from District Conference. These friends were all sizes, ages, professions and colors; but every one of them had seen a sick mule and knew what would cure him and what would kill him. One old negro said the mule "had eat too much shelled co'n and de way wuz to rub his flanks wid de red cob." We got the red cob and I rubbed until I tickled the mule and in his fit of mirth he kloked me some ten feet and the old man exclaimed: "Dar now, doan' ye see de good o' de red cob?"

3. Discussers. These believe like the Iron Jackets that "without controversy great is the mystery of godliness," but with controversy the mystery vanishes. They are the same set of doctrinaires with this exception that they believe in discussion. They discuss everything. Our church paper become the organ on which everyone practices. There is no wonder it gets out of tune.

4. Nominators. These are sometimes sub-Bishops on some special inspiration of a good dinner or the payment in full of his quarterage. He is like the boy who catches a fish in a certain hole in the creek. He tells everybody what fish swim in that hole. But nobody ever gets more than a crawfish after him. In turn these people think the presiding elder is bigger than any of the Bishops. But they forget that he is not a double blanket but a single one and he won't bear spreading.

5. The called. They feel a call to office. Some feel called to the office of Bishop, some to be book agent, some to be missionary secretary, treasurer or some other great work. They go round asking friends if they haven't heard of the heavenly vision which has happened to them. "Don't you think I ought to heed it?" I know it will cause the breaking of endearing associations, but I am willing to make any sacrifice. They receive many letters urging them to give up everything for duty. They want advice and I want to give them some. "If you are loath-

A FRAGMENT.

BY ROBERT BURNS.

The rosy, dimpled fingers of the spring
You smile stretch of happy woodland hills
With myriad millions of new opening leaves;
But when the autumn from the tawny hills
Shall tear the rustling leaves,
The few pale waifs that may be lingering
Will surely perish in the winter's ill.

The warm, full currents of life's crimson tide
In you great city's inner locking walls
Throb through a million hearts that feel no fear,
But when the frost of life's sad autumn falls
On Hope's wide field of verdure,
The few that do not molder side by side
Will walk in sorrow till death kindly calls.

Perhaps each waking of the vernal year
To you, O Father, is a new-born life;
Perhaps each following year makes more divine
The mold in which the human soul is cast.
If not, the sun doth shine
Growth in vain—rain is all hope or fear,
The future can but recreate the past.
—Southern Discourse.

Here and There.

MR. EDITOR: It is quite a relief to a hard-worked city pastor to get away from home occasionally. This pastor has recently had a refreshing experience in that line. True, he did not leave home for enjoyment, but for work; but enjoyment came with the work. A change in the character of one's work is sometimes restful and recreative. Invitations to lecture have given me an opportunity of visiting since Conference the following places: Utica, Natchez, Port Gibson, Edwards, Jackson (Miss.), Wilson and Centerville.

Everywhere I find the brethren hard at work, and hopeful as to results. And there are signs of progress everywhere. At Utica, Powell occupies a new parsonage, to which he is adding needed improvements as opportunity offers. At Jefferson Street, Natchez (a dear old charge), Moulton stands in front of a handsome new organ, which is decidedly the handsomest this preacher has ever seen. And it has power and melody commensurate with its beauty. At Wesley Chapel, Natchez, Penn's eloquence and zeal have made his handsome Gothic edifice too small for his congregation. An extension is contemplated in the near future. At Port Gibson, Bradford, Jr., is luxuriating in all the leisure (?) of an exceedingly prosperous college session, while Bradford, Sr., has begun the work of thoroughly renovating the spacious edifice in which he expounds. At Edwards, Cooper has contracted for the rebuilding and modernizing of the ancient temple which resounds to the music of his voice. At Jackson the indefatigable Andrews is planning and working for the speedy finishing up of that architectural gem which ordains our State capital. Under the efficient pastorate of Parmenas Howard, Wilson and Centerville, two young and growing towns on the L., N. O. & T. R. R., are struggling to build each a house of worship. To help in this good cause was the object of my visit. I gave two lectures at each place. At Centerville I also gave a temperance lecture, which was well attended and which I hope will be as seed sown in good soil. At this place I visited the grave of that illustrious prince in Israel, William Winans, and spent a night at his old home-stand.

In these journeyings to and fro upon my attention almost everywhere—the growth of temperance sentiment.

Prohibition is in the air. Public sentiment is rapidly crystallizing into the edict, "The saloon must go." Even staid, conservative old Natchez has waked from her lethargy, rallied her forces under the banner of temperance, and gained at least a temporary triumph over "the liquor devil." Her noble women, the peers of any in the land, have buckled on their armor and rushed into the fight with a zeal that is both inspiring and contagious. Here, at Meridian, the good work goes on gloriously. The Meridian Temperance Reform Club is making itself felt. A committee of twenty-five has been appointed, with your humble servant as chairman, to organize throughout the county. Four good, strong clubs have been organized throughout the county outside of Meridian, and appointments are out for the organization of others within the next week. Clubs have also been organized among the colored people in Meridian. We expect to have a regular Atlanta fight here soon, and an Atlanta victory, too. And when we get the victory we are going to sing the long-meter Doxology loud enough to wake up the sleepers all over the State. Our indefatigable presiding elder, Rev. R. D. Newberry, is making himself felt in this fight. Wherever he holds a quarterly meeting the liquor traffic gets a black eye.

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, permit me to make a suggestion to my brethren of the ministry, and to your temperance readers generally: Organize everywhere temperance reform clubs. This is the best way to prepare for prohibition. When you get men pledged to total abstinence, they will, as a rule, vote for prohibition. And when you get temperance men banded together in a well-constructed organization, which meets every week, you generate an enthusiasm that is contagious. I will take pleasure in sending to anyone who desires it a copy of the Constitution of our club.

W. C. BLACK.

Our Foreign Missions.

BY REV. W. T. J. SULLIVAN, D. D.

Certainly Chancellor Garland is to be thanked for his pertinent paper on "Our Foreign Missions." It has generated a discussion which will result in a better understanding of more than one element in our polity. There will be a better knowledge of the episcopal function as well as a better adjustment of the missionary operations. This latter can be effected, and no doubt will be, without a reorganization of the system of operation, unless I have mistaken the nature of the existing organization.

So far as I know, paragraph 155 of the Discipline contains all the law we have organizing and governing our foreign missionary operations. The existence and powers there given to the Board of Missions do not, of course, affect the prerogative and function of the episcopacy in the mission fields. The episcopal college, then, and the Board of Missions are co-ordinate functionaries in these fields, just as the Bishop and the Annual Conference are co-ordinate functionaries of the church in the work of that Conference. The two co-operate under the law regulative of their respective functions. The Board makes its own by-laws, selects the mission field, determines the expense of the work, measures the expense, chooses the missionaries, arranges for collections and payments, and makes reports, etc. The Bishop appoints men to their places, guards and promotes the preaching of sound doctrine and administration of proper discipline, and otherwise superintends the work of the mission. There is nothing apparent in the constitutional organization of our missionary operations to prevent an annual or biennial visit of the Bishop to the mission field under the ordinary arrangement of the college of Bishops. Surely the Board of Missions has no power to supersede such visits by creating the place of superintendent; nor does it appear how the Bishop can supersede his own visits by delegating that place. Our law provides that in the absence of a Bishop from the session of an Annual Conference, that Conference shall elect a qualified president out of its own members. Why is not this so in reference to a mission Conference? Why may not the members of the mission meet and, in the absence of the Bishop, elect one of their own body to do that work which would legally fall to the Bishop if he were present? What is it in the nature of a mission that endows the superintendent with episcopal authority? that gives him control of presiding elders in the mission, and of appointments to work? Can either the Board of Missions or the Bishop himself so invest the superintendent of a mission? Whence is the power to do so derived? Where is it expressed or implied? The introduction, then, of the local superintendent of a mission has been incidental and not inherent in the organization of our mission work. That organization would stand complete without the local superintendent, its field work being executed by the Bishop in charge, the presiding elder or elders and the appointees under their charge. The Bishop and the Board of Missions, co-operating as co-ordinate functionaries, should give unity and solidity to the work, while there would be the wisest distribution and adjustment of forces. To the extent that the presence of the local superintendent has hindered such a co-operative result, his place and work seem to be abnormal both to the general constitution of our church and to the organization of our missionary operations. The Bishop should be unhampered in his access to his mission field by any other functionary, either in his visits or in his appointments to work.

I suspect that if the question was asked, What is the use of a local superintendent in a mission? a complete answer would reveal in many quarters the notion of a local Bishop. If not, why is it thought necessary to substitute the local superintendent with a Bishop, when, in truth, the Bishop already has his rights and powers in the mission.

If the foregoing be a correct conception of the organization of our missionary operations, then nothing is needed for the best results but to move the parts in harmony. Let the Bishops visit the missions in turn and annually as they do the Conferences, and exercise full episcopal power there. In his absence from a mission Conference the ordained members can elect a president and hold the session, continuing, if need be, those presiding elders whom the Bishop has appointed. After a field has been surveyed and studied by one or two episcopal visits it will be easy enough for the Bishop at any time to adjust the workers to the work through his presiding elder or elders. Let these keep in regular communication with the Bishop and make full reports to him every quarter of all matters except the receipt and disbursement of money. Let the missions be thoroughly recognized as part of our great connectional body, receiving the currents of spiritual life through the regular channels of the organism. They should not be made Annual Conference before they have acquired adequate experience and growth under spiritual and disciplinary training. A wise course has been pursued in this regard.

Our missionary treasurer has given us statistical results which call for gratitude to God and which should urge our zeal for the larger results which the inviting field promises. One thing, among others, will, I believe, promote this zeal. Let the Annual Conferences have more to do in gathering and discussing the facts of our foreign mission work. The members of these Conferences should become living factors in missionary exercises at the sessions, and go back to their people re-endowed with facts and force. It should quickly come to pass that missionary day and missionary anniversary can be made of the utmost service to our cause by our own Conference men, in the absence of a connectional officer.

From Ruston, La.

At Athens we found Bro. Sheppard in feeble health. His bodily weakness, however, has in no way abated his spirit for work; and, if he can stand the labors he has promised himself, he will, this year, exceed his splendid report of last year. May he be strengthened and spared for the doing of that which is in his heart for the Master! Bro. Robert Parvin has already fastened his grip upon the Sparta circuit, and things stirring and startling may be expected from that quarter. If not before, at least when the Providence Camp Meeting is held. He is par excellence a camp meeting preacher, and many are the souls throughout Bienville and neighboring parishes who are expecting grand times at his camp meetings. There being some mourners at the altar Sunday night, the pastor announced a meeting, and that he would preach the next day and night, and that possibly the meeting might continue "like a slow ruin" for some time. Our hopes are large that Bro. Parvin will gather in scores of precious souls this year. From Sparta we passed beyond the Saline over into Winn parish to hold at Antioch, on Wednesday, the Quarterly Conference of the Saline circuit. We saw no other trees for miles and miles except towering, long-leaved pines. This lumber region extends on to Alexandria, and large sections of it are owned by Northern or Western men, they seeing in this blue vast wealth when the locomotive breaks up the solemn stillness of these woods. There is much talk of a railroad down through Homer and Sparta and on to Alexandria, piercing the center and traversing the length of this pine region, thus bringing into market all this rich timber to meet the increasing demand that the rapidly diminishing pine forests elsewhere are making for new sources of supply. There will be talk, and talk, and talk, doubtless, for some time to come, and yet we should never despair of needed railroads being finally built when we remember that at last the V., S. and P. R. R. was finished all the way to Shreveport. We had a small, but attentive congregation at Antioch, many of the people feeling about it, whether right or wrong, that they could not spare the time from their fields in order to hitch up and all hands go to church. Reaching Bro. John Brewton's about five in the afternoon, we were told by his good wife that all the neighborhood were out helping her husband roll logs. This information made us certain we would have a big supper, and so it proved. Just at dark in they came, old men and young, married and otherwise, lively, grave and middling, all the men and big boys—all, having pulled and hauled and toiled logs and piled them in heaps—all came in, and washing up, the parsons (Bro. Rushing and the writer), Bro. G. T. Robertson and all those cheerful workers sat down to a mighty spread of good things. We enjoyed it hugely and were glad we struck Brewton just at that time. We found in moving across the country to Grand Bayou that we could not get over the lake except by going to the Campi Ferry and being pulled in a flat over a mile across the waters. In thus avoiding as far as possible the swollen streams and impassable bridges, on getting over the lake and asking our whereabouts we learned that we were far out of our way, and had penetrated some distance into the Shreveport district. Meeting friend Hoghead we sought to be directed to the Coushatta and Ringgold road. However, soon realizing that the day was far spent and we must, therefore, pass the night in the neighborhood, we were delighted to hear that the Rev. Jesse Fulton lived only about three miles away. We lost no time in hunting him up and, after several times losing our way and experiencing great difficulty in crossing the deceiving and boggy Coulee, we arrived at Bro. Fulton's and were heartily welcomed. Our host did all for us that any preacher could for another preacher troubled suddenly upon him. His generous hospitality was grateful to us, and our tired body and worried spirit were refreshed and strengthened under his kindly roof. On the honorable roll of supernumeraries, Bro. Fulton is full of love for the church and does what he can for the Master. We are glad that we met up with him and his good wife and family. We baptized his youngest, Enoch Spencer, a fine boy of some five months. Early the next morning we started for Davis Springs Camp Ground and Springville, within two miles of Coushatta, and then on by Coushatta Academy to Bro. John L. Wimberly's, in the Grand Bayou neighborhood. The meeting held at this church was better attended on Saturday than at any point so far this year, and the Sunday congregation was a very large one. The six collections ordered by Conference were taken up, the full amount assessed the Grand Bayou Church being realized in cash and good subscriptions. Preaching at Ringgold on Sunday night; Monday, taking a daylight start and riding on horse-back thirty-five miles and on the cars eighteen miles, brought us to stay a day or two with the dearest four in all the world. We find Rev. H. J. Harris, of Mississippi, here helping Bro. White in a meeting. There is every indication of a gracious revival of religion in Ruston.

Letter from California.

MR. EDITOR: Though our rainfall has been much heavier than usual, California has otherwise had her own winter, which in the East would not be called winter at all. Two evenings since, however, it looked as though we would have to put up with an Eastern spring. It snowed just a little, and this morning we had rather a heavy frost—our equinoctial storm, doubtless. Perhaps fruit has been injured in some places, but not to a great extent. If the seasons are favorable from now on, we will gather the largest crops of both fruit and grain that the State has ever produced—unless the laborers strike.

Having but little else to do just now, the Chinese question is absorbing our attention. I fear the results. All are agreed that it is not desirable to have them among us, but there is difference of opinion as to the best method to get rid of them. Violence has been resorted to in some places, though this, of course, is not countenanced by good people. A large Anti-Coolie Convention was held in Sacramento last week, composed of representatives from all sections of the State, and from all classes of people—ex-Congressmen and ex-colonists, perhaps, wealthy planters and common laborers, Americans and foreigners (foreigners largely in the majority). All agreed that the Chinese must go, and that speedily. Their plan is to boycott both the Chinese and those who employ them. There is a large minority, much larger than is generally supposed, since they are not demonstrative, who regard this course as unjust and unwise, and will, therefore, be boycotted rather than become boycotters. My opinion is that the boycotters will not be as successful as they think; the rougher element will become impatient, and—well, I should not be surprised if Uncle Sam has to be called in. My worst fears are for China, and my daily prayer is that her millions of inhabitants may not be shut off from the gospel.

Two or three of my brethren in this Conference have had great revivals in their charges recently, while a number of others are cheerful and report progress. Some are waiting for Sam Jones, and all want him. We are doing as well as we could reasonably hope to do on the Winter charge. The people in the vicinity of Winters are a church-going people, but there are several churches for them to attend. Their comparative strength is as follows: Campbellite, 89; Cumberland Presbyterian, 80; Baptist, 75; Methodist (South), 30; Episcopal, 13. The town has about 700 inhabitants. Our congregations are larger than for some time past, and the attendance at Sunday-school has doubled. We do not hope for great things, for the material is not at hand. The word "South" has been very much in our way here. All the churches here are of Southern origin, and as a rule, Western and Northern people go into the other churches in preference to ours, even those of Methodist proclivities. I learn that several persons, not a great while ago, joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, who had been waiting to see if we would change our name, and thus remove their objection to us.

I have just read Rev. John Matthews' letter in the last Advocate. Whether you believe it or not, his head is level on this subject. It should be borne in mind that Dr. Matthews' ministry in the West has been a success, and that he writes from a city where Southern Methodism now flourishes. The question of a change of name we may consider settled. Our Northern brethren have heretofore made overtures looking towards a union of the two Methodisms. We have charged them with a desire to absorb us, with wanting us to come to them, they being unwilling to meet us. Suppose we put them to the test. Let the General Conference in Richmond express a willingness to meet them. If they decline the proposition that it has made, it will redound to our interest especially in the West. It will draw to us the conservative element. If it is accepted, Methodism will not leave much of California for other churches. Now, members unite with other churches rather than with either branch of Methodism, because they are unwilling to unite with what they consider a sectional and political church. We may gain much, at small cost, by acting promptly.

I am highly pleased that Mississippi, my native State, has so good a liquor law. While there, I contributed according to my ability to the good cause, and I shall ever be thankful that it was my privilege to do so. The cause is gliding here, but you are a great distance in advance of us. One night, without considering the question, think differently, but the ejection of the Chinese will defer prohibition. How so? Their places will be filled by whisky and beer-drinking foreigners, who are, or will become, voters. Can Mississippi spare us a few hundred temperance negroes? Many of the Chinese haters are negro lovers, and would receive them with open arms, lodge them in their best rooms, and give them John's (the apostle) seat at the table. Enough for this time. Your brother,

W. P. ANDREWS.

Such persons beg their daily happiness from door to door, as beggars their daily bread, and, like them, sometimes meet with a rebuff. This is an old-rooted evil, but it is not incurable; there is nothing a firm and elevated mind can not accomplish. The discourse of the wise and the study of good books are the best remedies I know of; but to these we must join the consent of the soul, without which the best advice and the best counsel will be useless.—Petrarch.

—If I, a sinner, risen man, do the work of the dead, if I die still, I shall not escape the effects of my evil-doing; but my security is, that God has promised that sin shall not have dominion over me, and he will make good his word, if not by such constant on my part, then by sorrowful constraint. He will chasten me and bring me back. When I put myself under the dominion of sin, then and I put under the dominion of chastisement. This is God's method when his children depart from him: He will visit their iniquity with a rod, and their sin with scourges. God has said: "I will not have dominion over me." He will rescue me from the rending of the heart's fibers. The separation must be accomplished. Happy for us when we voluntarily—nay, gladly—acquiesce in it.

What are the Grounds of Difference between Infant and Adult Salvation?

The highly suggestive article by Rev. J. A. Parker in the Advocate, of January 14, on "Redemption and Atonement," brings forward the above question. The careful effort displayed by the writer in laying open his question, the various authorities which he cites and compares, the critical distinction which he suggests as existing between redemption and atonement—all these indicate the difficulties that environ the subject, and the necessity for its solution.

He inquires why the difference between atonement and redemption; intimates there is a necessity for a distinction, and urges that original sin and actual sin are differently related to the atonement, or else, "How can the infant be saved without faith?" The course of reasoning he presents, taken in connection with this last interrogatory, makes evident the fact that the "dilemma" to which he alludes, consists in finding grounds, scriptural and theological, for the unconditional salvation of one part of the human family and a conditional one for the other part.

Now, here, if I am allowed to interpose, I must say I find that which is common to many who write on this crucial question, a misconception as I conceive on two points of no small importance relative to that which distinguishes infant from adult salvation. The first is the hypothesis that the distinction is to be found in the mode of receiving salvation. Surely there is but one way in the very nature of things in which salvation can come to man, and that is as the word declares it. "This is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." It is the gracious gift which has come upon all men unto justification of life. To suppose that a man takes part in giving spiritual life to himself is no less absurd than the supposition that he has a part in his obtaining natural life. He receives the one as he receives the other, both being the gracious benefits that come through the atoning blood of the Cross.

For by and through the atonement not only is the curse of the law removed but virtue has gone out therefrom giving spiritual life whenever it gives natural life. And to meet the exigencies of human existence the two must be and are co-terminous. Then the adult receives his salvation in infancy; and it is the same that he has in his adult age, unless he has lost his primitive share and interest in the kingdom of Christ and obtained another; a position that I hardly think is tenable. The work of human life, then, is not to get saved, nor to get religion, as we so often hear the expression, but to keep saved and to grow in religion or religious life. Moral probation and moral responsibility presupposes the possession of a gift or trust that has been imparted to the subject, and man's work is not to originate, or even to help to originate, but to retain, to develop, and to improve, that which is committed to his charge.

Another point in regard to which there seems to be a misapprehension is in respect to the part and place assigned to faith in this great transaction. There can be no place for faith antecedent to salvation, other with the adult, or the infant; for faith is not the mode or condition of getting salvation, but the mode or condition of keeping and developing it. And I insist on this distinction, if I may say so, that if a man or woman else will set the matter aright. Faith is a state or act of a living soul, a soul alive to God, and can not precede such life unless a thing can act before it lives. But with life, action must commence or death ensue; so faith accompanies life and is the simple, yet, essential condition of its preservation. As by breathing and eating the body receives and appropriates the material world so by faith the soul receives and appropriates the immaterial, the spiritual kingdom of Christ. I know it is common to say that infants can not believe, are not moral agents, are unconscious, etc., because they have not intelligence. But let it be remembered that faith and moral agency are not based on intelligence, but have the same basis with holiness, a capacity to receive or reject Christ, and to deny them this capacity is to deny them holiness, hence to deny them salvation. Temperance and Prohibition.

I have read with delight the account given in your last issue, by Bro. W. C. Black, of the wonderful work done by Dr. Reynolds and Mrs. Wells at Meridian. We enjoyed a visitation from both these justly renowned advocates of the cause of "God and country and native land," here at Millville. Glorious results have followed. This community heartily endorses all that Bro. Black has written concerning these almost infallible lecturers. Dr. Reynolds lectured two evenings, secured many more signatures to the pledge of total abstinence and augmented greatly our already large and enthusiastic prohibition club, and organized a Women's Christian Temperance Union of 12 members. About two or three weeks after him came Mrs. Wells. She lectured one evening and the next day organized a Band of Hope of 82 members and the result of her visit was to increase the Women's Christian Temperance Union to 35 members, and some 10 or 12 honorary members.

Millville is a prohibition town, and if we only had jurisdiction as far as Meridian and New Orleans, we could keep whiskey out of the place. But the saloons at these places are constantly shipping the accursed stuff to this place. Hattiesburg and other points along the line of the New Orleans and Northeastern Railroad. They send their agents here and take orders for jugs of whiskey that are sent by express; the money is paid for it here. I am told that when "pay day" comes around, these agents of the saloons are on hand, at the saw mills, turpentine distilleries, and at points along the line where railroad employees are congregated, to gather up their share of the earnings of the laborers, whose families are barely fed and clothed.

But thank God the moral sense of the people are becoming more and more enlightened and alive to the importance of throttling this demon. We know that God is for us and he is stronger than all that can be against us. Our cause is just, and will prevail. From notices I had seen of the "local option law," I was apprehensive that concessions were made that would greatly retard prohibition; but on reading the full text of the law, I am persuaded that it is decidedly in the interest of prohibition, and it is only needed for our friends to stand firm and remember that the "price of liberty is eternal vigilance."

The Mystery of Calvinism.

BY REV. W. SPILLMAN.

In an article published in the Christian Observer, of March 3, by Rev. J. A. Waddie, D. D., on "Popular Error," he says:

One rarely opens religious papers of a certain class, under Arminian, Unitarian, or Universalist control, without encountering a fling or a sneer of some sort at Calvinism, as the consummation of orthodox iniquity. This is done, for the most part, in sheer ignorance.

In this he classes "Arminian," by which he means Methodist religious papers, with those of the Unitarian and Universalists, and charges their opposition to Calvinism, in "most part, in sheer ignorance." If such be the case with our church papers, we had better send the editors and correspondents to a Calvinistic theological school, to study Calvinistic doctrines, provided a teacher can be found who can reconcile Calvinism with the revealed character of God, and the general teaching of the Holy Scriptures. This no one has yet been able to do. It is a doctrine as inexplicable as Ezekiel's vision as recorded in Ezekiel 1. There is a tradition that the Rabbin held a consultation whether they should admit Ezekiel into the sacred canon, and it was likely to be carried in the negative when Rabbi Ananias rose up and said he would undertake to remove every difficulty of that vision. His proposition was received, and that he might have sufficient amount of light while engaged in his study, they grant him three hundred barrels of oil to light his lamp. If the Rabbi succeeded, there is no record of the fact. So Ezekiel's vision still remains among the unsolved mysteries, so also, according to Dr. Waddie, after stating what Calvinists believe, says: "What it does not understand it cordially believes."

Your correspondent was acquainted with a case that occurred in Tennessee many years ago. A Calvinistic preacher, on a certain Sabbath, preached one of his strongest Calvinistic sermons. One of his hearers was a tailor by trade. A few days afterwards the preacher, who was a D. D., called on the tailor to get some work done. The tailor's mind was troubled in trying to reconcile the Calvinistic doctrine with the revealed character of God, and his free offer of salvation to all men. Anxious to have his mind relieved he asked the Doctor to explain some of these mysteries. The Doctor replied: "You served a time of apprenticeship to learn the art of cutting and fitting coats. You might explain the whole process to me, and yet, I would not understand how to cut and fit a coat." So the tailor could not understand how to cut and fit a coat, but he could not make Calvinism fit the Holy Scriptures.

In the same number of the Christian Observer there is another article having for its caption "Paul a Presbyterian," signed "Addison." The author after stating that other denominations had laid claim to Paul, he adds:

While others are claiming him, let me also put in a claim. I regard him as a noble old Presbyterian missionary. Of course, the name was not borne by him, but he was that in effect; in his Calvinistic faith; in his maintenance of the purity of the ministry; in his teaching baptism as of secondary importance, and in his performing of household benedictions.

Now if this claim be just, what follows? Simply this, that the system of faith, and the form of church government taught in the Bible, is in all essentials Calvinistic Presbyterianism.

The author does not bring forward a single chapter or verse from the writings of St. Paul to prop up his claim to Paul as a Presbyterian, or Calvinist, but tries to prove it by history. He says, "Now let the history of the Reformation testify of this matter." When three hundred and fifty years ago, God, the Spirit, breathed in quickening power upon a corrupt church, and raised up men in it to testify to the gospel; when God used as instruments of power, Luther, Zwingle, Calvin, and Knox; when he disesteemed his truth by the instrument of Erasmus, and the printing press of Gutenberg, when the devil arrayed the power of the church against religious liberty, so that believers, who came to the Bible, came not simply with the spirit of learners, but with the earnest zeal of martyrs, to learn God's truth; that they might possess and hold to it whether by life or by death; that the most impressive fact that under such circumstances the Bible made all the evangelical world Presbyterian.

Such, he says, is the historical fact. The Bible translated into the common tongue, received by the people, made the whole world Presbyterian.

The Bible readers were a long time in finding out that St. Paul was a Presbyterian, and that he taught the doctrine of Calvinism. It is robbing Calvin of his theological honors to refer its origin to St. Paul, or any other of the inspired writers. Calvinism now constitutes but a small portion of the "evangelical world."

"Addison" winds up his article as follows: Well, if this fact shows that the Bible does teach Presbyterian polity and Calvinistic doctrine, I think I may claim Paul as a Presbyterian. He was the chief expounder and formulator of gospel doctrine. He wrote and explained the same gospel with Peter, John and James. What he wrote harmonizes with and explains what they wrote.

Let me claim then that Paul was a grand Presbyterian missionary, and that we, successors of him in the elder ship, are still teaching the gospel that he taught.

As the editors of the "Arminian" (Methodist) religious papers, their correspondents and numerous readers are not all ignoramuses, it would be well for them to interview Paul, Peter, John and James, and find out if they designedly or indirectly taught or even intimated that they believed such a doctrine as is set forth in chapter III of the Presbyterian Confession of Faith, and especially Part III, and IV, of that chapter, viz: "By the decrees of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death. These angels and men, thus predestinated and foreordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed; and their number is so certain and definite that it can not be either increased or diminished."

Again in chapter x, Section III, we have these words: "Elect infants, dying in infancy are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who worketh when, where, and how he pleaseth; so also are all other elect persons, who are incapable of being outwardly called by the ministry of the word." Well, Paul, what do you say to these extracts? Did you design in Romans viii, 18-30, to teach that an elect and an unchangeable number of the human family were unconditionally elected to eternal life, and that they were the only ones called justified and glorified? Or was it not your design to teach that God foreknew the Gentiles, and predestinated that they too, as well as the Jews, should be called justified and glorified?

"Thou shalt also consider in thine heart that as a man chasteneth his son so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee." Ah! that "consider in thine heart" is that the work which reveals an inward call to God. How do I outline the Father's rod of chastisement when he stroke after stroke cuts to the quick at the very spot where I am most sensitive? Am I sweetened or soured by the chastening? Does it discover in me a filial spirit or rebellious spirit? Do I cry, "God my Father," or only "God Almighty?" How shall I attain the Master's example in my Getsemane, and say while in agony, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt." And he prayed the third time, saying the same words. Ah, that burden is a light one which forces from our heart but one prayer. When the soul is overwhelmed by its sorrows, then does it cry out with intense intercession, and only "praying the third time, saying the same words" may lift the burden, or enable one to say, "Nevertheless, Father, not as I will, but as thou wilt."—Rev. J. L. Danner.

Methodist Tramps, Methodist Loafers, Methodist Jelly-Fish, etc.

If it is not "agin" the religious scriptures and ecclesiastical pride of the editor of this Advocate to make a sharp thrust at some few of his readers, I will give that learned, but incredulous doctor of divinity over there a chance to throw up his hands in holy horror that any living body, especially a Methodist preacher, even on blue Monday, should ever say, conceive or dream that any of the religious descendants of the Wesleys should be dishonored at any time by the disgraceful epithets at the head of this paper; and yet, my dear old saddle-bags, you may squint your cock-eye, wring your fingers and grunt out your discontent according to your pleasure; it is true nevertheless, we have just such manikins amongst us. You may disjoin and take them to pieces if you want to, provided you give us warning in time to absent ourselves from the dissecting room and its odor—a favor I know you will cheerfully grant.

I didn't know the triplet. They were three distinct persons, representing three distinct classes, and yet were usually found together, and so I asked the pastor concerning them. He told me that the three persons whom I saw at church, as could be seen by the skin-resemblance, were related to each other, though how close or how far off my informer testified not; that they lived at the terminus of Church Row, where three streets met, in the suburbs of Methodism, a city of no mean proportions in the religious world, although cried down and often belittled by ecclesiastical marauders from big, little, high, low, broad, long and crooked churches of adjacent parishes; but who, notwithstanding the said ecclesiastical marauders, were often found banging round the skirts of our beloved Methodism, and with an air of innocence that would have shamed the angels. A few of them I saw on the day above referred, and I could not but think, I came near saying, that they would do to be watched.

By the way, these predatory folks who go abroad in their religious frocks, carrying their religious daggers along with them, but concealed; these churchy troopers disguised in the linen of the saints; these crafty reiters, who for a pretence make long prayers, and would run away with the Queen of Sheba if they could add to their numbers; these crowned jewels of other sects who are valued in proportion to the amount of insult they can plunder from other people—I say, did you ever get a good square look at these people, from top to bottom, and put your finger on them to find out just what they were and who they were? If not, take my word for it when I tell you that they are very small potatoes, if, indeed, they are potatoes at all. The most that you can see of them is a bow and a grin, and they are most polite when they are in search of your pigs. In fact, many of them have gone into the hog business for life, and they back it up by a elipsoidal sort of consistency that would please either the devil or a dancing master. On the outside there is tallor's work, I grant you—plenty of religious gew-gaw work, and sectarian fixings that go to create attention; but back of it all, nothing, nothing that is good; no large, broad, upright Christian spirit, nothing to measure, probe or weigh. The avowed business is a light one, indeed, with these fellows, and especially the feeble-minded, and their name is legion.

As a celebrated writer said of Dean Swift, so say I of these prowlies upon Protestant poultry. They have "as fierce a beak and talon as ever struck, as strong a wing as over beat," and woe be to the chickens and superannuated old hens exposed to their devouring whop. Have you never heard it? What! Why, the whish, the whish of a wing in the air, then a decreasing whir, accompanied by strangular sobe and moans diminishing inversely to the square of the distance, followed by ejaculatory denunciations of fowl-yard jargon, and the incoherent declamation of heathish indignation. But it was too late; the hawk in the underbrush yonder, or on the mountain side, there held his prey with a firm grasp, and eyed you with much equanimity of spirit, thanking God for same game so near at hand. In fact, such people are by nature, or by education, perhaps by both, fierce, warlike, predatory, eager for fight, fumes, plunder and dominion. They are death on pigs and chickens especially, and don't object to mutton occasionally. Oh! I would to God they stole only these. I would gladly give them carte blanche both to my chicken-house, sty and pasturo, together with the promise of a notte prius, on part of the State in case they should be indicted.

To be plain with you, gentle reader, I want to say that I am faint, weary and sick ad nauseam of the proselytizing going on in our midst, and of the proselytors who hang about the Methodist Church especially, to pick off the berries near the extremities, and to sharpen the unprotected here and there and bag them for game. I lost four members of my church at this place last year, and they were gone before I knew it. I never suspected anything until the charmers had the birds, and had them plucked too—a business they well understood. They pursued a variety of measures, as I afterwards found out, and for the sake of others, to keep them on the alert.

"I tell the signs by which you may know the true proselytizer."—

Well, first the book business had a good deal to do with it. There was Graves' New Iron Wheel, Neal on Baptism, and that oily book on Baptist Doctrines, lately published by them, so well calculated to move the shaky and turn the unsettled of other denominations, together with a few smaller works with the same particular trend and particular aim in view. These were secretly handed about, and put into the hands of certain weak-kneed Methodists, accompanied by various little private conversations and inter-views to oil the descent from ours to their church, and make the way easy. Not long since, on a pastoral visit, I met one of those devoted church ladies coming out of a Methodist poetry yard, and, just as I expected, a poor little chick—a Methodist chick—was sadly troubled, muddled and feathered. One of these poisonous, sectarian tracks together with the pleasant de-a-tate, oft repeated, had done the work. My little man is in the Baptist Sunday-school to day. Then there is a little dark-eyed girl, whose mother is an unsuspecting Methodist, and whose father is nothing, that shared a similar fate. There was a sewing circle for little folks among my friends of winter proclivities, and, as usual, Mrs. Plous Selinda had been doing what she ought not, and standing where she ought not. Preselyte? Not she; she only wanted to be sociable and clever. You scamp! Daro you impute that she wanted to work as that? Hn-h-h!

"Conquer and conquer once her air,
Both shuddered, though both were neglected;
Careless she is with a soul care,
Affecting to seem unaffected."

My little girl is gone, of course, and this last tells the tale with reference to Tom Stills. I saw him and Salina, the daughter of Mrs. Plous Selinda, the pair sitting upon the pons asinorum looking down into the muddy stream below them. It is needless for me to continue the story further. You can see the end clearly from the beginning. Tom's and I mean, for the last time I saw Bro. Stills he went in and under, clear under, too—backwards, it is true, but what's the difference, as you get 'em under? Is not this to be buried with Christ in the slily grave?

Then Parson Sly puts in an appearance; a man of graceful manners, glib tongue, and talking ways. He's an old hand at the business. His wounds are all flesh wounds, with plenty of oil to follow. Adopting the published sentiment of a certain Baptist weekly with reference to the proselytizing going on in the foreign fields, and notably in Mexico, he thinks that he has a Divine right to evangelize other denominations, and bring the erring prodigals back into the church; hence his pliable method during the protracted meeting. Every weak-kneed Methodist within reach is interviewed by himself or somebody else well up to such matters, and the children of Methodist parents are made a specialty of.

"They seem to think that they must preach and sing,
And 'compass area and land to make a proselyte';
They say that they're commissioned to teach the people how
The saints of old were baptized, and how to do it note.
They tell us 'twas by dipping, and make the bold assertion,
There's no gospel baptism where there's no immersion."

But mark, during the meeting this is all done privately. The distinctive features of the Baptist Church, their polity and doctrines are scarcely hinted at. The keen-eyed parson yonder behind the pulpit board is too sly for that. He has too much sense to shoot off his high sermons on close communion, man's natural and moral inability, water baptism, final perseverance and the election of grace. Don't you imagine for a moment that he will get off on this foot. Not he; he's too old in the business. If he did, he wouldn't reach that shaky Methodist yonder with a "forty-foot pole," and he knows it. His trick at first is to assume a liberal air, and he does so, too, till he hoodwinks some of these tender-footed Methodists and hobbles them. But after he's got the proselytizing halter about their necks, gentlemen, look out, something's "goin' to bust." Caulster, grape and corlac rock are coming. If you don't want to get hit and hurt, stay away. This is the season of indeclinability (it always comes at or toward the close of the meeting.) It is the hardening process against other Christians. It! But you ask, "What has all this to do with Methodist tramps, loafers and jelly-fish?" Oh! nothing directly, you see. I've given you the et cetera of my paper first. Another day, on some other blue Monday, I'll tell you what I have to say about these folks. Till then ponder the above and think.

Yours,

HECKY'S BROTHER.

CASEVILLE, MISS.

Mr. Editor: While I have been so afflicted by rheumatism for three weeks that I have not been able to do anything in my new home and field of labor, I want to tell you and all who know it. I never suspected anything until the charmers had the birds, and had them plucked too—a business they well understood. They pursued a variety of measures, as I afterwards found out, and for the sake of others, to keep them on the alert.

found a comfortable preacher's home. But some kind and generous souls had gone in before us, and had provided meal, meal, rice, flour, sugar, coffee, etc., with wood hauled to gate of house, and cut and piled in kitchen ready for use, and other good things have been dropping in ever since; and the dear friends are dropping in to see us and how we are doing, and what we want or need. We want to rise and stand on a small corner of your Advocate, and lift our hat with grateful acknowledgment to those good people for their kindnesses, and to thank God that we are called to serve such a charge.

Blessed, Mr. Editor, I thank God for a fresh, live, earnest presiding elder, with two strong points of administrative ability upon the surface—the purpose to take good care of the preachers, and to take good care of the churches in his district. He has the converse, too, of his convictions, and these purposes will be executed with warm, loving enthusiasm. We were not permitted to be at our first quarterly meeting; but Bro. Weems came up to see us in our sick-room, and we were much refreshed and encouraged by his presence, conversation and earnest prayers. We are looking and intend to work for large success in saving souls and building up the church of God. Your brother,

WM. B. HINES.

PRIAR'S POINT, MISS.

Mr. Editor: At the last session of our Conference, Bishop Hargrove appointed me to Priar's Point, Rosedale and Australia—all on the great Mississippi river. It is an appointment of "insignificant distances," it being more than one hundred miles between the extreme appointments. You can readily see that it takes a great deal of enthusiasm and rapid motion for one small preacher to spread himself over so much territory.

Mr. J. D. Adams, president of the Memphis and Arkansas City Line, gives me free passage on the "Kate Adams"—one of the finest boats on the river. The good people of the charge received us heartily, have devised liberal things for our support, and keep a "little storm" traveling in the direction of the parsonage all of the time. Money is being raised for repairing and furnishing the parsonage. The church at Australia is undergoing a thorough refitting, and is nearly completed. I am arranging for our District Conference, which is to convene at Rosedale. We would be delighted to have you with us.

ARCADIA, LA.

Mr. Editor: We had a very interesting service with our Arcadia congregation last Sunday, March 21. Our new church was about full. After the sermon at eleven o'clock A. M., we baptized nine adults and two infants, and after the night sermon by Bro. Conerly, from Texas, we received a class of fifteen into the church according to the form of Discipline—some of these having joined during our meeting, and two joined Sunday, making five that have joined since the protracted services closed. We have a most interesting prayer meeting on Thursday nights; large congregations, very attentive and serious. Our class leader, Bro. R. A. Smith, has class meetings twice a month. He reports a good attendance, and interesting.

Our Sunday-school here is a very interesting one. Old and young take part in it, and it is still growing in numbers and widening in its influence for good. We have organized three other Sunday-schools on the circuit, with good prospects of success and usefulness. Our church at this place is not complete; but we expect to have it finished and ready for our District Conference, which meets here this summer. We confidently expect to get up a new church at Simabore this year, and thereby unite two neighboring hoods—one on each side of the railroad. Our present preaching-place there is two miles south of the depot. I have sent to the Mission Board $40, nearly one-half of our assessment, and have Dr. Kelley's receipt for same.

Yours fraternally,
JNO. A. MILLER, P. C.

OAK RIDGE, LA.

Mr. Editor: Since our first quarterly meeting, second Saturday and Sunday in February, God has taken three of our most substantial members to himself. Bro. Frank Doss, of Gum Swamp, one of our official members and one of our best men, was the first of the three to pass away. He was honest and upright, and a liberal supporter of the church. His end was peace. Said a brother of a different denomination who witnessed his last moments, "It was a treat to see him die." Sister Caroline H. McDuffie, wife of G. W. McDuffie, passed away in a few days after Bro. Doss. She had suffered severely for more than four months, and was glad to depart and be with Christ. She loved the prayer and class meetings, and all the precious means of grace. She especially enjoyed the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. She appreciated the visits of her pastor, and always wished him to read the word and offer prayer to the Father in Heaven. From the first of her sickness she seemed to think she would hardly recover, but was perfectly willing to suffer the will of God. At one time she appeared very happy, and exhorted her husband and children to faithfulness in God's service. She said

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1886.

Bishop Wilson is at work again. He spent a Sabbath in Louisville, Ky., and preached twice, in the morning at Walnut street and at Broadway in the evening. We are glad to note his recovered strength, but fear his zeal may overtax his vital forces. It is to be hoped that our great preacher may long bless the church with his gospel eloquence and ecclesiastical leadership.

Dr. Hinton, the editor of our Quarterly Review, is a clear interpreter and expounder of the constitution of the church. In the April number of the Quarterly, he thus incidentally refers to the current controversy: "In view of historic facts in the administration of Ashbury, the homage of the restrictive rule has but one meaning. Our Bishops were to superintend the affairs of the church at large, and to do this effectively they were to be liberant. Hence any regulation that by either direct or indirect action should change this order would be a violation of the constitution. And the legislation of the church has for the most part been in accord with the manifest import of this article."

In an interesting letter to the Holston Methodist, about the Central Mexican Mission Conference, Rev. D. W. Carter makes this kindly reference to Bishop Keener:

Whoever writes the biography of Bishop Keener must give a large chapter to his Mexican mission work. He founded, has fostered, prayed for, and watched over this mission from its earliest and smallest beginning with one preacher and no congregation, till the day he organized it into an Annual Conference of forty-seven preachers and 2000 members.

Chaplain Milburn offered a prayer in the lower House of Congress last week that created a genuine sensation. It commanded general and close attention—something unusual for a congressional prayer. A motion was made and adopted ordering it printed in the Record. Though we doubt the taste of making stump speeches in the name of spiritual devotion, what Dr. Milburn prayerfully declaimed against will awaken hearty response. This is the prayer:

We beseech thee, Almighty God, help the people of this country to learn that money gained otherwise than as thou commandest, by the sweat of the face, as the fair and honest wages of honorable, manly work of brain or hand, is gained by theft, no matter how we name the stealing; that money is never converted into wealth unless it ceases to be the pander of our lusts and lifts us above the level of the animal—lifting us to the graces of life; elevating our hearts to manly aspirations; making us kindly with our kind, patient to God's laws and reverent to ourselves. Rid the land, we beseech thee, of all gamblers, whether they gamble with dice or cards, or chips, or with wheat or stocks, or corn, or cotton. Deliver us from the influence and power of robbers, who, enticing their victims to Boards of Trade and Stock Exchanges and bucket-shops, name their practices of plunder "shearing the lambs." Enlighten our intelligence with thy truth; sweeten and deepen our humanity with thy love; quicken our piety with thy spirit, and may Jesus Christ become more and more the master and ruler of our lives and characters and thoughts, we pray through his hallowed name, amen.

The Methodist Times, of London, puts the question correctly as to the validity of infant baptism in a short reply to the Christian Commonwealth which criticised rather vituperatively the report of the committee of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference on the relation of baptized children to the church. The Times says:

Our contemporary solemnly calls upon us to prove the validity of infant baptism. We shall be delighted to do so as soon as the necessity arises. Our contemporary does not seem to realize that the burden of proof lies upon him, not upon us. Children were admitted into the Jewish Church, they have always been admitted into the Christian Church, they are now admitted by an overwhelming majority of existing churches. It is for the Christian Commonwealth to prove that our children are less privileged than the children of Jews, and that the majority of Christian Churches in all ages have been guilty of a great practical error. Christ came not to destroy but to fulfill, and if it was his intention to make so momentous, unprecedented, and revolutionary a change, as to exclude children from the church, he must have said so in plain terms. With our excellent contemporary obliging us with the passage in which our Lord announces that startling novelty?

Southern Methodism and the Negro.

The negro has been, and will be for years, an important, if not conspicuous, element in American society. He is more universally and indubitably discussed than any other creature or thing on this continent. Statesmen, politicians, publicists, philanthropists, theologians and ecclesiastics, all study him from their several standpoints and as he stands related to their special departments of thought. These investigations and conclusions are more or less colored by political, ecclesiastical or social attitude and attitude. And it is quite probable that these discolored and prejudiced views obtain quite as much in the South as in the North. If it were not so, we would be an anomalous exception to the philosophy of history. By a strange law of the human mind we soon become hostile to those things, however prized, which have been wrested from us by violence. And this feeling is aggravated by the aggressive conduct of the oppressor. That such a passion, kindling into prejudice, has been somewhat current in the South goes without saying. Its manifestations have been witnessed mostly in partisan politics, but occasionally in ecclesiastical discussions. That such a result should follow the violent upheaval of our social order and the humiliating experiences of the reconstruction period was inevitable. Its only corrective has been the sublime faith of our Christian people in the providence of God and the unvarying utterances of the church in her highest assemblies.

But we are specially interested in the present and future attitude of Southern Methodism to this question. We have talked much of the ante-bellum past, and its history of faith and zeal in behalf of the colored people is worthy of all praise. In the Bishop's Address to the General Conference of 1853, occurs this passage:

"The missions to the slaves of the Southern plantations constitute the most interesting and important field for the missionary operations of the Church, South. * * * We regard these missions as the crowning glory of the church."

The same General Conference adopted and issued a Pastoral Address, in which may be found this positive declaration:

"The salvation of this colored race in our midst, as far as human instrumentality can secure, is the primary duty of the Southern Church."

And never were labors more blessed of God. Over those missions there hung, by day and night, a cloud of glory. Multitudes became intelligent Christians. So wonderful was this growth, that in 1860, thirty years after the inauguration of African missions, the colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had reached two hundred and seven thousand, seven hundred and sixty-six.

With the coming and close of the fearful and fateful war between the States, complications and changed relations ensued that alienated most of these members from us. Our wise men were at a loss to know what was best to do. Whether the action taken, which resulted in setting up those who remained with us in an independent ecclesiastical organization, was the largest wisdom is very questionable. But it was done in good faith and for the glory of God. It was not for the purpose of securing honorable relief from responsibility, but to better advance their religious interests. In 1874 the Southern Bishops uttered these earnest words in their Address to the General Conference: "Our interest in this cause has not ceased—our responsibility has not ended." But as a matter of fact the setting-up was practically a setting-off, of the negro. It did have the effect of relieving the masses of our preachers and people from any sense of pressing responsibility in the matter. There was little systematic or persistent labor for them or among them. However we may explain or justify it—and it is explainable, if not justifiable—the fact remains.

In the Address of our Bishops to the last General Conference, this fact was recognized and a suggestion made. They said: "The negro population of the South and Southwest, upon which our church in time past bestowed much labor, but which for several years have been turned away from us, is again becoming accessible to our influence. Opportunities to preach to their congregations should be diligently improved." That exhortation is an emphatic reaffirmation of the declarations of the church through all the years. In 1874 the Bishops proclaimed our continued responsibility for the negro, and followed it with an exhortation in 1882. By that announcement we should courageously stand, and give diligent, prayerful heed to the timely exhortation. To enforce the counsel of our chief pastors we offer some additional observations.

1. We must guard against a complacent reliance upon the ante-bellum past. In that sense we should forbid "those things which are behind." Glorifying in the achievements of our fathers will not atone for present indifference or neglect. While we point with pride to the self-denying missionary toils of Bishops Capers and Andrews and other brave spirits, not a few, for the Christian culture of the negro, we ought to demonstrate our worthiness of such a heritage and heritage. Their memories should be a perpetual inspiration to like toils and sacrifices, and their successes our promise and pledge of equal, if not greater conquests for Christ. "Our responsibility has not ended."

2. The exhortation of the Bishops is our duty. We must diligently improve every opportunity to preach to their congregations. There is scarcely a colored congregation in the Southwest that would not regard it a favor and honor for us to preach to them. They are now readily accessible to our ministry. If we approach them in the spirit of the Master, with the clearing away of war clouds, passion and prejudices, we again see face to face, and in them is being restored the old confidence and appreciation of other years. They are glad to receive and profit by our pulpits. This writer has preached to the colored congregations in every place he ever resided, and records with satisfaction their grateful response to his labors. At the close of a year's pastorate in Yazoo City, Miss., we were earnestly invited to preach the last Sunday afternoon in the colored church. The invitation was gladly accepted, as often before, and the occasion greatly enjoyed. By previous arrangement, but entirely unknown to us, the congregation came forward and presented a thank-offering of forty dollars for services rendered them from time to time during the year. Not in all our history have we received a testimonial more highly appreciated than that from those humble, poor, warm-hearted negroes. And yet the first entrance to that pulpit was at our own solicitation, and consent was reluctantly given. But times have changed and this call to service is more imperative. These people are at our doors, and "our responsibility has not ended."

3. We should loyally sustain those who devote themselves specially to this work. The spirit that constrained Bishop Capers to give "a best years to mission work among the colored people is as worthy of honor to-day as then. Over his peaceful grave there stands a marble shaft on which is this inscription:

The Founder
To the Slaves in SOUTH CAROLINA.

And in their address to the General Conference of 1858, his surviving colleagues said of him: "He requires no eulogy from us, nor will he ever need a monument to perpetuate his name while the missions to the slaves of Carolina shall continue to exist, or while they shall be remembered by succeeding generations." But while we canonize the heroic and encourage the less pure and faithful living. It is certainly a travesty of Christian charity to pronounce panegyrics upon the dead and philippics against the living, who have succeeded to the same work. There are able, scholarly men of our church, who are devoting themselves to educational work among the colored people. Is it true that in a single instance one of them has been called to suffer social discount in consequence? If so, there ought to be inquiry into the law of God, for in a land of open Bibles there is a real famine of hearing the word of the Lord.

The Revival at Oxford, Miss.

We are rejoiced to hear of the wonderful work in the University town of Mississippi. The accounts read like the scenes we witnessed in just such a meeting when a student at the University. The following notes from Rev. E. B. Ramsey, the pastor, and Rev. S. M. Thames, the presiding elder, sound like bulletins from the field of battle:

We are in a glorious revival, sixty or more conversions to date, and fully one hundred penitents. All Oxford is moved. Bro. Brown is with us doing faithful work. We expect one or two hundred conversions. Come up; no telling when we will close.

The meeting at Oxford grows in interest all the time. In many respects it is one of the most wonderful revivals of the age. About 40 conversions to date. The whole church revived and all denominations interested. More than one hundred penitents last night. Young Men's Christian Association at the University is doing well. It is delightful to see some of those professors in the inquiry meetings laboring to bring the students to Christ.

S. M. THAMES.

A Judicial Conference.

There seems to be necessity for some amendment of our ecclesiastical jurisprudence. The statutes deluging the methods and processes of trial in the case of a traveling preacher, make no provision for its appellate determination in the interim of General Conferences. If the accused appeals from an Annual Conference immediately succeeding a General Conference, he must wait three years or more for the final hearing of his case. In the meantime he remains suspended from all ministerial functions and rests under judicial and moral condemnation. Some intermediate appellate court ought to be established for the determination of all such cases. The growth of the church and the consequent probable increase of judicial investigations will soon necessitate such a tribunal.

All jurisprudence is a growth. In the earlier days of governments, civil and ecclesiastical, when constitutions are small and litigated causes are few and simple, only the crudest judicial machinery is demanded. But with increase of population, diversified industries, multiplied and conflicting interests and the numerous moral failings and criminality of the people, a more elaborate, complex system is necessary. During the first half-century of our Methodism, the preacher was the sole arbiter of all cases. He was judge, jury and counsel for defense and prosecution. In the process of years our present system was adopted to meet the changed demands and exigencies of a growing church. And now, it seems, we have reached the point when additional modification would be helpful.

This opinion we have held for several years, but our reflections thereon have been stimulated by a very readable and timely article in the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review, by the editor, on the "Restrictive Articles of Methodism."

The Fifth Restrictive Rule reads as follows: "They shall not do away the privileges of our ministers or preachers of trial by a committee, and of an appeal; neither shall they do away the privileges of our members of trial before the church, or by a committee, and of an appeal." In making some judicious observations on this very important rule, Dr. Hinton says:

If the General Conference should alter the law of trial as to preachers, so as to bring the case before an ecclesiastical court, organized for such a purpose by a Bishop or presiding elder, this would be in accord with the rights stated in the restrictive rule. This would attain several desirable objects. First, speedy trial and decision on an appeal or condemnation. This is vastly important both for the preacher and the church. And if the right of appeal should be to another court, to assemble soon, it would give a value to this privilege now nearly nullified by existing arrangements.

The General Conference, by the terms of our organic law, has the right to adjust our whole system of church trials and appeals in a way to make the processes coherent and congruous. How far our law is from harmony in its various sections must be apparent to every mind who has given attention to the matter.

What the editor of the Review advocates in the above, has been provided for by our brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They have established a Judicial Conference in the interim of the General Conference. This Judicial Conference is composed of seven elders from each of three Annual Conferences, conveniently near, which representatives are known as "Triers of Appeals." This court is called together by a Bishop, who presides and decides all questions of law. These seven "Triers of Appeals" are selected at each session of the Annual Conferences. The Judicial Conference "may affirm or reverse the finding and decision of an Annual Conference, or affirm in part and reverse in part; but it shall not reverse the same, nor remand the case for a new trial, on account of errors plainly not affecting the result."

Some such legislation would supply a defect in our judicial system. If formulated and presented by some clear-headed ecclesiastical lawyer, we doubt not the General Conference would give it respectful and favorable consideration.

An Evening at Crystal Springs.

In response to a telegraphic invitation from the temperance ladies of Crystal Springs we ran up to that goodly little city on Friday afternoon last and delivered an address in the evening. Bro. Holloman was at the depot with a cordial welcome and a summons to take the visiting brother to the parsonage. How naturally a preacher's feet turn into the path that leads to the parsonage! And what other roof-tree is more delightful to visit! The parsonage hearthstone is like the soldier's camp-fire—a place for the exchange of experiences and the relation of heroic incidents in the work of faith and labor of love. After an hour or two pleasantly spent in the happy family of the Crystal Springs pastor, talking over things new and old, we joined some friends at tea with Sister Mortimer, the zealous president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The newly painted and handsomely furnished Methodist Church was crowded to hear a lengthy talk on the burning question of the hour in Mississippi. There is intelligent and intense enthusiasm among our friends, and a resolute purpose to win a victory in the approaching election contest. We have little doubt of the result. Against such determination a bad cause can not stand. It is poor policy to entertain the thought of defeat. Already the whisky men are claiming the negroes as their easy prey, but their boasting will prove as extravagant and disappointing as at Atlanta. The issue has been joined in Copiah, and a vigorous contest is expected.

We had the pleasure of renewing old friendships and of learning good things of our church work. The new pastor is proving to be a worthy successor of the much-loved W. B. Lewis and already has found favor with his people. Everything is moving forward hopefully.

It is refreshing to meet cheerful people. We see so many who mourn over the poor country getting poorer and the languishing condition of Zion, that a radiant face and a hopeful faith is a veritable evangelist. There is a ministry inasmile. It makes one feel kindly toward himself and generously for his fellow-men. We need in the South to talk of brightening prospects, and refuse longer to dwell among the tombs.

Strengthen the Episcopacy.

BY REV. T. C. WIER.

Our episcopacy needs increase of strength. Not in mental or ministerial ability, for our college of Bishops is composed of strong men, able ministers of the gospel, and wise administrators of the Discipline and polity of the church. But we need to strengthen the episcopacy in numerical force—say one hundred per cent. Give us five additional Bishops at the next General Conference, and the following good results may be looked for:

1. The supply of episcopal service will come nearer meeting the demand. Great is the appreciation of our chief pastors by the church, and great the desire, on the part of the people generally to see and hear our Bishops and to feel the touch of their personal influence. This most laudable and loyal desire, should, as far as practicable be met. With a numerically weak episcopal force, the church falls far short of the demand for episcopal service. A college of ten active, vigorous Bishops would barely meet the demands of our Methodism, numbering a million of members and spread out over so wide a sweep of territory.

2. Increase sufficiently the numerical strength of the episcopacy, and the friction in our machinery will be reduced to its minimum. The Bishops, episcopoi, overseers, should supply personal supervision. It is theirs to apportion the fields, assign the laborers, inspect the work, regulate the machinery and adjust it at any point of friction. In order that these episcopal functions be wisely and well done, the Bishops should have personal acquaintance with the church in every part of its territory. They should know the work to be done, and the laborers who are to perform it. Hersh will be found a remedy for the troubles affecting our foreign missionary enterprises. All agree that episcopal supervision is needed. Some advocate, by way of remedy, the appointment of resident Bishops to our foreign fields. Others suggest, at least, an occasional episcopal visit to the foreign field. Of these two plans only the latter accords with the spirit and constitution of itinerant Methodism. The former antagonizes the polity of the church. Give us a sufficient number of Bishops; let the foreign mission come under the rule of the Annual Conference, and have the benefit of an annual visit from some one of our itinerant Bishops. This plan sets aside the very questionable expedient of a "resident Bishop," and is more in accord with the polity of Episcopal Methodism than the present cumbersome, and second or third-hand management.

3. The episcopal function would be less perfunctory and work more satisfactory and efficient. If we had a sufficient number of Bishops, five Bishops would need to be more than men to compass perfectly and with entire satisfaction the work of a million of members. With the minimum force we may economize time and money, but we are prodigal in expenditure of the vital energies of our Bishops. We work them hard and complain that more and better work is not done. The Bishop's rounds are in great haste. He has not time to see attentively everything that should be seen, nor to hear patiently everything that should be heard. Let him have more time for holding the Annual Conference. Four or five days is not sufficient for the average Conference. With the growth of the church, the elaboration of its plans and the many interests to pass under review, not less than a whole week should be given to the session of such a Conference. Let him have leisure also for visiting various parts of the territory during the interim of the Conference. He would thus come more directly into contact with the masses of the people and the better learn their peculiarities and their necessities. Give us a sufficient number of Bishops, and episcopal work will be more perfectly and satisfactorily done.

4. Connecational unity will be maintained and conserved. Not only organic unity be maintained, but also oneness of polity and doctrine by having a sufficient number of Bishops holding the same forms of belief and administration. Though complicated, our machinery is elaborate, and our operations are spread over a vast domain, including the home and foreign work. There is much life and energy of movement and the centrifugal forces at play tend to make things fly off, or get little loose at the periphery. The episcopacy is a strong centripetal force in our system of Methodism. Strengthen it as we suggest, and things will hold to the center and work steadily. Or to change the figure somewhat, the episcopacy supplies to the body ecclesiastical the larger channels of organic life, the great arteries of our itinerant, circulatory system. Let us so increase the number of these larger channels as to meet the demands of the growing body, and turning them more and more of the spirit of Ashbury and McKendree. Let us see Methodism, "Christianity in earnest" bounding throughout the wide body, and pulsating to its remotest extremities. If the approaching General Conference will consider these suggestions and conduct accordingly, we shall predict for the next quadrennium a vigorous, healthy and harmonious life.

The Great Revival at Sardis.

MR. EDITOR: The revival which began in Sardis about eight weeks ago, still continues with power. The meeting is now held in the Methodist Church. Bro. Bowen with us for more than a week, in the spirit of the Master, working with great acceptability and success. Bro. Kilgore is now with us doing service. We have five services daily, two parlor prayer meetings and two services in the church. The result of the meeting is truly wonderful. One hundred and fifty souls, reckoned, have been turned to the Lord; seventy additions to the Methodist Church. All ages and classes reached, from tender childhood to the age of seventy-five; many developments of a beautiful Christian life; Christians take up the cross work with gladness, on the street in the stores, in the home and in the church. Little boys and girls, new for Jesus, timid girls, and young men, as well as older Christians. The surprises of grace are many: comes upon them every day; it does more for us than is taken in our faith. Souls are converted, added to the church daily. For time church going is popular, religion the most fashionable thing in Sardis. Many family altars being erected; Christians of all nominations work and pray together as one household of God. Old prejudices have been buried in the grave of Jesus, and long standing differences settled; and still work goes on. To God be all glory.

Obituaries.

PROTHRO.—Rev. E. H. PROTHRO was born in Blountville parish, La., August 3, 1835. While in infancy his father was killed on a boat in the river, on his way home from New Orleans. His mother being left a widow, she was married to Mr. T. C. Prothro, who shared in training him as directed by the wise man. Bro. Prothro was dedicated to God, by baptism, in infancy. He professed faith in Christ while young, and connected himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1851, and was class leader in 1852, and licensed to exhort, in 1853; and to preach, in 1856; was ordained deacon, January 11, 1858, by Bishop R. K. Harveys. Thus he held the relation of a local preacher till his death, which took place in Blountville parish, La., November 19, 1885. Bro. Prothro leaves a wife and four children to mourn their loss, beside his grief-stricken mother and step-father, and three half-brothers and four half-sisters, and a number of relatives and friends. Bro. Prothro was a faithful preacher, a devoted Christian, a good husband and a loving father. In his death the church has lost a good, faithful worker, a community a good and true friend. Bro. Prothro was truly a man of prayer; he would often retire to some secret place to engage in prayer. Often has the writer of this brief notice heard him give his Christian experience, as if he would stand up as a witness for Christ in the love-feast and in the class meeting. On the morning before his death he exhorted those that stood around his bedside, after telling them good by, to meet him in heaven; then shaking hands with his loving wife and children, with whom he shared the hardships of life, asked them to meet him in heaven; exhorted two young men that stood by him to repent, and meet him also in heaven; then, calling the writer's name and others, said, tell them to be faithful and meet him, and all the members of the church to meet him in heaven; then, shaking his mother's hand, asked her to raise his children for heaven. His last words were, "Who can solve the love of God; why, it gets better," and thus he died in great peace. I will say to the loved ones, Live faithful and meet him in heaven. PHILIP HUNKERT.

THOMAS.—It hath pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst our dear and worthy and courageous brother, Edwin Hartwell Prothro, and, where? The usefulness of our deceased brother as a local preacher and member of this Quarterly Conference, render it proper that we place upon record our appreciation of his services to the church and his merits as a man; therefore, be it Resolved, That we deplore the loss of Bro. Edwin Hartwell Prothro with deep feeling of regret, softened only by the assurance of his last words that his spirit is with those who, having fought the good fight, here are enjoying perfect happiness in a better world.

Resolved, That we tender to his afflicted family and relatives our sincere condolences and our earnest sympathy in their affliction at the loss of one who was a good man, devoted to the church, and an acceptable member of the Quarterly Conference.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolutions be transmitted to the family of deceased, The Rural Times and New Orleans Christian Advocate; also spread upon the minutes of this Quarterly Conference.

THOMAS, J. MARTIN, For Committee.

HELL.—Miss MATTIE BELL, wife of Mr. Clarence Bell, and daughter of R. S. Vaughn, was born January 3, 1852, and died February 20, 1886.

Her death came a shadow of sorrow over the whole community and gave a fearful shock to many loving hearts; but great as is the loss and sore as is the bereavement of her many friends and relatives, it is within the charmed circle which she called home the stroke falls bravely. How sadly her dear husband and children will miss her sunny countenance, her vivacious disposition, her wise counsels and loving sympathies! But they sorrow not as those who have no hope. In their sadness and desolation they hear coming from the tomb a voice of unearthly sweetness, singing psalms of victory over death. The vacant chair at the bedside, the hushed voice, the loving presence gone all silently and sadly speak of the departed; but, thanks be to God, "beyond this vale of tears," whence she awaits them, there are no such reminders. All is lost in the peace and love of a glorious eternity. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, about ten years ago and professed conversion. Her life was one of submission to the will of her Savior, endeavoring to be the light of her household. Her religion, however, was not of a demonstrative character; no special outbursts on particular occasions, but such a life as exhibited the peculiar points of true religion, and gave confidence in others of her piety. Conscious of her power and influence in her home, it was her happiness to throw the radiance of her presence over it, and to give cheer and gladness to her hearts that were so devoted to her. Her beauty and grace of manner, her great accomplishments of mind and heart, won the admiration of many, and endeared her to all. A kind wife, a kind loving mother, has been called away; but grief not, dear, stricken husband, that your wife has been severed from you to earth, while one more is attached to the anchor both steadfast and sure within the vale—the haven of eternal rest. "May the benedictions of a peaceful and sustaining Providence be over her loved ones, they meet her on that beautiful shore, where parting is no more, and sorrow never comes!" M. L. S.

HARPER.—At a called meeting of Summerfield Lodge No. 201, Free and Accepted Masons, the following proceedings were had: The death of CARP, A. J. HARPER, a member of this lodge, having been announced, and it having been made known to us his request, that his funeral services be performed according to Masonic usage, and that his funeral sermon be preached in connection with said ceremonies, by Rev. Dr. Hickerson. Therefore it was ordered that this lodge move in solemn procession and perform the funeral rites of our brother according to his request. A Committee on Monitors was then appointed, who furnished the following preambles and resolutions, which were adopted:

Whereas, In the wisdom of this, Almighty Dispenser of human events, our greatly esteemed friend and brother, Capt. Albert Lee Harper, was on Friday morning, March 12, 1886, at twenty-five minutes past 8 o'clock, called from the labor of men and nations on earth to meet in grand lodge above—there to be raised to more sublime degrees than earthly lodges can afford where, amid the towering columns and vaulted walls of the temple of God, he shall be permitted to enter in through the vale into the holy of holies, there to unite with the heavenly host in ceaseless adoration around the great white throne of the Grand Master above; therefore, be it Resolved, That in the death of Bro. A. J. Harper, Summerfield Lodge has lost one of its brightest and most valuable citizens; the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, one of her most zealous, exemplary and efficient members, and his family a most devoted, affectionate and affectionate husband and father.

Resolved, That this lodge wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That these proceedings be spread on the minutes of this lodge, and that a copy be furnished the family of the deceased.

And that copies be sent to the two churches parish papers and the New Orleans Christian Advocate, with a request that the same be published. J. M. P. HICKERSON, For Committee.

MASSEY.—Died, February 9, 1886, at Tallahassee, Miss. Mrs. SARAH MASSEY, aged thirty-six years. "Worth while" was not length of days, nor does beauty stay the hand of the destroyer. A tribute to the memory of this dear friend would I aim, and claim the privilege of a precious friendship to unite with the sorrowing ones left behind in dropping the sacred tear of love for their departed. Memory is busy with tender associations as I recall our pleasant hours of intercourse in days gone by. Then she walked in the earthly dust of a bright young womanhood, and the pale, sweet face, like a snowdrop in its purity, seemed an exponent of the pure heart that trusted within; then the future to her was bright with pictures of promised happiness, but all the pictures soon faded, and now to me, in a distant State, comes the solemn words, "She has passed from earth." Long ago suffered, but born it with characteristic sweetness. Our heavenly Father loved her so well that he was pleased to try her, as by fire, that he might refine and purify for his royal domain. To us she was a departed friend, but to him she is a saint. The chain is once again, low fast the links fall away! First, the father was taken; then the mother soon followed, and now the lovely daughter droops and fades away. Fair would the hearts of those left behind cry out, "Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there?" Sweetly comes back the answering echo to the trusting soul in Jesus, "Let not your heart be troubled."

GILLBREATH.—C. H. GILLBREATH, son of Pennal and Annie Gillbreath, was born in Greenville county, S. C., and died at his home in Clay county, Miss., March 15, 1886.

He was married to V. A. Boho in early manhood, with whom he lived a happy life, and raised a large family of children. He professed religion September, 1853, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was a member of the same when he passed away. He was a man of great energy and a strong, and by hard labor and honest dealing, provided well for his household. He loved a wife and nine children, with a wide circle of friends, to mourn because he is gone. But we do not mourn as those who have no hope, for we believe he is "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." The last time the writer talked and prayed with him, he said, "I am ready and willing to go, only, I hate to leave my family." A few hours after this he left us, and though death had seized him by the strong and cruel hand of pneumonia, yet he died with a look of resignation and triumph that said, "All is well." Then he fell asleep in Jesus. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved family! HIS PASTOR.

FORD.—ANNIE MAY FORD, infant daughter of Dr. S. Q. and M. J. Ford, was born in Chickasaw county, Miss., August 5, 1885, and died March 17, 1886.

Her stay was short upon earth, yet long enough to make us feel that it is hard to give her up. O how we miss her bright little smiling face! But while we miss her here, we know she is in heaven. Yes, when the white-winged angel of peace came to take her sweet spirit from the little baby, suffering with pneumonia, it was to add another precious jewel to the treasure of heaven. Grieve not, fond parents! It is the Lord's blessed will. C. M. THREADELL.

CAGE.—Died, March 21, at her home, Jessamine Hill, Wilkinson county, Miss., in her twenty-eight year, Miss. ELLEN M. D., beloved wife of Wm. C. Cage.

CROWSON.—Mrs. EMMA N. CROWSON (nee Wenzlich) was born in Ouchita parish, La., March 23, 1852, and died at the residence of Mrs. R. M. Crowson, Sparta, February 9, 1886.

Slater Crowson joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1881, when she was a school-girl in Homer, La. She was the devoted wife of Richard M. Crowson, Jr., and leaves two children. She was of a lovely disposition, all kindness to her family and to all with whom she was associated. She thanked the good Lord for what he had done for her soul before she became unconscious. She has left with a hope of meeting her loved ones where death never comes. ROBERT PARVIN.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

KATMAN, Tex., April 1.—At Katman this morning young Tom Rogers wrote an April fool order upon the state of Mr. Morley to go three miles in the morning and see a sick young lady. The doctor promptly obeyed, and upon returning was furious. Finding out the author of the hoax he attacked Rogers with a knife and stabbed him in the face, neck and body, inflicting fatal wounds. He is now in the hospital.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, Miss., April 1.—A heavy frost and mercury at 31° has caused some damage to straw berries and first plantings of beans. Otherwise no damage is yet reported by fruit and vegetable growers. Corn is injured but little on account of lateness of planting.

NASHVILLE, April 3.—The Cumberland is rising seven and a half inches an hour at the head, where a very heavy rain fell last night and to-day. The river is rising an inch an hour at Nashville, and at midnight to-night it was four feet nine inches above the danger line. An additional rise of three feet, which will result in great damage, is predicted. Rain fell during the most of the day here, and there are indications of rain to-morrow.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 3.—A special from Selma says the river there is seven miles wide and doing great damage to property. No doubt a number of lives have been lost in plantation quarters. The steamer Carrier arrived from below last night with 100 negroes rescued from tree tops.

MEMPHIS, Miss., April 3.—The Alabama, Great Southern and East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroads are still under water at the Warrior river, and the traffic of the roads is virtually suspended.

SCRANTON, Pa., April 3.—Grand Master Workman Powderly is in a precarious condition, and will be unable to attend to any work for a long time. His physicians will not permit him to know what is going on in labor matters, and have given strict orders that no one should correspond to him. He will not go to St. Louis, J. W. Hayes, of the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor, left for St. Louis to-day.

FORT WORTH, Tex., April 3.—The feeling between the strikers and the posse organized by Sheriff Maddox has steadily become warmer for the past two days, and to-day it culminated in a regular battle just outside the city, between twelve cops on an engine and five strikers armed with Winchester rifles. For a time there was intense excitement throughout the city, and it was thought further trouble would result, but happily these fears were not realized. Two officers were wounded and a third shot through both hips are the casualties on the side of the law officers. Of the strikers, so far as can be learned, only one has been wounded. It was announced yesterday by the officers of the Missouri Pacific that trains would move to-day or to-morrow, but the strikers have put it down as settled that no trains would be allowed to pass over the Missouri-Pacific line until the demand of the strikers for arbitration was conceded.

A petition has been sent to Gov. Ireland for State Rangers, and military transportation for troops has been applied for from Receiver Sheldon. A high wind is blowing to-night. If a riot occurs the whole town will be an easy prey to flames. The streets are full of armed men.

Every precaution will be taken to prevent trouble. It is thought that if tonight is gotten over there will be no danger of mob violence, as troops will be here by to-morrow night.

CHICAGO, April 4.—San Jones concluded his religious exercises in Chicago to-day. In the morning he drew a large audience to St. Goodwyn's Church, and in the afternoon and evening the Casino rink was filled an hour before the services began. Nearly 10,000 people were present at each of the services of the evening. The religious services were given to Messrs. Jones and Small, and with the salary guaranteed them in advance netted them $3000 apiece for their four weeks' work.

FORT WORTH, April 4.—Fort Worth rested but little last night; fully 2000 citizens were in arms and on duty until a late hour. Every now and then some startling rumor reached the city, but night passed without casualty. As day began to break a cold rain fell, which helped but a few minutes, but left the weather cold and blustering. The depot and yards were guarded last night by over 200 citizens called into service by the mayor's proclamation.

Three more companies of State militia are under orders by Tyler, Jefferson and Texas. It is impossible to say to-night whether or not their services will be required.

FORT WORTH, Tex., April 5.—The situation at Fort Worth is still uneasy. This morning Gov. Ireland came up from Austin and all day long has been besieged with visitors. The Governor thinks that nothing but the strictest enforcement of the law will serve to keep down the strikers. He said that still law should be made against every violator of the law.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—A bridge bill of very considerable interest to those directly concerned in the lower river navigation was introduced in the Senate to-day by Senator Waltham of Mississippi. It grants a charter to build a bridge over the Mississippi at or near Natchez, Miss., to the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge Company, of Natchez, the actual location to be fixed by the company wherever regarded by them most suitable.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 5.—The great flood is now at its highest between Selma and Mobile. Selma is suffering great damage and loss to property. The country for miles around is under water, and thousands of people are driven from their homes daily. The lives known to have been lost in the flooded districts up the river from this city are thirteen. Many others have doubtless perished down the river, and the fall of the waters will reveal much more destruction, death and disaster.

LYNCHBURG, Miss., April 5.—A heavy snow storm commenced here early this morning and continued until near noon, when the snow was at least three inches.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 5.—Snow fell sparingly here for about an hour this morning, but the ground was so wet it melted fast as it fell.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, April 4.—A breaking up of the Cabinet is imminent, Lord Kimberley, Sir William Harcourt, Mr. Childers and Mr. Mundell refuse to assent to any home rule measure giving Ireland control of the customs and they threaten to resign if such a measure be insisted upon by Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Morley demands a modification of the plans for the buy-out of Ireland, Mr. Gladstone, however, remains inflexible and will maintain his full scheme intact. Cabinet members are to be held on Monday and Tuesday and the climax will be reached on Tuesday. The minister themselves admit that an agreement seems impossible. Mr. Gladstone may make a statement on Thursday without the approval of the ministry.

LONDON, April 3.—Mr. Gladstone's visit to the coast, causing some anxiety, and he has gone to the country to spend two or three days for the purpose of recuperating. His physicians have impressed upon him that he must reserve his energies if he wishes to speak in the House of Commons on Thursday next, when a seriously expected statement regarding the government of Ireland is to be announced. Another Cabinet council will be held on Tuesday.

PARIS, April 3.—A band of Belgian rioters were to-day stopped on the frontier as they were about to enter France. Two of the men were arrested as suspicious characters.

Another of the Russian wolf-hunt Muijiks, who have been under treatment by M. Pasteur for protection against hydrophobia has died from the malady.

BRUSSELS, April 5.—At Charleroi, to-day, a number of strikers who were engaged in riots were sentenced to imprisonment ranging from three months to five years. Ten thousand men are still on a strike, but it is thought that many will resume to-morrow.

The Russians have a great knack of making their winter pleasant. You feel nothing of the cold when the wind blows from the north and the windows are kept warm by big stoves hidden in the walls. There is no damp in a Russian house, and the inmates may dress indoors in the lightest of garb, and contrast oddly with the masses of furs and wraps which they don when they go out.

A Russian can afford to run no risk of exposure when he leaves the house for a walk or drive. He covers his head and ears with a fur bonnet, his feet and legs with felt boots lined with wool or fur, and his hands with wraps up to the knees; he next cloaks himself in a top coat with a fur collar lining and cuffs; he buries his hands in a pair of fingerless gloves of seal or bear skin. Thus equipped, and with the collar of his coat raised all around his face, he can afford to brave the cold. The Russian, however, only his nose to the cold air, and he takes care frequently to give that organ a little rub to keep the circulation going. A stranger who is apt to forget the precaution would often get his nose frozen if it were not for the courtesy of the Russians, who will take a handkerchief from him if they see his nose "whitening," and will, unbidden, help him to chafe it vigorously with snow.

In Russian cities walking is just possible for men during the winter, but hardly so for ladies. The women of the shopkeeping class seldom venture out at all; those of the aristocracy go out in sleighs. The sleighs are by no means pleasant vehicles for nervous people for the Kalmyk coachmen drive them at such a terrific pace that they frequently capsize.

"I once thought I had a hope in Christ, but I wandered away from him. My mind was not at rest, and I sought for utter absorption in business to drive thoughts of religion out of my mind. I believe I know something from the experience of those dark days of wandering, of the torments of being damned. But that was of no use. I found I must come, if at all, just as I came at first—as the prodigal returned to his father." Something like this we heard a man of education and mental force say in a prayer meeting not long ago. It is no wonder that with great earnestness the prayers of the great Father's house. These words may meet the eye of some other wanderer. We earnestly beg him to heed the lesson. There is no coming back by his own power. "I will arise and go to my Father," and let the Father alone is safety. May God give you grace to make it.—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

TALKERS.—The art of conversing is not cultivated as much in these days as it was by our fathers. Men who can talk well also write well, and as their writings have a pecuniary value, they reserve their good things for the public who pay for them. Metcalf mentions in his "Memoirs" a fact which indirectly suggests what a good talker should be. He says:

In my whole life I have only known ten or twelve persons with whom it was pleasant to speak—i.e., who I could talk to about their own subjects, and who do not talk of themselves; and lastly, who possess tact and taste enough not to elevate their own persons above their subjects.

Would that we could all imitate the pearl oyster! A particle of sand irritates itself into its shell and this vexes and grieves it. It may not feel the evil, but it covers it with a precious substance extracted out of its own life, by which it turns the intruder into a pearl. Could we do so, with the provocations we receive from our fallen Christians, there would be bred within us pearls of patience, gentleness, long suffering and forgiveness, by which we could turn the intruder into a pearl. The nearest the soul is to God, the less its perturbations, as the point nearest the centre of a circle is subject to the least motion.

The strongest men are the most tender-hearted. The coldest and the greatest waters flow from under the greatest rocks.—J. G. Blaine.

THE COST OF TRUTH.

Great truths are dearly bought. The common truth,
Such as men give and take from day to day,
Comes in the common walks of early life,
Blown by the careless wind across our way.

Great truths are dearly won, not forced by chance,
Nor won in the breath of a summer dream;
But grasped in the great struggle of the soul,
Blown by the adverse wind and stream.

Not in the general mist, mid corn and wine;
Nor in the merchandise of golden years;
Nor in the world's gay halls of midnight mirth,
Nor in the blaze of regal diadems.

But in the day of conflict, fear and grief,
When the strong hand of God, put forth in might,
Tough up the scales of the stagnant heart,
And brings the impetuous truth to the light.

Temperance Reform.

BY REV. W. C. BLACK.

I desire to add a postscript to my last communication. Our Temperance Reform Club is pushing the canvass vigorously. Fifteen clubs have been organized by members of our club, and about six more would have been organized last Sabbath but for the rain. We do most of our work on Sunday, as it is difficult at this season to get the people together during the week. We do our work through the churches. I believe every single club we have organized was organized in a church. We are making fine headway among the colored people. We have three colored clubs here in Meridian. One of them started with 147 members, and has already grown to more than 200. And just here I wish to say to temperance workers throughout the State, that they ought to go to work among the colored people. These people can be reached through their churches. Let white preachers hold conferences with the colored preachers, and secure their co-operation. Then let our temperance folks, male and female, visit the colored churches. You ought to see some of our Meridian women getting off of their dignity and getting down to hard work in the colored churches. One caution I wish to put in just here. Let no man who has the reputation of a bull-dozer be made prominent in this sort of work.

Our Meridian saloon keepers are greatly perplexed. They had counted on getting almost the solid colored vote. They still boast that they are going to buy them.

Our election, which is to be held soon, was called for by the saloon men. They see that we are gaining every day, and they wish to precipitate an election before this temperance agitation has time to permeate the entire county. If we do not carry the county by an overwhelming majority, then I very greatly misunderstand the signs of the times. One other fact I wish to state for the benefit of workers elsewhere. We are using the press. The Southern Baptist and the Farmer's Advocate have given us ample space, and we are using it to advantage. We expect also in a short time to flood the county with temperance tracts. The National Temperance Society agrees to furnish us tracts at half price. (Their prices are very low.) They will furnish 100,000 tracts, such as we may select, for $50. This is intended as a hint for others. I wish, however, to say this: Send for samples and let some wise head make a selection. Not all these tracts are suitable for our work in Mississippi.

Reminiscences of an Old Itinerant.

MR. EDITOR: These eighty odd years have laid me aside from the active duties of the ministry, and the only plausible way I see to do a little more for the cause of Christ and the benefit of my fellow-men is to write, as I am able, something edifying for publication in our church papers. For the present I will write a few short sketches of my early religious experience and labors as a junior preacher. I may not be able to "adorn a tale," but, perhaps, I can "point a moral." I have always felt some reluctance in saying much about my personal religious experience, and yet I believe I may say some things that may benefit children and young people who sincerely desire to become Christians. It was, indeed, an unexpected Providence that led me in my boyhood into the Methodist Episcopal Church. Both my parents were pronounced Baptists in principle, and my mother was a member of that church before I was born, and continued so through life. I must say, however, what is due to her precious memory, that I never heard her utter a sentence intended to prejudice me against any other Protestant Church. But her church was strongly Calvinistic, and her association had formally adopted the Calvinistic creed, and both her preachers and some leading members of the church harped so much in favor of their adopted creed, I concluded, if their exposition and application of certain Scriptures was correct, we would have to swallow Calvinism with all its unjust and horrid decrees, whether we liked it or not. I never was a Calvinist in heart, but I had a great deal of trouble to get entirely from under its influence.

In my early boyhood I generally attended the Baptist Church because it was the church of my mother, and the greatest injury I received by sitting under her ministers was the prejudice they gave me against other Christian denominations. They often asserted that theirs was the only true church on earth, and that all others were false and uns Scriptural. They especially denounced the Methodist preachers as "false prophets" and "wolves in sheep's clothing," and their followers as being duped and fatally misled by them, and before I entered my teens I had imbibed strong prejudices against the Methodist Church. I feared they were a deceived people and would ultimately be lost. This was sometimes a source of deep affliction to my feelings, for most of my mother's family were warm Methodists of the Tobias Gibson stripe, for they had been taken into the church and trained by our first Methodist missionary in Mississippi. From my earliest recollection I had many strong religious impressions, and often resolved to lead a religious life; but the bane of all my religious purposes was a determination to keep them a profound secret, and let no one know that I read my Bible and said my prayers for the purpose of becoming a Christian. I could not stand alone, and so often fell back into careless indifference that I was quite discouraged. I felt that I must by some public act commit myself to the service of God and invoke the influence and prayers of Christians to help me, or in all probability I would never become a Christian. But what could I do? My mother's church, I knew, would not receive me without an experience of grace in a change of heart, and I had no such experience to tell. My fears that the Methodists were a deluded people would not let me seek an entrance into their church until I could learn more about them. And the Lord was working in me and for me in a way I knew not of. There came an ex-traveling preacher from Ohio down the Mississippi, with a load of produce, by the name of Moses Trader, and while his partners were selling out his produce, he made frequent preaching excursions through our river counties. His popularity as an orthodox and powerful preacher was almost unbounded. He had an appointment at the little Methodist Church in our neighborhood known then, as its successor is still known, by the name of Caneyridge. The congregation was so overwhelmingly large on Sunday that they had to be provided for under the shade of the trees. Mr. Trader stood on a large log, and such a sermon I had never heard before. As old Benjamin Abbott used to say, "He tore Calvinism all to pieces," and proclaimed a free and full salvation to all who would accept it on gospel terms. A deep religious feeling seemed to flood the whole congregation. This article is long enough. I will tell in my next how that sermon began to make me a Methodist.

HAZARD, Miss.,
J. O. JONES.
Religion—Progress.

We can not say that historical religion has always been tributary to progress. On the contrary we must regretfully acknowledge its antipathy and repressive influence in many departments of human thought.

It would be unfair to leave the assertion just here. The popular thought of religion scarcely ever passes from its generic significance; and any generic predication whatsoever is at once construed into an onslaught upon religion specifically considered.

While the religious phenomena of man have their source in the same elements of human nature, they are not to be considered identical experiences. The same forces involved in pantheism are the energies of monotheism. Atheism and theism are products of one class of forces. What is essential in one is dominant in the other. The structural effects are equally accumulative. Infidelity and faith involve the same psychic energies and, consequently, equally indestructible results. I may formulate thus: Religion involves all character-building forces, and every relation and condition tributary to their action. Faith in an idol puts in action every force compassed by faith in God.

It would be an easy task to show that the results of faith are determined by its object, and that it involves in its object the differential quantity, and that its productive energies are uniform whatsoever its object. A casual review of the historical play of religion is ample to discover the intense statistics of its constitution. It must be understood, however, that the states of religion involve only a dynamic equilibrium. Faith maintains an immovable center in its object as the condition of assimilation. Immobility in its object without regard to its logical character is the universal condition of religion. A movable faith-center is disruptive of the character possible under a static one. The function of faith is to secure a fixed center as the condition of religious development.

The soul laboring under the necessity of a psychic center as a condition of religious life imposes upon itself in its readiness to accept any given logical center and begin its structural accumulations about it. Once adjusted to such a center it naturally opposes removal, and not unfrequently maintains a kind of persistent centripetency over all its energies. Divested of all incidental features the faith-center consists in the recognition or attribution of fundamentality in its essential elements. Human nature carries in itself evidences of relative existences. These essential elements must then consist of certain things lying without human nature that are its complements and are made tangible through faith. Any given line of religious development must have a corresponding faith-center of a possible gradual and limited mobility compatible with such assimilation. As a possibility involved in the dynamic equilibrium of the faith-center, a healthy faith must involve an inquisitive element and, therefore, should be acquisitive of a purer and completer knowledge of the faith-object. In fundamentals the doctrine of spiritual states has its complement in the doctrine of spiritual dynamics. Either one applied without the requisite application of the other becomes destructive of the effects of their normal harmony. When through the progressive tendency of the latter the faith-center is made to coincide with that defined by the relative existence of man, the former reaches the climax of its function in fixing human character in relations of permanence to such center. Until such time the doctrine of states has only a relative value. Its antipathy or repressive influence in any department of human life is incidental rather than fundamental, man himself being responsible for the subversion and consequent antagonism of the elements of his higher nature.

J. H. HARRISON.
"Three Ordinations, but Two Orders."

Under the above caption a "Member of Fourth Year Class," in the Advocate of March 11, desires some information. He is "puzzled to see the consistency in three ordinations when we recognize only two orders in the ministry."

Yes; I understand. And allow me to say to my young brother: You will continue to be puzzled so long as you follow the leadings of "Powell on Apostolic Succession." With the permission of the editor I will try to relieve the brother of these annoying puzzles as well as I can.

And first, How do you ascertain that "we recognize only two orders in the ministry?" I know of no such recognition by our church, though I must confess that it is pretty fairly implied, and in some cases clearly taught in some of our course-of-study books, but it is not a church doctrine. You say Mr. Powell clearly establishes the fact that a Bishop and elder, or presbyter, is the same scriptural order.

Now, mark? Right here, exactly here, is the focal or pivotal blunder in this whole voluminous and widespread error in all these controversies, misunderstandings and puzzles about orders and ordinations in the ministry. Now, will you follow my words carefully—words which no man will call in question, or if he should, they will be a mere naked, vapid dictum without a word of support.

There are no scriptural orders in the ministry! This is a fanciful argument, as old as the other Papal errors, and as damaging in its results. Scripture clearly teaches an order of ministry as contradistinguished from the laity of the church; but lays down no rules, sets up no doctrines as to any particular or separate number of orders in the ministry. This is one of the many things not taught. The supposition that Scripture fixes just so many orders or grades of authority or rank in the ministry, supposes, of course, that Christ established a ministerial law to that effect, and that supposes a new church with a newly framed government, and that supposes Popery. From these conclusions there is no escape. No man in these late decades, except an out-and-out Papist, or an out-and-out High Churchman, will, for a moment, admit the fact of a new church. This is the foundation and only foundation of High Churchism.

Now, my young friend, if you will set out with the doctrine that all division and assignment of ministerial labor, all grades of office and authority in the ministry fixed here and there, is the work, not of Divine direction, but of human discretion—mere church arrangements for the more expeditious efficiency of our labors—you will ever clear of all your puzzles touching three ordinations of ministers with or without two orders or three orders. These orders are not "scriptural," but ecclesiastical.

And the question whether, as a matter of fact, we in our church have two orders or three, depends upon the meaning you give to the word "order." It is a word of many significations, and, from essential High Church episcopacy, it has no very important significance in ecclesiastical affairs, there being no Scriptural orders in the ministry.

It is well known that in our ministry we have a considerable variety of grades, functions, duties, labors and offices. We have the licentiate, the traveling licentiate, the local and the traveling deacon, the local and the traveling elder, the presiding elder, and the Bishop. These have all their several duties or church work. The higher offices have duties assigned and enjoined that may not be performed by those standing below them. And being myself an anti-High Churchman, recognizing no severity of orders by Divine right or appointment, and with some ordinary knowledge of the common use of the English language, I, of course, see no literary impropriety in designating all these as so many orders in the ministry. Bear in mind, there are no scriptural—that is, no divinely prescribed orders, in the ministry. The Scriptures recognize an order of ministers wholly.

If a mere incidental occurrence or usage in the church or ministry in apostolic times is to be taken for a Divine prescription in church government for all time, then anything imaginable can be established. It is in this way, and this way only, that Presbyterians prove parity in the ministry, and High Churchmen prove three orders, and Campbellites prove ministry without ordination. For all these things are found, at least plausibly, in the New Testament. But if this rule of construction, or rather of misunderstanding without construction, be admitted, we Methodists are most likely counted out as churchless. We could hardly find, very clearly set forth, an itinerant, general superintendent, the simple truth is, that in apostolic times they did as we do now—they arranged ministerial labor to best advantage. Episcopacy is ministerial oversight over other ministers. Churches that have it do so because they want it, and arrange it as they wish, and not because of a Divine law enjoining it.

If you discard utterly a newly made church, and so, a Divine law prescribing a certain number of orders in the ministry, you will likely get clear of all your puzzles in this regard. With no Divine orders, you will easily see, in this connection, but a complexional difference between order and office. Formerly the pastor was called a Bishop; then the time came, very naturally, to designate a chief pastor, or superintending pastor. In ordinary English speech we usually apply the term order, in the sense now in hand, to such class of offices as are more permanent than others, or such as include both inferior and superior functions. And ordination is the usual mode of investing with such higher functions. The principle of ordination, differing only in form, is the same in the church as out of it.

If you look at the third article in the October (1885) number of the Southern Methodist Quarterly, you will find this subject more elaborately handled. And if you read Ecce Ecclesia, you will find it, with all its kindred doctrines, still more fully discussed.

And if this be not entirely satisfactory, let me know either publicly or privately. My object is to assist my younger brethren in a better understanding of this much abused subject.

YAZOO CITY, Mississippi.
R. ARBEE.

The Literary, Scientific and Theological Institute of the North Mississippi Conference.

Some time since a letter to the Advocate from Dr. T. C. Wier gave to its readers a pretty full account of the object and plan of the above named Institute; so that I need do but little more than give the course of study for the first year, and the names of the instructors for the several schools. The Institute is divided into four schools, each of which is under the direction of two instructors. They are as follows:

School of Literature—Instructors: Rev. T. C. Wier, Sardis, Miss.; Rev. John Ritchey, Okolona, Miss. Books for first year: English Literature (Hart or Swinton), English History (Dieken or Anderson).

Colportage Work in the North Mississippi Conference.

In accordance with a resolution of the North Mississippi Conference at its last session, I was appointed by Bishop Hargrove colporteur and book agent, "to travel throughout the Conference for the purpose of selling and distributing our books and periodical literature." Recognizing and accepting this as not a nominal appointment, but a real work, to which all time and labor should be given, I at once entered upon it in the spirit of self-consecration and prayer; and to this date I have, under God, been enabled to prosecute it with diligence and a good degree of success. Since Conference I have visited seventeen pastoral charges (eight stations and nine circuits), some of which I canvassed pretty thoroughly, and others but slightly for want of time. In all places much kindness and generous hospitality have been extended by the preachers and the people. I find that most of our preachers and people are in sympathy with this "special work," and are ready to co-operate in its furtherance, but now and then one is found, of each class, who needs cultivation on this point. But I have the gratification of believing that almost, or quite, every place visited has been left with an increased interest for good literature. We are sowing seed that we expect to produce much fruit in the near future.

Success thus far has not been commensurate with desire and even expectation; but, considering the severe winter and dullness of business generally, I report it satisfactory. As spring is opening, I am planning and aiming for more thorough work and greater results. Brethren of the ministry and laity in the North Mississippi Conference, I am your servant in this work for Christ's sake and the good of humanity. Let me hear from you as to where, where and how I can serve you. Brethren, pray for us.

G. W. BACHMAN.

ROCKFORD, Miss., April 6, 1886.

Winona District Conference.

It was a matter of great regret that we found it impossible to attend this District Conference at Carrollton. Several cordial invitations were extended, but other imperative duties prevented acceptance. Of the occasion Bro. Bachman writes as follows:

We have had a good District Conference. The secretary will furnish you with particulars in due time. The meeting will continue this week under the leadership and ministry of Rev. J. A. Bowen, who is here, as he is everywhere, "in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ." Already some persons have been added to "the saved," and many more are striving to enter in at the strait gate. A few ministerial brethren remain to aid in the work. Preachers and people are happy in the assurance of a "sweeping revival."

I am pushing my part of the work, i.e., to supply the people with religious books and periodicals—with a good degree of success. Let us have a good and strong editorial bearing upon this matter soon. I go from here to Artesia, Columbus and Aberdeen, thence to Sardis, May 1.

Rev. Eugene Johnson, of the North Mississippi Conference, writing from Houston, says:

A word or two from this charge—Houston and Wesley—may not be out of place. Have received since Conference twenty members into the church on profession of faith, two by letter. Think we will be able to report another church completed by Conference. Have forwarded over one-fourth foreign missionary assessment to Conference treasurer. Think we will raise all the assessments by Conference.

Delegates to the General Conference can purchase tickets to New Orleans by any of the lines leaving New Orleans for one full fare, with the privilege of returning at one-third of regular rates. A ticket from New Orleans to Richmond will cost $25 by either line.

Owing to a miscarriage of the mails, an extended editorial on Mr. Gladstone's Irish Proposals fails to appear this week. As we go to press the great debate is in progress in the House of Commons, and the fate of the measure rather problematical. The tribute to the Premier on the day his grand argument was delivered in Westminster has never possibly been paralleled in history. It was the magnificent coronation of the most brilliant and long-sustained parliamentary career of the world. Whatever may be the action of the Commons on the proposed measure, Mr. Gladstone has annihilated the broad constitutional and patriotic principles by which the Irish question is to be determined. The days of coercion—of cold steel and imperial force—are gone forever.

The prohibition contest in Mississippi waxes warm. In all the "dry counties" the whisky men are bringing on the fight, while the prohibitionists are challenging to ballot in the "wet counties." Private advices from Meridian and Lauderdale county are most reassuring. We are especially pleased to learn that the colored people are rallying under the standard of reform. One colored club in Meridian numbers over two hundred. The "rumblers" have charged that they can buy the "monkey vote" with a few gallons of whisky. Let the preachers, teachers, and leaders among them see to it that this boast is a slander. The vote in Alcorn county will take place next Tuesday, the twentieth instant. Though the issue has been precipitated on our friends, they are at work and hope to succeed.

As the question of the revision of our hymn-book is being agitated and may result in some General Conference action, this item is of interest: "An attempt was recently made in London to ascertain what were the popular favorites in hymns and tunes, ministers, lawyers, merchants, mechanics and others being requested to name six favorite hymns and tunes. One hundred persons sent replies, and 201 hymns were named, of which 112 had only one each. The six having the highest number of votes each were: 'Jesus, lover of my soul,' 36; 'Rock of Ages,' 27; 'Nearer, my God to thee,' 25; 'My Jesus, as thou wilt,' 21; 'Abide with me,' 20; 'Just as I am,' 19. Of tunes, 144 were named, of which 77 had only a single vote each. The six highest on the list were: Refuge, 35; Lux Benigna, 16; Jewett, 15; Eventide, 12; Toplady 12; Nerey, 11."

The Southern Christian Advocate comes out strongly for the maintenance of our "Itinerant general superintendency" in its integrity. In the beginning of the current discussion we thought our conference was somewhat favorable to the new doctrine advanced. But these clear, ringing sentences leave no doubt as to his hearty sympathy with the constitutional principles and historic precedents of our Episcopal Methodism:

"It is by no means necessary to elect resident Bishops for our foreign mission work. It is entirely practicable to bring this part of our Methodism within the scope of our itinerant superintendency, by so increasing the number of Bishops as to give an annual visitation to each foreign Conference. This is about all the home Conferences enjoy. In the interim of episcopal visitation, presiding elders and preachers in charge can surely attend to the churches abroad about as well as the same class does at home. A Bishop for each foreign mission is impracticable and undesirable for many reasons, among these from the fact that in several of our fields there would be an overwhelming disproportion of Bishops in comparison with the size of the work and the number of preachers. A Bishop superintending five or six churches and as many pastors is too much like the sight of a reduced scion of aristocracy on horseback under a silk umbrella, in kid gloves superintending a lone Senegambian's struggles with wiregrass in a five-acre patch of corn."

"The Bishop's Domicile."

The Arkansas Methodist republishes an extract from a recent editorial in this ADVOCATE on "A Resident Episcopacy," and under the above heading makes elaborate reply. We announced most clearly our approval of the plan of our chief pastors residing in the different localities of the church. For the larger and wiser ends of administration they should so select their places of residence as to be easily accessible to a given territory. And we here repeat that some sections have doubtless suffered for lack of episcopal service in consequence of the distant residences of the Bishops. This is a matter of grave concern and will doubtless be so considered by the Bishops in the future as in the past. But we do say that this matter ought to be and must be arranged by our chief pastors themselves and is not a subject for General Conference action. In support of that position we referred to the doctrine of the episcopacy defined by Bishop Soule, the author of the Third Restrictive Rule, the declarations of the Southern delegates in the General Conference of 1841, and the unvarying voice of Southern Methodism on the subject. Republishing a mere extract from an extended article which our conference pronounced "A High Church Episcopacy" and makes it a text for some extravagant writing, of which this is a liberal specimen:

Who are these great functionaries of the church that are so high and exalted, that the very church, who gives them birth and to whom they owe everything they have and are, creatures of their own creation, and the very moment they are made, turn upon their makers and disclaim all their authority and defy all their power? When did it come to pass that the General Conference has lost all power to control or regulate the movements of the Bishops or superintendents they have elected? Of course we have no sympathy with the views of the Northern General Conference as expressed in the case of Bishop Andrew. But then all the measures they proposed were extra-judicial and perfectly unconstitutional, and at the same time was an attempt to degrade Bishop Andrew. But it will be an evil day for us when we resort to the other extreme, and acknowledge that the Bishops are beyond the control of the General Conference either as to their place of living or their work. We contend that the General Conference has just as much right to control the movements of their Bishops, as the Bishops have to control the movements of the other preachers.

Subjected to careful analysis the above becomes a revelation of confused ideas and illogical rhetoric. Surely our good friend is not willing to rest his reputation as an intelligent student of Methodist constitutional and statutory law on the indiscriminate sentences. While avowing his want of sympathy with the views of the majority in the General Conference of 1844, he out-Herods Herod in advocating their doctrine in its blindest expression. Rhetoric is good, but a little calm, judicial discernment is better, in the discussion of ecclesiastical law and administration. Let us look at the question dispassionately, eliminating extravagant adjectives.

1. The law of the church clearly defines the duties of the Bishops and their relations to the General Conference and all departments of our work. They are not independent of authority. If they refuse to discharge prescribed duties, preach heresy or are guilty of immorality, the processes are plainly arranged for their arraignment and trial. But when it is asserted that the Bishops are the mere "creature" of the General Conference, we emphatically dissent. That creature theory was the very position of Drs. Hamline, Peck and other majority leaders in 1844. If our brother will read again the masterly constitutional arguments of Bishop Soule, Dr. Winans and Dr. Capers, and the great "State paper" of Dr. Bascom, known as the "Protest of the Minority," he will shade down some of his rhetoric. The episcopacy, according to our theory, zealously and jealously maintained, is a co-ordinate branch of the church government. No fact has been more persistently and consistently held in all the controversies of the past. Now just how this theory can be logically harmonized with the doctrine of the above extract, has not transpired. Indeed, grave doubts exist in the minds of the Northern General Conference, with their theory of the episcopacy as to their constitutional power in specifically locating the residences of Bishops, and had the question referred to the Committee on Judiciary for a legal opinion. There is a principle involved in this matter that had best be conserved.

2. The analogy between the relation of the General Conference to the Bishops, and the Bishops to the preachers, is unfortunate as an illustration for our friend. The law prescribes the duties of a Bishop in assigning preachers to work. The preachers, however, are not amenable to the Bishops, but to the Annual Conferences for their lives and official administration. If they refuse to do the work assigned the Bishop has no control over them or voice in the bodies of which they are members. The illustration illustrates, but not the doctrine of the above extract.

We furthermore affirm that no Annual Conference ever assumed such prerogatives as fixing the residences of preachers. Pastors are appointed to circuits, stations and missions, but we know of no law compelling them to reside in a particular house or on a certain street or in a given neighborhood. They are not compelled to live in the parsonages purchased and furnished by the church. Did you not, Doctor, once refuse to occupy a parsonage provided for you? If so, did the Bishop or Annual Conference presume to hold you accountable therefor? But the question needs no further argument. There has been no ground of complaint in the past, and so long as we elect consecrated men to the episcopacy no difficulty is likely to arise. The Bishops themselves will arrange the matter in order to promote the best interests of our beloved Methodism.

The Baltimore Council Decrees.

The Catholic Plenary Council held in the city of Baltimore, in November, 1884 was a notable gathering. All the Bishops and various representatives of the church were present and deliberated for weeks. Their conclusions were published, of course, in the Latin tongue, and were not promptly transmitted by messenger to Rome for the Pope's consideration and formal approval. Much was said at the time of the decrees agreed upon and extracts therefrom published in newspapers. Those publications, however, were unofficial and doubtless inaccurate.

The decrees have been returned with the Pope's approval and have been officially promulgated by the primate of the church in America. We find in the Independent of New York, liberal extracts from the carefully translated documents.

The general scope of the decrees and principal provisions as they concern clergy and laity, will be given at another time. We here append the deliverance of the council on the temperance question. It will be seen that it differs somewhat from the unofficial publication. But it is an advanced position for the Roman Catholic Church to take and will undoubtedly have material influence in the great contest with intemperance and the liquor traffic:

There is no doubt but that among the evils we especially deplore in this country the abuse of intoxicating liquors is to be numbered. For this excess is the constant source of sin and the fruitful origin of misery. Utter ruin has thereby come upon innumerable individuals and whole families, and it has dragged many souls headlong to eternal destruction. And since this vice has spread not a little even among Catholics, scandal is thus given to non-Catholics, and a great obstacle is set up against the spread of religion. Both love of religion and of country, therefore, urges all Christians to use every effort to stamp out this pestiferous evil. Following in the footsteps of the fathers, the other councils of Baltimore, and supported by the teachings of the Angelic Doctor, we approve and heartily commend the praiseworthy custom of many who in our day abstain entirely from the use of intoxicating liquors, thus to overcome more certainly the vice of intemperance, either by removing from themselves the occasions thereof or by presenting to others a splendid example of the virtue of temperance, whose zeal we willingly admit is according to knowledge and has already brought forth abundant fruit, and promises greater in the future.

We recognize the societies named—the Catholic Union for Promoting Total Abstinence and the Sacred Thirst—to be worthy of great praise, for they are directed by a truly Catholic spirit, and seek the necessary strength, not so much in the firmness of self-will as in the power of prayer and of the sacraments. Moreover, it is known that the head of the whole church and Christ's vicar on earth has more than once enriched them with his apostolic benediction and with the indulgences of the church; wherefore we also present to them the signs of our good will, and we commend them to the paternal care of all our priests, that they may flourish more and more; that they may not only add souls to their ranks, but also show them the Catholic path in which they should walk.

Lastly, we warn our faithful people who sell intoxicating liquors to consider seriously by how many and how serious dangers and occasions of sin their business—although not unlawful in itself—is surrounded. If they can, let them choose a more honorable way of making a living; but if they can not, let them study by all means to remove from themselves and others the occasion of sin. Let them not sell drink to the young—that is, to those who are not of age; nor to those who they foresee will abuse drink. Let them keep their saloons closed on Sunday, and at no time let them allow blasphemy, cursing, or obscene language within the walls of their taverns. If, through their culpable neglect or co-operation, religion is brought into contempt and souls ruined, they must know that in heaven there is an Avenger who will exact the severest punishment from them.

Origin of the Central Mexican Mission.

The Central Mexican Mission has developed into a Conference and is old enough to have a history. As we turn back the pages for a few years and see the feeble and unpromising genesis of that grand movement, we can but feel like singing praises. In a recent letter to the Southern Christian Advocate, Bishop Keener writes of that day of small things, from which we quote the following interesting statements:

Some thirteen years ago I started from New Orleans for the City of Mexico. The purpose was slowly formed, but unexpectedly to me, during a missionary anniversary of the Louisiana Conference, then being held in Carondelet street, it was suddenly developed into immediate expression. Bishop Pierce had just finished speaking, I arose and added somewhat, and alluded to the field of Mexico as ripe to the harvest, and cited the fact that I had seen a Mexican who had come out of Mexico in search of Christianity; and who had been mysteriously brought to Christ in Brownsville, Texas, while working for the first time in a Protestant audience; and that I had both seen and apostolized him at the West Texas Conference, only a few weeks before.

From the back part of the congregation one asked if I would go to the City of Mexico if the money was pledged to pay my expenses. I answered yes, and Bro. Walmesley opened the subscription for raising a thousand dollars in gold, by giving one hundred. The amount was soon made up.

The following Sabbath morning I arose early and went down to the vessel, my wife, Dr. Polak, of Baltimore, Bro. Tindor and Bro. Walmesley went down to see me off. The craft was the "Tobasco," a little steamer that had been in dock for repairs. It was intensely Spanish in its make up, shape, crew, cabin, captain; all had a Mexican imprint. At 8 o'clock A. M. she hauled in her lines, and steamed down the river. This gave me full time for meditation. It was a venture under the impulses of the Spirit. I felt strangely alone. What I should do in a land where even the tongues were unknown, or how I should do, was left to the workings of an unseen hand. The Gulf was sombre and rough, the sky leaden during the entire trip, and not a soul was seen from the time we left the river until we came to anchor at the Castle of San Juan d'Uloa. It so happened, the railroad was just opened, and I went up to the City of Mexico on its first regular through trip. Only three English-speaking persons were on the car—an engineer, a contractor and myself. The scenery of the Cordilleras repaid me for all the odors and motions of the "Tobasco." The Southern Cross stood over the land of the Aztec in its brilliant significance—Mexico for the Savior. Yet the first hours spent in the city, alternated between hope and fear. Sometimes it seemed impossible to make a lodgment, with the slender resources at command. Mr. B. M. Walmesley had generously given me a letter of credit for several thousand dollars. But others were there trying to start work with unlimited influence and money. Bishop Gilbert Haven had all the United States, and what at that time was about the same thing, all the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church at his back.

A good Providence sent to my aid a poor man, Christian Brenne, a Swede, and a translator for Maximilian, who spoke English well. I put a new suit of clothes on him; then he found our noble old Mexican, Sothenes Juarez, and brought him to me. Juarez was the first President of the first Protestant Assembly held in Mexico. We instinctively took to each other on sight. The old man gives me a good Spanish hug every time I go out to the mission; he is now the presiding elder of Morelos district. It was through these two that I bought the old chapel of the Capuchins, on Fifth street, where Bro. Daves afterwards built our "Templo de Mesias." Well, it was a great triumph, as it was the first property bought by Methodism in Mexico. Bishop Haven could hardly believe his eyes. In two or three weeks I had arranged for repairing the chapel and placing Alejo Hernandez in it, and returned home. Hernandez, and then Bro. Daves, did good work at a difficult time. Hernandez went presently in triumph to heaven, and after several years, Bro. Daves returned to the United States. The health of his wife left him no other course. Had he remained, he would have reaped many of the sheaves which others have since garnered. Among our good friends made in that first home was the family of Mr. Hugo Wilson. Mr. Wilson was an Englishman who had been long in Mexico, a man of substance and great integrity. His wife, sons and daughters have always given a hearty welcome to our missionaries. He died within the last two years, in full hope of Heaven. He often lent his name and credit to myself and Bro. Daves in the course of the development of the work.

The Alumni of Emory College number 743; the preachers, teachers, lawyers and doctors are numbered by hundreds; the college has furnished five missionaries to China, one to Mexico and scores to the West. In this last respect Emory stands at the head of all our church institutions. The spiritual and ecclesiastical atmosphere of that college must be wholesome that trains and inspires students with the spirit and heroism of missionaries.

Debt to Methodism.

We find in Zion's Herald some interesting extracts from a remarkable article in the Congregationalist by Prof. Austin Phelps. It would give us pleasure to republish the communication entire but have failed to receive it. Prof. Phelps is one of the most popular of American theological writers. He is broadly catholic in his sentiments, generous in judgment and the farthest removed from sectarian or sectional prejudice. The quotations from his article indicate at once marked "mental hospitality," and the trend of modern theological thought. More and more the Christian world is acknowledging its debt of obligation to Methodism. This is generously done by Prof. Phelps. The following is from Zion's Herald:

"The Congregationalist," of March 25, has a remarkable article from the pen of Prof. Austin Phelps, D. D. It may be said to mark an era in the discussion between Wesleyans and Calvinists. The article is entitled, 'The Debt of Religion and Theology to Methodism.' It is not patronizing in spirit, or simply flattering in its estimate of the influence of a sister denomination, but is a hearty and manly recognition of the manifest work which has been accomplished, given in the clear, forcible and graceful style of the Professor. He pictures, very much as does Dr. Stevens, in the opening of his 'History of Methodism,' the moral and religious condition of Great Britain at the time of the Wesleyan Reformation. Prof. Phelps says: 'The chief power in saving to the future the old church of Cranmer and Ridley was the Methodist revival.' 'Methodism saved the Anglican Church from extinction. It was a re-enforcement of apostolic Christianity, also, in every other Christian denomination in the English-speaking nations and colonies. We have all felt the throb of its pulsations. It has been what new blood is to failing dynasties and decadent races.' Prof. Phelps falls upon the exact office of Methodism in behalf of the Calvinistic Churches: 'It has been a stout ally of those who have labored to eliminate from the popular notion of Christianity the notions of a limited atonement, and the servitude of the human will.' * * * 'Methodism cut the knot. Wesley and his associates denied the limitation of the atoning sacrifice by a Divine decree.' * * * 'They preached this exultingly, like men freeborn. It gave a ring of gladness to their ministrations.' 'The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs' at the sound of their voices.' 'Angustine and his predecessors,' says Prof. Phelps, 'paganized Christianity in this respect for a thousand years. The reformers left the truth substantially as they found it. Calvinism, as defined in the Geneva and Scotch theologies, and in the thirty-nine articles of the Anglican Church as well, was dead fatalism. The offer of salvation, loaded with the doctrine of inability, meant no more to multitudes of hearers than 'Selah' did in the old edition of the Psalms.' 'The most triumphant way,' the Professor says in closing, 'of proving any doctrine involved in human duty, is to use it. Make it thus prove itself as a fact, and time will take care of it as a dogma. This Methodism has done for the doctrine of human freedom through the whole of her romantic history.'

What of the German Work?

Not a sufficient number of agents are employed, and those engaged are not always wisely employed, in winning the Germans for our church. We have organized German churches and necessarily perpetuate the use of the German language, without the faintest hope of ever reaching the many Teutons dwelling within the Southern States.

What can be done? Cut loose from the practice of a sister church, of organizing any more distinctly German societies. Let every Annual Conference of our connection employ one or more German missionaries, not to organize German churches, but to work among the Germans, preach to them in German in our American churches, prevailing upon them to join and stay there. One of these German missionaries might assist during one year more than fifty American pastors of the Annual Conference.

This plan does not design to do away with our German Conference now existing. Let that continue and do in its limited way what it can; but if that is all which our church will do for the Germans in the Southern States, we will not have done our duty. In Arkansas, Alabama, South Carolina and Virginia there are thousands of Germans, who should be won for Methodism, but who are accessible only to the German missionary.

Difficulties in the way? Often our American brethren have been deceived by designing German ecclesiastical tramps. Receive none except recommended by a superintendent, who might be appointed for that very work. Another difficulty would be as to what Quarterly Conference the German missionary should report to. This would be solved by fixing the office of evangelists in addition to that of pastors.

J. B. A. AUBREY.

"Sunday Fanatics."

Mr. Editor: A benighted Teuton in Plaquemine, La., writes to the New Orleans German Gazette as follows: "The Methodist parson of this place coarsely censured 'our' resident Catholic priest the other day because of the latter's silence in regard to Sunday law and temperance. The priest promptly retorted that the Bible, too, was silent about said subjects. That this is a free country, in which everybody has the right to do as he pleases. These Sunday fanatics care nothing about the rights of their fellow-men. They want us, like brutes, to work during six days of the week and then, on the Sabbath, bring our earnings to their church."

These intonances I can not pass unchallenged. 1. I believe not that the Catholic priest in Plaquemine has remarked that the Bible was not outspoken in regard to Sabbath observance and temperance. Sabbath observance and temperance have many enthusiastic champions among the Roman Catholics. Should, nevertheless, said priest have made such remark, then I am inclined to believe that he is more familiar with the contents of wine-dasks than that of the Bible. Think of it, a priest asserting that the Bible did not forbid Sabbath desecration and intemperance!

2. Not a priest's utterance, but the word of God is our authority in matters of religion and morality. Whoever teaches contrary to the Bible annuls the claim of being a Christian, even though he wears priestly robes. Priests were the fiercest enemies of Christ during his sojourn on earth. Even now many priests and Catholic preachers discard his teachings. Luther rightly says: "The word of God the papists can not shake."

3. Yes, this is a free country: free indeed that, if our Legislature should bless our State with a proper Sunday law, the law office of Plaquemine would sans ceremony steer above correspondent from behind his bar to the calaboose, without giving him time to put off his white apron, were he to vend his whisky and beer on Sunday. A very free country. We make our own laws and the see to it that they are enforced.

4. The advocates of a Sabbath law and temperance are not the enemies of their fellow-men. Our laboring classes need the rest of the Lord's day. Men who spend most of the time at the card-table, loitering the street corners may not require it. But, fortunately, the majority of our citizens are industrious men, earning their daily bread in the sweat of the brow. These require the probability of law against grinding corporations and avaricious capitalists. Sunday laws are the safeguard of the workman.

5. Going to church on Sunday not calculated to injure anybody. Can that, too, be said of the vile deed of strong drink? Many, alas! were hard during the week and on Sunday they bring their earnings to the round vendors of intoxicants. Their bar room has converted many affectionate fathers and devoted husbands into fierce brutes.

Senator Jackson, of Tennessee, has been appointed by President Cleveland to the circuit judgeship, embracing the States of Tennessee, Ohio, Kentucky and Michigan, made vacant by the death of Judge Baxter. Senator Jackson has taken high rank as a statesman, and retires from a short, but really distinguished parliamentary career.

In a notice of our approaching General Conference, the Northern Christian Advocate says the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has "had an increase of 50,000 members within twenty-one years." Our conference is strangely astray with his arithmetic. The increase of one year has been about 50,000. In twenty-one years it has been fully 500,000.

The Bishop of Peterborough has uttered a strong protest against allowing the clergy to "preach heresy by proxy," by inviting non-conformist ministers to occupy pulpits and uphold tenets which those who gave the invitation dare not preach themselves for fear of penalties. Quite impudently is that ecclesiastic. But this is the latter half of the nineteenth century.

There was a reunion of three Annual Conferences in New York recently. The New York, the New York East and the Newark Conferences, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, met in St. Paul Church, New York City. Bishop Hurst presided, Chaplain McCabe conducted the singing, and addresses were made by Drs. Scudder, Van Horne, Rutz, Buckley, Fitzgerald and King.

Hon. J. Randolph Tucker will deliver the address before the literary societies of Emory and Henry College in June. Dr. Lafferty promises that the address will be "the wisest and wildest ever heard there," and pronounces "Ran" Tucker the "finest character and greatest statesman in the South." It is a matter of much regret that Mr. Tucker has announced his intention of retiring from public life. The country needs such men in high position.

Rev. P. H. Diefelweir, a supernumerary member of the Louisiana Conference, is on a visit to the city. He attended the preachers' meeting on Monday morning, and made several calls at the Advocate office. Bro. Diefelweir resides now in Florida, not far from the city of Tampa, whither he went several years ago for his health. He joined the Mississippi Conference in 1837, and recalls, with vivid memory and grateful heart, the scenes of those early years.

The Woman's Executive Committee of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church was organized in 1878, and its summary of work accomplished that year showed a total of twenty teachers employed and funds raised to the amount of $5,296.25. These figures the next year were increased to thirty-five teachers and $15,624.65. Last year the summary showed 155 teachers and $128,523.36 raised. Of the 155 teachers, 63 are in 24 schools among the Indians, 35 are in 33 schools among the Mexicans, 70 are in 38 schools among the Mormons, and 4 are among the Southern whites. That surely is a grand showing.

Sam Jones' closing meetings at Chicago were attended by immense congregations, as were all the services he conducted. The city papers estimate that more than 200,000 people attended the meetings during his five weeks' stay in Chicago. His last sermon was preached to 9,000 persons, while several thousands failed to gain admittance to the immense building. Dr. Scudder preached on that occasion, and warmly shook hands with Mr. Jones at the close of the service, and declared how he loved him and endorsed him. It will be remembered that the press dispatches reported Dr. Scudder as openly protesting against a remark of Sam Jones in his first sermon. The secular papers commented upon it extensively and disparagingly. At the last meeting addresses were delivered by prominent ministers of the several denominations, all testifying to the good work accomplished by the evangelists. Of the results of the five weeks' labors Sam Jones spoke as follows. He evidently has a "wholesome skepticism" about numbering Israel:

Who knows how many have been converted? I want to say no man can charge Sam Jones with extravagant figures in this matter. I know that about twenty have been converted. Thank God for that twenty. ["Amen."] I know of twenty. And I want to tell you another thing, those twenty souls, if they shall shine in my crown up yonder, I shall say, "Thank God forever that I worked for five long weeks in Chicago." [Applause.] And I know that. Well, I have heard of, I think, at least 1,500—I think I have heard of about that many by the hearing of the ear. There may be 10,000, and I hope there is that many; but do not you all say I said there is that many? You tell them Jones said he of twenty. And thank God for the twenty.

Centenary College Commencement.

Mr. Editor: The following from Maj. Knapp explains itself:

Mr. Editor: I propose the following arrangement for trustees and ministerial visitors attending the commencement of Centenary College which convenes at Jackson, La., on May 25 to June 2. For going passage, one regular fare. For returning passage our agent, at Ethel, La., will sell tickets to original starting point on May 25 to June 2, (inclusive) at one-third regular fare, (good only on day of sale) on surrender of certificate of attendance, signed by the secretary of the Board, naming station on this road, whence the delegate (i. e. trustee or visitor) started and paid full fare. Advise me if this is satisfactory and I will accordingly instruct our agent at Ethel, La.

Yours truly,

A. J. KNAPP, G. P. A.

Let trustees and members of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences consider themselves invited to our commencement. We shall endeavor to accommodate them. I think I shall be able to secure passage to and from Ethel at a very reasonable rate and good care taken of them while at Jackson. I expect soon to announce special rates for parents and students who come to enter college in the fall.

GARVER & JAMIESON.

There are very few of those who profess to be Christians who live fully up to their privileges. Most of us ought to get upon a higher plane. We are quite sure that one who is in the full enjoyment of God's approving smile and who walks with him in close communion day by day, will never find occasion to ask if he can attend a dance, or if he can drink an occasional glass. The question how much of the so-called enjoyment of this world he can indulge in will never trouble him. Get into that purer Christian atmosphere and such perplexities speedily vanish.—Domestic Journal.

No fraudulent advertisements will knowingly be allowed in the ADVOCATE. If one ever appears it will be by accident.

In ordering from those whose advertisements appear in our columns please state that you have seen the same in the ADVOCATE.

Miss Cleveland's letter on dress might be termed the clothes letter.

Attention farmers and stock raisers.

In this issue of the ADVOCATE Col. W. R. Stuart advertises the Jersey Bull for sale, very cheap. It is fully acclimated, and is sold to make room for importations to arrive. Do not fail to make inquiry immediately, as the animal is to be sold without reserve. See advertisement.

"Can February March?" asked the punster with a sickly smile. "Perhaps not," replied the quiet man, but April May."

Difficulty of breathing, a short, dry cough, a quick pulse, and pain in the left side are symptoms of approaching consumption. Relieve the chest and cure the cough with Hale's Honey of Borehach and Tar. This remedy is swift and certain, at any drug store at 25c, 50c, and $1.

"A coat of paint," cried Mr. Dunbar, jocularly, speaking from the ladder. "Is the only coat you can put on without buttons." "Yes," replied the householder, dubiously, as he examined the work on the side of the house, "but I reckon you'll have to put the buttons on this one if you want it to stay on after it dries."

Remember this; you can get a money order at your express office, try it.

Old Mr. Bantly (at the Eden Musso): "Now, there's a statue, Marlar, of one of them fellows they call a fool. It looks like it was alive; don't it?" Old Mrs. Bantly (poking it with her forefinger): "It looks all like a wooden egg with 'em up." Statue (indignantly): "Aw—aw."

Relief is immediate, and a sure cure. Hale's Remedy for Catarrh. 50 cents.

Even editors are sometimes unreasonable. The editor of a Georgia paper said in a recent issue of his paper: "If the man who sold his live-down cotton eggs to the Georgia Christians here doesn't come in and make them good we will teach him what the penalty is for cheating and swindling." Just as if any one could make that kind of eggs good!

A good memory should always be cultivated when ordering stationery to remember to include some of Esterbrook's Steel Pens.

Mr. Starling: "I see that Richard Wagner's gondola is offered for sale to Venice?" Mr. Starling: "Wagner? Wagner? Is that the sleeping car man?" Mr. S.: "No, the musician fellow, you know. The gondola was his favorite instrument."

Before renewing your subscription look over our clothing list for 1886.

"Thomas, spell weather," said the master. "W-I-L-L-I-T-I-A-L-A-E-R-weather." "You may sit down, Thomas. You've given us the worst spell of weather we've had this year."

Have you heard of Dr. J. H. McLean's Tar With Lung Balm? It is really wonderful for the rapidly it cures Coughing, Throat and Lung Troubles.

The boycott—The trundle-bed.

You promised to renew your subscription last week but failed, you may miss a number.

WERLEIN—Music by the ton, at Werlein's, every composer and author fully represented the very latest publications on time; do not see the new advertisements in this issue, or the plans and organs at prices within the reach of every one, at terms that will enable the poorest to secure a first class instrument without strain, the styles and qualities of Mr. Werlein's stock will be found to comprise all the first class manufacturers, musical instruments at prices lower than ever known before. Churches and Sabbath-schools desiring to procure an instrument will find it to their interest to address Mr. Werlein on the subject, beware of worthless imitations for which you will pay as much money as for a good instrument and have nothing in the end.

For all points in Texas and California take the Southern Pacific and Star and Crescent via Houston.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

GREENFIELD, Mass., April 7.—A terrible disaster occurred at the Fitchburg Railroad to-night midway between Bardwell's Ferry and West Deerfield Station, the east-bound passenger train, due at Greenfield at 6:05 P. M., going over an embankment 200 feet high.

LAREDO, Tex., April 7.—The city election passed off quietly yesterday, and all who had been looking for trouble thought the matter was finally settled. About 6 o'clock this evening, while the Bots party were parading in procession, they were attacked by the losing party and a bloody encounter ensued, in which five men were killed and three wounded.

GREENFIELD, Mass., April 8.—Superintendent Adams reached the scene of the West Deerfield disaster at 2 o'clock this morning. Throughout the night train-men worked removing the wreck and are still at the task. Up to noon ten bodies, nine of which were removed from beneath the submerged wreck, the other from a car in which the victim had been burned to death, had been found. Engineer Littlejohn died this morning. Conductor Foster was not badly hurt, escaping with a few severe cuts. It is impossible to obtain the names of some of the sufferers, physicians prohibiting any question. Since last night not less than 10,000 persons have visited the spot, some walking from six to ten miles to view the wreck. As viewed by daylight the scene was worse than reported last night. It is considered marvellous that anyone escaped alive. The descent is 130 feet.

ST. LOUIS, April 9.—At 2:30 o'clock this evening fifteen deputies, in the employ of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, fired into a crowd of men, women and children at the Broadway Crossing of the Louisville and Nashville road, and killed five men and one woman and wounded three men and a child.

LAWRENCE, Mass., April 10.—A fire broke out at 10:30 to day in the pickery room of the dye-house of the smallest of the Pemberton mills and after a fierce conflagration of nearly three hours, the building, which was three stories high and sixty feet long, was gutted. The loss is $100,000, fully covered by insurance. At 12:30 P. M., the roof fell, carrying down the two floors and also fifteen men who were fighting the flames. All but four of these men escaped by climbing out of the ruins.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 10.—Steel was made in this city to-day by the Bessemer process. It was manufactured at the South Treadwell Iron Works, and is the first ever made here. The ore used is Cranberry ore, obtained from Roane Mountain. The test has been anticipated with much interest and was carefully watched by a large number of iron men. It proved very satisfactory and should further the adaptability of Southern ore for steel making. It is probable the Roane Iron Works of this city, which for three years, will engage in the manufacture. This test looks to that.

RICHLAND, Va., April 10.—The first elections under the local option law passed by the last legislature took place to-day at Floyd courthouse and Wytheville. At the first named place the "dry" movement was defeated, while in the latter place the "dry" men were victorious by a small majority, and consequently no license will be issued in that town.

LAREDO, Tex., April 11.—Gen. Roberts and his command of State troops have returned to San Antonio. Capt. Schmidt, with his company of State Rangers, will remain here for some weeks. Major Allee said to-day no arrests will be made for a few days in order to give the people time to cool down. The newly elected municipal officers will be installed Monday or Tuesday. The most reliable returns show that of Harche's force seven were killed and eight wounded, while of the Bots, ten were killed and one wounded.

NEW YORK, April 12.—When asked about the truth of certain reports published in the morning papers about negotiations pending with Gen. West, Gen. Hoxby said: "McDowell, Mr. Gould said: 'There is no truth whatever in the report. The whole matter was put in Mr. Hoxby's hands by the directors of the Missouri Pacific some time ago, and they propose to let it remain there. Besides, the strike is a thing of the past.'"

CHICAGO, April 12.—The Methodist ministers of the city, at their regular meeting to-day, discussed the eight hour movement and almost unanimously favored it.

GREENPOINT, La., April 12.—About 100 public school boys of all ages made a demand upon the principal that the recess be extended from fifteen to thirty minutes. Their demand not being acceded to, the boys refused to return to the school after the morning recess and picketed the entrance to prevent children from entering. The trouble assumed such threatening proportions that the principal sent for the police, and a sergeant and several officers were soon on the spot. Finally the mother of the ringleader arrived and forced her son into school, after which the boys quietly marched in.

TRON, N. Y., April 12.—About half the scholars at the Eleventh Ward school struck for shorter hours this afternoon. They demanded a single session per day from 8 A. M. until noon. The boys procured sticks and threatened violence to the pupils who did not join them. Policemen were sent to the scene to give whatever protection was necessary. The strikers tried to induce the boys at another school to follow their example.

ST. JOHNSBURY, Vt., April 12.—Theodore Fairbanks, the celebrated scale manufacturer, died this morning, aged ninety years.

FOREIGN.

It should be the endeavor to liberate Parliament from the restraints under which during late years it had ineffectually struggled, and to restore legislation to its unimpeded course. It is our duty to establish harmonious relations between Great Britain and Ireland, on a footing of free institutions, in which Englishmen, Scotchmen and Irishmen have a like interest.

Mr. Gladstone's speech was three hours and twenty minutes in duration. He finished at 8 o'clock.

DUBLIN, April 10.—The Orangemen of Armagh made a public demonstration to-day against Mr. Gladstone's Irish proposals. They adopted resolutions denouncing the Premier.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 12.—Gen. Tolstoy declares that it will be impossible to construct and maintain a line of railway from Merv to Bakhara, because of the great intervening deserts of shifting sand. He adds that such improvements of the Amur river, which flows midway between these points, will permit of its navigation by steamboats.

Books and Periodicals.

THE GOSPEL CHORUS. A book of sacred songs arranged for male voices. By John R. Sweney, W. J. Kirkpatrick and T. C. O'Keefe. Published by John J. Frost, Philadelphia, Pa. 112 pages, price 50 cents.

The work commends itself by clearness of type and neatness in general make-up. The pages are replete with good things by the well-known editors. Now that good male voice books are increasing, Sunday-schools and churches might do well to consider organizing a male choir would not be an excellent way to engage the energies of the young men in evangelical work—the plan has been adopted in many cases with gratifying results.

—The Pulpit Treasury, for April, is promptly to hand. With this number closes the third year of this incomparable magazine. Its monthly visits have become a necessity to all its readers, bringing to them a very precious of the very best things for pastors and Christian workers. This number gives the index to the third volume, and its admirable array of contributors, topics and texts is like a wonderfully appetizing bill of fare, placed before a hungry guest. Every preacher and student should have this treasury.

The Lutheran Church is accorded the first place in this number, and has a fine portrait of Dr. Seiss, of Philadelphia, one of his capital sermons, a beautiful view of his church and an excellent sketch of his life. Other sermons deserving of special mention are, Frailty, Investigated, by Dr. J. J. West; John; A Memorial Tribute to Rev. Dr. Rice, by Theodore Pryor, D. D., and an Easter Service, by Canon H. P. Liddon. Leading Thoughts of Sermons are by Dr. Gordon, Frazer, Paxton, Tupper, Meyer, etc. Notable Articles are by Bishop Bird, Dr. John Hall, T. L. Cuyler, Bishop MacLagan, Rava, C. H. Sprague, F. E. Clark, David Street, A. H. Momen and S. W. Adair. In the editorial department, The Resources of the Church, The Sabbath Rest, Search the Conscience, Aim at a Mark, A Spiritual Warfare, and other timely and pertinent topics treated with skill and vigor.

Yearly, $3.50. To Clergymen, $2. Single copy, 25 cents. E. B. Treat, Publisher, 771 Broadway, New York.

Richmond Conference.

Delegates to the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to be held in Richmond, Va., May 6, will have a most delightful trip by taking the "Richmond route," i. e., East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad, which passes through the most beautiful mountain scenery on this continent. Parties will be permitted to stop over at Chattanooga, Bristol, Roanoke, Waynesboro and other points on the route. The "Lure of the Mountains" by this route you cross the Blue Ridge and Alleghany Mountains in daylight, and make the entire run to Richmond through without change, if desired, in the fast time of forty-eight hours. The rate by this route are as low as any other. No other road can offer lower rates. For further particulars address Maj. J. C. Andrews, General Southern Agent, corner Carondelet and Common streets, New Orleans, La.

Many professing Christians, if we may judge from their conduct, regard the Lord as they do a pauper, and his cause as a charity. If they give anything for the support of the gospel, or the extension of the cause of Christ, they do so begrudgingly, and have an agonizing and weary task in the work which they were under no obligation to give. They have no appreciation of the Lord's bounty, nor of their obligation to render to him according to all his benefits. Their hearts are filled with selfishness, and if they can accomplish their own private ends, and increase their worldly gains, they care but little for the glory of God or the salvation of men. How such penurious, selfish souls can claim to be Christians, and indulge a hope of heaven, we can not tell. Their hearts are on the earth, and their hearts are cold. Could they retain their worldly wealth, they would aspire to no higher good. But knowing that they must part with this, they hope, by some means or other, at last to gain admission to heaven, as the next best thing. What conception can such persons have of the infinite love of the Savior, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty might be rich? They forget that they have nothing but what they have received, and that they have no account to render for what they have received.

Sketches and Portraits of the General Conference.

The Rev. Dr. Lafferty, of Richmond, Va., has nearly ready a rich and unique volume. It contains a sketch of each of the two hundred and fifty members of the Conference, with a faithful and superior likeness of every delegate. It is a portrait gallery of the body. The volume is in square shape, printed on heavy-tinted paper, and is a beautiful made for all. The engravings, in English and to original rival the best work in America. The "Sketches and Portraits" is a sumptuous book, an ornament to the parlor, and worthy of the great Methodist Senate it portrays.

It will be in colored and embellished bindings. The edition will be one thousand. Price, $5.00. Orders may be sent to the publishers, in box mail, for this purpose. Enclose name and amount to REV. J. J. LAFERTY, Richmond, Va.

Almost invariably, boys who have been allowed to roam free at night have come to some shipwreck and social destruction. The exceptions have been where there was a wholesome temperament, a strong intellect, and peculiar social influences. Men and boys, women and girls, whatever may have been their culture, feel that there is something in the street at night—something that excites apprehension, or creates alarm, or gives license. Boys that are demure by day will say things at night that they would blush to utter in the daylight.

The result of our observation is the clear conviction that it is absolutely necessary that parents know exactly where their children are from sundown to sunrise. No boy ought to be allowed to go alone off the pavement of his father's house after sundown. It ought not to be a hard restriction; to a boy thus trained from infancy it will not be.—Dr. Decius.

If you have written a letter with tamper in it, keep it till to-morrow and read it carefully. Perhaps you will conclude not to send it.

BY ELLA THAYER.

We question the all-wise vast,
Of souls that people distant spheres:
What of their future and their past?
Have they our sorrows, joys and fears?
Do the same flowers make glad their sight?
The same birds sing? On their great seas
Do ships like ours, with canvas white,
Move steadily, answering the breeze?

Have they their Christ, their Christmas Day?
Know they Malines? Build they? One,
Or all or none? And do they pray?
And have they thought as we have done?
We can not guess—'tis hard indeed,
Our own orb's tale of its dim past
Through centuries unrolled to read,
And who its future shall forecast?

We know the hand that holds in check
The whirling worlds, each in its course,
And save the universe from wreck
And peril—this tremendous force
Holds in check all our little lives:
To sin and strife do all obey
In silence—never planned strikes
To serve for its appointed way.

The dangerous beam alone to us
Is given, to choose 'twixt ill and well,
Between rebellion and obedience—this
To build our heaven, or dig our hell.
But one great thought our strength upholds:
Nothing shall perish! Though his rod
Smite sore, his mercy still endures
His own—God's souls are safe with God.
—Cottage Hymn.

"The Prince of the Kings of the Earth."

This introduction of Christ to the churches by St. John is somewhat remarkable. The Saviour is here represented as the Ruler of Kings, the controller of all governors and persons in authority. He is their prince. Just as the heir-apparent in England is prince over men, so is Christ prince among the rulers and kings of the earth. He is their King as they are the king of others.

As men study the arbitrary proceedings of the monarchs of this world—their wars and statecraft, their pulling down and building up—the conviction is with many that the history of mankind, the shaping of national and human destiny is in human hands altogether; that it is the crowned heads of the earth who really rule; that they are the powers, and beside them there is none other. But this foreboding sentence of John shows a very different condition of things to prevail. The kings do not rule their way; they are not the arbiters and controllers of a world's fate. There is moving about among them—invisible, indeed, but not the less present and omnicompotent—who is their Head and Master, and who does what he will with them and the world.

It is an unaccountable rule to these potentates of a few rods of ground. They are so taken up with a streamer or two, or a half-dozen mountains, that they fail to recognize the presence of him who owns the stars in their multitude, and who is pouring out from his throne a river along whose banks congregate countless nations; and that he to refresh and bless the universe forever. They knew him not when in the flesh, and they fail to discover him now in the spirit. Yet he is here, for all that, ruling and overruling those who think they rule everything.

The king's unconsciousness of the presence and power of Christ does not affect the fact. I remember to have read of the little son of a stage-driver who fancied that he was driving the coach. The reins were in his hands, and so he was confident; but to his profound mortification he discovered after an hour of skillful driving, as he thought, that the lines passed on either side of his body and were held in his father's grasp, and that his father had been doing the work all the while. The reins of government seem to rest in the hands of the kings of the earth; but, thanks be to God! they do not stop there. They pass up and above the clouds, and beyond the stars, and Christ's all-wise and all-powerful hand is on them, and he it is who is guiding and controlling the world, and bringing it in the face of infinite difficulties home to God.

It is confusing to watch the movements of trals on one of our great trunk lines. At lightning speed they are dashing to and fro on a single track, and to the uninitiated there seems nothing to prevent the most terrible disasters. But, so far from confusion, there is perfect method and system. Somewhere along the line sits a man with a diagram of the road before him. He knows each minute where the different trains are, whether stationary or flying like the wind. By his side is a telegraph key, and when he says "Stop," the train stops, and when he says "Go," it sweeps out on its thundering way. In the midst of apparent disorder there is perfect order. So in the case before us. At times the world seems to have broken loose from God, and the study of the movements of men and nations impresses the superficial observer as a scene of remediless confusion. Yet we know of a face that is bent on us from above unweariedly, and a hand almighty to do that guides and regulates, that pulls down and sets up, and that turneth the hearts of men whithersoever God wills. The Prince of the kings of the earth stands revealed in the accomplishments of the past, and Christ has no better proof of his imminent nearness and triumphant sway over human ignorance, passion and sin, as well as human power, than what we read in the histories of the world. The progress from error, the birth of liberty, the enlightenment of millions; the growing realization of the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the true individual and national life, the growing aversion to war, the benevolent features of the age—all proclaim overwhelmingly who really governs the world, who is the Prince of the kings of the earth.

A wonderful feature is that Christ is using the nations and rulers of the earth for the accomplishment of the very thing that they never think of, and to which in their hearts they are opposed; and that thing is the redemption of the world.

The kings of the earth are only thinking of and laboring to secure their own establishment and aggrandizement, while all the time under the marvelous power of Christ they are the unwitting instruments of establishing God's kingdom and filling the whole earth with his glory.

We may glance at the wars of the past. In every one Satan had his design, men had theirs, and Christ his; yet history shows that Christ's design was the only one that prevailed. When Pharaoh kept the Israelites in bitter bondage, his plan was self-enrichment; but Christ contemplated through the suffering of those three centuries an unification of the mass that would make the Jews one people forever, and so prepare them for the reception and protection of the word of God, and for that which was to come to them through the Word. There is not a single war but in it we see how by Divine overruling it has been made a handmaid in some way to the Christian religion. The kings of the earth warred, and, as they struggled for preeminence, opened up new countries, swept away idolatry, and prepared a way for the gospel.

The movements of nations, the settlement of countries, all have felt the Divine touch, and been made to agree with the Divine plan. The history of our own land is full of suggestions here. Two hundred years ago France owned two-thirds of this country; Spain, a great portion, and England less than either. Can you explain how it is that France and Spain do not rule people does? Simply because Christ is the Prince of the kings of the earth. He determined that in this vast new conti-ment—that is to be such a factor in working out the world's redemption—that Catholic countries should not rule, but a Protestant people should possess and govern the land—and it was done.

As it has been, so will it continue to be. There is a prince on earth who wears a crown of thorns who does what he will with the kings who wear crowns of gold. He is invisible, but he governs the nations. The kings of the earth see him not, know him not; but they are his instruments and servants for all that. So will he work on, and rule on, and overrule, until some day the Bible says a voice will be heard saying, "It is done—the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of the Lord and his Christ." How calmly the wonderful announcement is made! Who is it speaking? Who would he allow the blessed honor and privilege of announcing the completion of God's mightiest and most wonderful work? Who but the Holy Ghost himself, who undertook the labor of saving the world.

As soon as the voice is silent, listen to the shout that instantly shakes the spheres. Nay, it is two shouts—one going up from the earth, and another coming down from heaven, and meeting! O child of God, will you ever forget that shout as long as eternally rolls!

The workers for Jesus Christ are meeting; the workers of two worlds—earth and heaven; workers coming from time, and appearing out of eternity, and meeting for the first time, and they meet shouting over the completed work—a redeemed world.

It will be a glorious vision; yet will there be one even more glorious, and that is the sight of Christ, not only uplifted over the kings of the earth, but rising above all principalities and powers, and now seen to be Lord of Lords, King of Kings, God over all blessed for evermore.

B. CARRADINE.

Letter from Dr. Cottrell.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of April 1, just at hand, is no April fool. The editorial remarks and the extract from the Jackson Clarion relative to the massacre of the negroes at Carrollton are in a spirit and in just such terms as are calculated to be effective. Vehement denunciation and extravagant characterization of the astounding deed were indicative of really less feeling than the evident self-expression indicated. There is a desperation which makes one mild, and aside from the consideration that persons abroad will naturally deem the act of these men, who slew the negroes at Carrollton, an index to the temper and spirit of our people, the deed itself is of just such a nature as to make any righteous soul shudder and recoil. The parties themselves, I doubt not, by this time deeply deplore what they have done; or my apprehension of human nature is radically at fault. Two or three bold, determined men could lead others into a venture of that sort, dominating when having them once committed; betraying them into cooperation with them in what surprises—yes, astonishes themselves after it is perpetrated.

As regards of this matter, I would speak again of the recent work of George W. Cable, entitled "The Silent South." His plea on behalf of the clearest, clearest, most considerate and benevolent recognition of the civil equality of the negroes is as ingenious as it is able. Such as have "gone off" impulsively in adverse criticism of the book would on a second reading and a sober study of the issue materially qualify, if, indeed, they did not retract their criticism. I have as much confidence in the negro as I have in the white man in all matters essential to character. Memories of some, with whom I worked in the cotton field when a boy, are quite as grateful and assuring as are any incident to the work I have done in the ministry with the whites, preachers or others. And some I owed until the war liberated them, were as true to me as I have ever been to those to whom I am obliged, and as true as any I have observed in any range of secular or ecclesiastical service. Any Jes-uitical, mental reserve on the part of our political and religious leaders, as they affect to award equal civil rights to "Our Brother in Black," will foil the whole enterprise of inspiring and aiding him to save himself in the highest measure of the meaning of the term salvation. Let the pulpit, platform and press give such utterance as will induce the most benevolent confession of faith in ordinary criticism, as our people converse on this subject. The young people now growing up have not known what we knew in our childhood and youth of the negro, who, in the relation then sustained, was almost as a kinsman. So much the greater the necessity for them not to be prejudiced by inconsiderate denunciation and the like. The thought comes over me with special power, as I make this record of my memories of sterling worth in the negroes I knew in the past, how abiding is all virtue. Here I sit feeling the power of the character and spirit of the negro men with whom I used to walk and ride and to whom I used to listen when a boy, and of the women who milked the cows as I kept off the calves, and who, as seamstresses, made my clothing. How little did they apprehend that they were then, through fidelity and through consideration of and kindness to the children, putting forward into the future a foundation of confidence justifying such remark as I have written. Yes; they come up from the past and are powerful in qualification—are decisive of the opinion and sentiment of him whom they knew as a boy, regarding the possibilities of their race, now that he has measured off more than a half century.

"What is excellent, as God lives, is permanent."

Do I hear objection to my predication of such exceptional ones of this race, a theory of elevation and culture for all? What if we were to predicate of the lowest types and specimens of the Saxon a theory of ultimate miscarriage in civilization in all? It would be no more absurd. It is of him who was and who is very man of very man that we predicate hope and assurance of the ultimate glory of those with whom he is incorporated. He is exponential of humanity.

The twittering and shrill singing of a bird is heard at every pause in the din and clamor of traditional prejudice, and it is of liberty—of freedom, it slugs. Mrs. Merrick's womanly caveat to the article of Bro. S. S. Keener sings into my soul as from the throat of that bird. Was there ever a more graceful, confidence-inspiring manifestation than characterize the gifted women who are suggesting, through deliverances as eloquent and respectful as are possible in terms of human parlance, that "it is not good for man to be alone?" No well-balanced mind will ever do other than "make haste slowly," and inspiration of ultimate, philosophic benevolence is security against hasty-riding; yet, as it is prophecy that "a nation shall be born in a day," even so may there be in the industrial, educational and governmental world reconciliation as by polarizing touch of magnet in the hand of him to whom a thousand years are as one day, and one day as a thousand years. As certainly as some things have transpired in the past quarter of a century that were not dreamed of in our philosophy, even so will there be sweet surprises in the coming quarter. I am well aware of the specious arguments that are rattled off against "unsexing woman" through her attachmentment, and would as soon engage to tan down a dust as to reply to them. Let this outline the argument that will evolve itself through philosophic elaboration in any reflective mind.

There are some things that some men are qualified to do in the economy of society and government that other men may not do. But this is no reason for those other men to be disfranchised. Even so is it no reason against the attachmentment of woman that there are things man may do which she may not do. Not a little of that which men do that is unbecoming to women but might be omitted, and the world be all the better for it. Bro. Paul wrote, "Help those women." Reciprocally, let the women help us men. Reciprocally, let the men help the women, if you please. Men with men only are soon abnormal. Women with women only deteriorate.

I have had to suspend a meeting that promised largely an account of the terrible weather. The Ohio is on a course of alluviation just now, and the law of equivalents that seems to prevail through nature may bring back in enrichments of the valleys what is now lost by the flood. I suppose you exchange with "The Centenary," of Florence, S. C., of which I am the corresponding editor for Kentucky. If you will copy what I wrote in the March number about revivals, under the heading "Criticisms With Qualifications," I will spare you anything of the sort now. Just the first paragraph of the article will suffice.

The invitation to be at Richmond, Va., during the General Conference session, to lecture for one of the churches, is accepted.

Have I no suggestions to offer the General Conference? "Modesty is a quality that highly adorns a woman," was one of the maxims in the old English reader, in which my first parsing lessons were missed. My memory of it is as vivid as if a transcript had been made of it by that inevitable rod which was in evidence, very keenly, that parents did not "hate" their sons, and that teachers loved their students, in the days gone. "Those good old days!" Praise the Lord! they are gone. Solomon had a large family. The Proverbs are attributed to him. No, I have no suggestions to offer the brethren. Infallibility instructs. I know of but two infallible men. One is Leo XIII. Modesty forbids my mention of the other. In fact, I am a little doubtful about Leo.

JOSEPH H. COTTRELL.

Reminiscences of an Old Itinerant—No. 2.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Trader's sermon was greatly owned and blessed of God. I knew of three who were awakened under that sermon that became preachers afterwards of no small importance. Mary went forward and knelt to be prayed for, among them a number from Baptist families. I was awakened as I never had been before, though I made no outward demonstration of my feeling, but resolved to set out with more earnestness than ever to seek my soul's salvation. When I saw the good fruit of Mr. Trader's sermon it occurred forcibly to my mind that he must be a good Christian, as God so manifestly blessed his sermon to the awakening of so many people, myself among the number. Mr. Trader was a Methodist, and I have been a good Christian, as I now believe he was, there might be other good Methodist Christians, and all my prejudices against the Methodists began to yield. I felt more than ever the importance of making a public profession of discipleship to Christ. But what could I do? I knew the Baptists would not take me into their church because I could not say that I was converted, and, strange as it may seem, I had not yet learned the way into the Methodist Church. Just then the Baptist Church was in a heated and unbrotherly controversy about free masonry, and were not at all in sympathy with a penitent seeker of religion. I do not remember that one of them said a word to me on the subject except my dear, precious mother, who had always given me line upon line and precept upon precept. The Methodist Church at Caneridge consisted of about twenty-five or thirty members, the most of them real live Christians. They lived in love and unity and often sang, "Help us to help each other, Lord; our little stock improve," etc. Already the budgings of a revival began to appear about Caneridge, and the members were in full sympathy with all who were serious on the subject of religion. Some of the good sisters especially were active in looking after the young people who were serious. They seldom missed an opportunity of giving me a breeze and a word of instruction and encouragement. I was more and more drawn toward the Methodists on account of the interest they manifested for my salvation. In the meantime there was a little camp meeting held near Redlick, and I spent a day or two at it. Moses Trader, the great preacher, was there, and, I suppose, by the request of the pastor, opened the door one day for the reception of members. He said in substance that inside of the church was the best place for all who were sincerely seeking religion; that they took in all their members on six months trial, and only required one condition previously, which was a sincere desire to be from the wrath to come and to be saved from their sins. This showed me the way to get into the Methodist Church, and I began to feel very Methodistically inclined. I said nothing to any one about it, but soon had my mind made up to join the church, which I did about three weeks after. As we rode together from the church, the class leader said to me, as I had joined the church, perhaps I would like to read the Discipline. To the best of my recollection this was the first time in my life I had ever heard there was such a thing as a Methodist Discipline. I did not know whether I would find it in the form of a tract, pamphlet or book. I did not, however, betray my ignorance, but told the class leader I would be glad to read it. When we got to his house he handed me a neat little volume bound in calf. On the title page it read, "The Doctrines and Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church." I took it home and immediately began very deliberately to read and analyze every sentence in it. I thought it a very religious book. So far as I understood it I endorsed its articles of religion, its polity and especially its general rules, and determined to be governed by them, as I have been from that day to this, never having willfully violated one of them. I was greatly benefited by the weekly prayer and class meetings of the church. My purpose to serve God continually gained strength, and I became more and more convinced of the great importance of being soundly converted and made a new creature in Christ Jesus. I was glad that I was in the church and had such associations as were congenial to the state of my heart. After reading the Discipline, I decided, if the Methodists lived according to that book they were true Bible Christians, and all my former prejudices against them soon passed away forever, and I felt that I had a very safe home among them. But I was not a thorough Methodist yet, and I propose to tell you in my next how the members bore with my ignorance, and persevered until they got me thoroughly Methodized.

Revival at Austin, Texas.

In a business letter to the office, sending some subscriptions to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, Mrs. Gov. Ireland thus speaks of the great revival in progress in the capital city of the Lone Star State:

We are in the midst of the grandest revival in our church that has ever been known in Austin. This is the fifth week of the meeting, and the interest still seems general and profound. We can not arrive at any thing like an estimate of the number of conversions, as many were backsliders, and some members of other churches. The number added to our church up to date is nearly 100, with others still to join. We are blessed with a holy, consecrated pastor, whom the Lord delights to honor.

We praise and magnify our beneficent Father for all his blessings. We are holding out our hands and reaching after still greater displays of his power and goodness. With kind regards and best wishes, for your work, I am,

Your friend and sister,

MRS. A. M. IRELAND.

MY BIRTHDAY.

BY ELLEN S. HARRIS.

Swiftly the years go by,
With gladness as they fly,
And ever from the sky
This message comes—
"Ye who adore the Lord,
Ye who love his word,
Though thickets fire and sword,
Must find your homes!"

If all were ever bright,
If there were never night,
How could you find the light
Of Bethlehem's star,
Which over racing waves
Of ocean, as it laves
The continents with graves,
Shines soft afar?

"All who shall call on heaven,
All to whom grace is given,
Must from the world be given
A heart that is true,
Must feel the weight most dire,
Yet know it lifts them higher,
Toward God and angel choir,
While earth is lost."

Thus from God's heaven
My soul would patient be,
Ascending Calvary,
With all its woes,
Knowing he looks down,
Dispelling every frown,
And holding high the crown
Of life's swift cross.

Surely the way is bright
With clustered angel light,
Which shines as pure and white,
Like petals above,
Guiding the soul that tries,
The rocks and reefs beside,
Till o'er the troubled tide,
It finds eternal life.

EDWARDS, MISS., March 20, 1886.

En Route to My First Circuit.

MR. EDITOR: At the request of my presiding elder, I send you an account of a night spent in the woods while on my way to my first circuit. When I arrived in Lake Providence, my late home, I thought of going across the swamp some fifteen miles, and spending a few days with my mother before leaving her to be absent one year. I knew the weather had been very cold, but had then moderated—had even rained twice; so not thinking of ice I saddled my horse and betook myself to my journey. My horse traveled well. Everything was looking well, and, as I bade my old friends "good-by," I thought of nothing save my new field of labor. It was two o'clock when I started. I had only fifteen miles to ride, and as my horse was fresh, I thought I could get home by six o'clock at the outside. The first hour's ride carried me one-third of the way home.

My road lay five miles northward from Lake Providence, then due west six miles across the swamp, and on west four miles in the hill country. As I have stated, the first hour carried me one-third of the entire distance home. Here I turned westward, and into the swamp I went. As I was advancing into the dreary part of the swamp, I was hailed by an old negro hunter, who told me I should find some ice. I learned from him that the swamp was pretty well covered with water, and that the road was a solid block of ice to the Moon, some five miles distant. I had been in Baton Rouge during the freeze, and had seen no ice so far on my journey, and I thought the old man was trying to fool me, so I told him I could get through and started on.

My thoughts ran for awhile on preaching, my whole thoughts were fixed on preaching, until my horse, crossing a small ditch, came near falling with me. "What is the matter with you, Charlie?" said I. But I soon saw that the ice was nearly thick enough to bear his weight, and also that it was very slippery, being covered with water. I soon got safe over the ditch, and resolved to quit the road, as it was almost impassable, but to keep near enough not to get lost. By so doing I avoided much ice. Soon I went thinking about the people on South Bossier circuit, to whom I was sent. My horse was perfectly gentle, but I kept both hands empty, holding only the reins, so I could lift up brush and pass along. I began to sing "Come thou Fount," and then I wanted to sing "And we are yet alive." I could not take out my hymn book because my hands were in use getting along—cleaning brush. However, I struck an old familiar tune, and at the end I would come in, "And bring me through this howling wilderness." Then I would pray it. On I went, fighting my way through ice, mud and brush until I came to a small bayou where the water was about three feet deep, and some forty yards wide, with ice thick enough to bear my horse's weight, and about four inches of water standing on the ice, which made it so slippery that it was difficult for a horse to walk. I went up the bayou about one mile to see if I could find a place where I could cross, but, finding none, I returned and went down the bayou for the same purpose, but only found the creek larger. Now, what could be done; the sun was down, in the middle of the swamp, and no way of getting across the bayou. To go back to Lake Providence was impossible.

When I could go no further, I did as the children of Israel did—cried unto the Lord for help. I got up from my knees and mounted my horse, and started across the bayou! I was half way over when the ice gave away and down went I! I barely succeeded in getting my feet out from under my horse before he fell. After I crossed the bayou I had no more trouble until I came to Macan, (a deep bayou, the boundary line between the two parishes, East and West Carroll) when, just as I expected, it being dark, the ferryman had gone home. I was left alone. I hobbled until eleven o'clock. No one came to my relief. At last I thought I would make one grand effort. "O, come quick I'll die!" No response came. I was getting cold; my feet were wet. Everything was a solid block of ice, and the wind whistling from the North. I remembered at that time having read that a person on the point of freezing to death can not feel the cold, being numb. I did not feel the cold, but I could not open my mouth so as to wind it, then it was that I became alarmed. I remembered having read of Richmond Nolly, who died many years ago—froze to death going to his circuit. I stamped around until twelve o'clock with no fire (I had no matches) when I resolved to lie down and go to sleep. I unsaddled my horse, used the blanket for a bed, my saddle for a pillow, and my overcoat for cover. Then, my head being ready, I got myself down and prayed. I prayed as I never prayed before, for I thought it was the last prayer I ever should pray in this life. After resigning myself into the hands of my Maker, I went to sleep. My spirit was soon in the dreamland. I thought, or rather dreamed, of nothing but comfortableness. I thought I was on some large steamboat, sitting by a good, warm stove. So the night passed off, dreary as it was. Vision after vision played before my mind, only to pass away and leave me in the same deplorable situation. At last the much wished for dawn appeared and I at once commenced hollering with all my might. The ferryman came; I was ferried over and snugly lodged by a large old fashioned wooden-dre. Deliverance had come!

RELIQUARY, LAKE PROVIDENCE, April 9, 1886.

An Incident.

BY MRS. L. GRADY SADLER.

Reading the notice, in a late ADVOCATE, of the death of Mrs. Gov. A. G. Brown, of Mississippi, recalled an incident which occurred in the days of my school-girl life, relating to this distinguished lady while she occupied the governor's mansion. Mrs. Brown's niece and myself were schoolmates. Melissa Brown often talked about her aunt and told me many things that made me love the lady. When we were in her presence she always said something that we would remember. She was dignified without being stiff, lively without being frivolous.

On New Year's Day the governor held a levee. That was a red-letter day in our school calendar. At the last one this incident occurred. Our principal teacher, Mrs. L. C. W. Judd, took a levy of us girls with her, and early in the morning repaired to the governor's mansion. Mrs. Brown soon came in, greeting us all in a very friendly manner, saying to Mrs. Judd, "I am so glad you have for the nonce veiled ceremony and brought the girls early. They can have a grand time to-day."

TURNING TO US, SHE SAID, "Now, girls, just consider yourselves at home, and act accordingly."

MISS MELISSA THEN CAME IN AND WE LEFT THE LADIES CHATTING, WHILE WE ENJOYED THE FREEDOM OF THE MANSION.

GUESTS WERE COMING AND GOING ALL DAY. A FEAST OF SWEET AS WELL AS FAT THINGS WAS SERVED AMPHIBIOUSLY IN THE SPECIOUS ROOMS UP STAIRS. MRS. BROWN SEEMED ALMOST OBVIOUSLY, HAVING AN EYE TO THE COMFORT AND PLEASURE OF ALL.

SHE WAS A BLACK VELVET DRESS, WHICH HUNG IN HEAVY, CRESCENT FOLD. I CAN NOT REMEMBER THAT SHE WORE ANY JEWELRY. IF SHE DID, IT WAS NOT CONSPICUOUS.

SOME SOFT LACE AT THE THROAT AND WRISTS WAS THE ONLY TRIMMING OF THE DRESS. HER BEAUTIFUL, LONG HAIR WAS BRAIDED AND COLLARED AROUND HER HEAD FORMING A CORONET. TO MY YOUTHFUL EYES SHE SEEMED A VERY QUEEN.

AFTER THE MANSION WAS LIGHTED UP AT NIGHT WE SAT WATCHING THE NEW ARRIVALS; SOME OF THE GIRLS MAKING REMARKS WHEN ANYTHING NOTICEABLE OCCURRED. AS WE WERE BUT "WALL FLOWERS," WE CLAIMED THAT PRIVILEGE. JUST THEN AN ELDERLY, COUNTERFEITED LOOKING GENTLEMAN ENTERED THE PARLOR, AND SAT DOWN IN THE NEAREST VACANT CHAIR. ONE OF THE GIRLS SAID, "LOOK, GIRLS, 'UNCLE BUTTERNUT' HAS ARRIVED." IN A FEW MOMENTS WE SAW MRS. BROWN MAJESTICALLY WALK TOWARD THE DOOR. PASSING US, SHE WENT DIRECTLY TO THE OLD GENTLEMAN. BOWING PROFOUNDLY SHE TOOK HIS PROFFERED HAND, GREETING HIM VERY CORDIALLY. WE WERE TOO FAR AWAY TO HEAR, BUT SHE TOOK HIS ARM AND PROMENADED AROUND AMONG THE GUESTS SOME TIME, AND THE LAST WE SAW OF THEM THEY WERE GOING UP THE WIDE STAIRCASE TO THE SUPERROOM.

"UNCLE BUTTERNUT" AND THE TALL LADY IN BLACK VELVET WERE THE EYECATCHER OF ALL EYES. TURNING TO MRS. MELISSA, I ASKED IF THE OLD GENTLEMAN WAS A RELATIVE OF THE "O, NO!" SHE LAUGHINGLY SAID, "HE IS ONE OF AUNTIE'S OLD NEIGHBORS AND LIVES DOWN IN COPIAH COUNTY, AND SHE WOULD MAKE MORE OVER ONE OF THEM ANY TIME THAN SHE WOULD OF THE BIGGEST MAN IN THE CAPITAL." AS SCHOOL-GIRLS, OUR CROWD WERE BUT "LOOKERS ON IN VENICE" THAT DAY AND NIGHT IN THAT vast assemblage of beauty and fashion; but nothing that I saw of that magnificent levee made so lasting an impression as did this kind deed of Mrs. Gov. Brown, showing, as it did, the charming grace and noble traits of her Christian character.

"AFTER MANY DAYS" ONE OF THE GIRLS SO KINDLY WELCOMED THAT BEAUTIFUL MORNING LAYS THIS HUMBLE FLOWER UPON HER GRAVE.

AN INQUIRY.

MR. EDITOR: I have been very much puzzled over this question: Was it Elijah or John the Baptist that appeared with Moses on the mount at the time of Christ's transfiguration? Dr. A. Clarke and others agree that it was Elijah that appeared with Moses and talked about the death of Christ, which should be accomplished at Jerusalem. They simply state it as a fact already established, and, consequently, bring no Scripture proofs to bear upon the subject. It seems that Elijah could comfort but little, having never passed through the portal of death. In Malachi we read, "I will send you Elias before the coming of the great and terrible day of the Lord;" and in Matthew xvii, 10-12, we find that John the Baptist was the Elias spoken of. Why Elias in the one should mean John the Baptist, and Elias in the other should signify Elijah the prophet, is something I can not understand. I would like to hear from Dr. T. A. S. Adams on the subject.

From the Work.

BOSTON STATION, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Allow a word from this nice, new, bright and promising field. Our organization is intact; congregations fine, intelligent, appreciative. We have prayer and class meetings, a ladies' weekly prayer meeting, a ladies' "Home Workers" (monthly), a ladies' missionary society (monthly). The good sisters lead the prayer meetings in turn, while Sister Standler is president of the Home Workers, and Sister Lewis is president of the missionary society. All, all work. Our brethren, too, are workers. Many of them pray at church, some of them in their families. We are moving up on this line. Hope to have "every house a house of prayer." It is a hope as yet. O! may the pastor realize it. Our Sunday-school is fine under the able superintendency of Bro. W. W. Guthrie, assisted by that peer of us, Col. L. M. Kidd. Lovely, smart children; how we wish to see them every one converted! Teachers prompt and faithful. Our choir is led by Prof. Ives, with Sister Lewis and Sister Florence Hodge ready and fully equipped at the organ, with quite a number of excellent voices. Our music is fine. We use our own hymn book. It is the best. We have collected in full our foreign and domestic missionary assessments and our delegate fund. The salary of presiding elder and pastor is almost up to date. We wish to run on the cash basis. "Pay as you go, pray as you go, and preach as you go," has been my motto and method for years.

ALREADY THE MEETING OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE IS SPOKEN OF, AND PROJECTED FOR. I SAW A GLOOMIER OTHER DAY IN A COOP MADE OF A CRATE IN KEEPING WELL, I DON'T THINK HE WILL KEEP TILL CONFERENCE, BUT THERE ARE OTHERS GROWING AROUND IN THE COUNTRY. THE CONFERENCE WILL HAVE A WARM WELCOME. O, YE LOUISIANA LITERATES, LOOK TOWARD RUSTON FOR GENUINE METHODIST HOSPITALITY. BUT ALL WE MONRM. SOME HAVE ALREADY "FALLEN ASLEEP."

WE HAVE HAD TWENTY-FOUR ADDITIONS SINCE CONFERENCE, MOST OF THEM HAVING HAD MEMBERSHIP AT OTHER POINTS. "GATHER UP THE FRAGMENTS, THAT NOTHING BE WASTED." TO CONSERVE, TO CONFIRM, IS ALL IMPORTANT. WE HAVE HAD PROTRACTED SERVICES FOR NEARLY TWO WEEKS. GOOD IS DONE, BUT NOT MUCH ON THE SURFACE. WE NEED A TIDAL WAVE OF SALVATION. SO MANY BACKSLIDERS. WE HAVE HAD GOOD AND EDIFYING PREACHING FROM OUR VENERABLE BROTHER, REV. H. J. HARRIS, OF ELLISVILLE, MISS. (COME AGAIN); ALSO REV. C. F. STIVERS, J. A. MILLER, AND OUR LABORIOUS AND EARNEST PREACHING ELDER, REV. J. T. SAWYER. ALL OF THESE BROTHERS WE LOVE, AND HAVE ENJOYED THEIR MINISTRATIONS SO MUCH, AND CONCERNING THEM WE FEEL FULLY AUTHORIZED TO SAY, "MY WORD SHALL NOT RETURN UNTO ME VOID, BUT IT SHALL ACCOMPLISH THAT WHEREOF I SENT IT," FOR AS MUCH AS YE KNOW THAT YOUR LABOR IS NOT IN VAIN IN THE LORD. A PARAGRAPHS IN THE GLIMMERING DISTANCE. IT GLIMMERS. MAY IT BE A REALITY! A KINDER AND MORE EXCELLENT PEOPLE I HAVE NEVER FAILED AMONG. PRAY FOR US.

Mixing Prophets.

MR. EDITOR: I write in quest of light and information concerning some facts of Bible history. Anything coming from the pen of our elders has great weight upon the minds of our younger brethren. If they make mistakes, we may be misled, and it is with due deference and modesty that we would dare to call in question any of their statements. However, in a recent issue of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is a very interesting article from the pen of our venerable friend and brother, Rev. William Spillman, in which he alludes to the rebuilding of the city and walls of Jerusalem, and makes Jeremiah the leading spirit upon that occasion. Does he mean Jeremiah the prophet? He is the only Jeremiah commonly known and spoken of in Bible history. Again, in a recent issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate, is a very readable article copied from the Alabama Advocate, in which the writer alludes to Jeremiah as riding around the walls of Jerusalem by night. Does he also have reference to the "weeping prophet?" These are the questions I would ask. It seems almost incredible to my mind that brethren of their size and extensive learning could make a mistake of this kind. It is in no critical spirit that I write. According to my knowledge and understanding of Scripture history, it was Nehemiah who was the leader and organizer of God's people during the rebuilding and restoring of the city and walls of Jerusalem. I read nothing of Jeremiah in this connection. It was also Nehemiah who rode upon a beast around the walls of Jerusalem by night, surveying the ruins thereof. (Nehemiah ii, 12, 13, 14, 15.) I have not yet read of Jeremiah the prophet, or any other of Jeremiah, doing this self same thing. The days of the last kings of Judah, seventy years, if I am not mistaken, before the arrival of the first company of returning captives to restore their temple and city. At the time of the last captivity, in the days of Zedekiah, Jeremiah must have been an old man; and the last we hear of him, he was carried by the rebellious Jews into Egypt, where it is supposed that he died.

Now, Mr. Editor, am I mistaken, or are these older brethren? If I am mistaken, then I only wish to be enlightened. If the mistake is theirs, then, coming from such a weighty and authentic source, it is a very grave historical error to be printed in our church papers, and sent forth to the public without correction. It has bothered my mind somewhat. When I saw first the allusion made by Bro. Spillman, I did not think much of it, thinking, perhaps, it was a slip of the pen on the part of the Doctor, or a mistake of the printer; but when the same apparent mistake appears again from another important source, I can not imagine how two learned men can make so gross a mistake, or how two printers, so far apart, could do so either; and I am constrained to enquire if my knowledge of Bible history is correct.

It may be, however, that the brethren are right; that Jeremiah was one of the names by which Nehemiah was known and called. If so, I have no knowledge of the fact. If I am mistaken, and seem presumptuous in this calling in question any of the statements or allusions made by those who are older and possessed of more learning than myself, I make a polite bow and retire. Let the brethren answer, or you, Mr. Editor, as you see fit.

Sunset on the Buffalo.

BY CECILIA.

Our last evening at "Smithland!" To-morrow we leave our temporary home, to which we were becoming somewhat attached, to go to the home of the first good friends who greeted us on our arrival at Church; for the doctor has advised us to leave, at once, our river-side "campment," ere we fall victims to the insidious foe of this good people—malaria. Again I witness the transfiguration of Smithland—another entrancing panorama—"Sunset on the Buffalo." Involuntarily I burst into song:

"Beyond the sunset's radiant glow, Thy life is brighter world, I know—"

When I pause, for the first sweet thrill of the alighting falls on my ears, and it seems like a messenger of love from "home, sweet home." Perhaps the birds are carrying sweetest whispers around my dear wild-wood home, while the loved ones think tenderly and yearningly of the absent "pilgrim and stranger."

Ah, yes; I love to think that their eyes are now fixed on the same glowing sunset; that they (mother, brothers and sisters) are now gazing on the scene before me, speaking in soft loving tones of one whose thoughts and affections cling to the old home, trifling around their very hearts like ivy to the sheltering wall tower. One, I fancy, is even now singing in sad, sweet notes, "Sweet hour of prayer," while the other watches the changing scene, her thoughts flying as a swift-winged bird to the sister who has been her care and comfort for years. I love to think that mother—sweet, gentle mother—is now at this "sweet hour of prayer" praying for me; and I sing again, as I watch the sunset:

"Sweet hour of prayer, sweet hour of prayer, Thy wings shall my petition bear."
The sunset sky looks like a sea of molten gold, the last golden rays touching softly the rude bell tower, kissing to rest the rippling waves of the tawny Buffalo, toward which I see a flock of gray-plumed water fowl winging their way, swooping gracefully lower and lower, until their expanded wings droop, cleaving the waves that reflect, like a mirror, the numerous fowl that are already rocking, with folded wings, "On the bosom of the river, Where the sun unfolds its quiver."

Until the dark, deep waters seem as a broad ribbon of "old gold," fringed with green-gray moss—the willows and sweet gum being tufted with mistletoe and moss, the latter swaying gently and gracefully in the evening breeze. Slowly the "radiant glow" is fading, like the last sweet smile on the face of the dying, or the flames on the altar of the evening sacrifice, leaving the clouds like pale ashes of roses, until "the twilight's purple rim" shuts out the last ray reflected from the crown of "the monarch of the day."

One by one the stars come out, like buds bursting into bloom and beauty, until the fields of heaven gleam with the watch-fires of the night. (When a little child, and still an idle dreamer, I loved to think of the moon and stars as God's lamps to light the world—the angels being the lamp-lighters.)

After the sunset I watch the stars and the silver crescent, until a cloud, soft and white like a bridal veil, is drawn over all—then passes on, like the white wings of a ship sailing over the Southern sea.

Down by the river I hear the mid nightingales (original—"all rights reserved") and the cry is echoed along the margin of the river—"Knee deep! knee deep! knee deep!"—until it becomes monotonous, and I turn from my musing and leave the river to go singing (like Tommyson's song of the brook) "on and on forever," reflecting on its moonlit waters the "starry firmament," and I think of "the beautiful river," "the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High," where the trees of life grow in beauty along its margin, "whose leaves are for the healing of the nations."

would like to hear from Dr. T. A. S. Adams on the subject.

From the Work.

BOSTON STATION, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Allow a word from this nice, new, bright and promising field. Our organization is intact; congregations fine, intelligent, appreciative. We have prayer and class meetings, a ladies' weekly prayer meeting, a ladies' "Home Workers" (monthly), a ladies' missionary society (monthly). The good sisters lead the prayer meetings in turn, while Sister Standler is president of the Home Workers, and Sister Lewis is president of the missionary society. All, all work. Our brethren, too, are workers. Many of them pray at church, some of them in their families. We are moving up on this line. Hope to have "every house a house of prayer." It is a hope as yet. O! may the pastor realize it. Our Sunday-school is fine under the able superintendency of Bro. W. W. Guthrie, assisted by that peer of us, Col. L. M. Kidd. Lovely, smart children; how we wish to see them every one converted! Teachers prompt and faithful. Our choir is led by Prof. Ives, with Sister Lewis and Sister Florence Hodge ready and fully equipped at the organ, with quite a number of excellent voices. Our music is fine. We use our own hymn book. It is the best. We have collected in full our foreign and domestic missionary assessments and our delegate fund. The salary of presiding elder and pastor is almost up to date. We wish to run on the cash basis. "Pay as you go, pray as you go, and preach as you go," has been my motto and method for years.

ALREADY THE MEETING OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE IS SPOKEN OF, AND PROJECTED FOR. I SAW A GLOOMIER OTHER DAY IN A COOP MADE OF A CRATE IN KEEPING WELL, I DON'T THINK HE WILL KEEP TILL CONFERENCE, BUT THERE ARE OTHERS GROWING AROUND IN THE COUNTRY. THE CONFERENCE WILL HAVE A WARM WELCOME. O, YE LOUISIANA LITERATES, LOOK TOWARD RUSTON FOR GENUINE METHODIST HOSPITALITY. BUT ALL WE MONRM. SOME HAVE ALREADY "FALLEN ASLEEP."

WE HAVE HAD TWENTY-FOUR ADDITIONS SINCE CONFERENCE, MOST OF THEM HAVING HAD MEMBERSHIP AT OTHER POINTS. "GATHER UP THE FRAGMENTS, THAT NOTHING BE WASTED." TO CONSERVE, TO CONFIRM, IS ALL IMPORTANT. WE HAVE HAD PROTRACTED SERVICES FOR NEARLY TWO WEEKS. GOOD IS DONE, BUT NOT MUCH ON THE SURFACE. WE NEED A TIDAL WAVE OF SALVATION. SO MANY BACKSLIDERS. WE HAVE HAD GOOD AND EDIFYING PREACHING FROM OUR VENERABLE BROTHER, REV. H. J. HARRIS, OF ELLISVILLE, MISS. (COME AGAIN); ALSO REV. C. F. STIVERS, J. A. MILLER, AND OUR LABORIOUS AND EARNEST PREACHING ELDER, REV. J. T. SAWYER. ALL OF THESE BROTHERS WE LOVE, AND HAVE ENJOYED THEIR MINISTRATIONS SO MUCH, AND CONCERNING THEM WE FEEL FULLY AUTHORIZED TO SAY, "MY WORD SHALL NOT RETURN UNTO ME VOID, BUT IT SHALL ACCOMPLISH THAT WHEREOF I SENT IT," FOR AS MUCH AS YE KNOW THAT YOUR LABOR IS NOT IN VAIN IN THE LORD. A PARAGRAPHS IN THE GLIMMERING DISTANCE. IT GLIMMERS. MAY IT BE A REALITY! A KINDER AND MORE EXCELLENT PEOPLE I HAVE NEVER FAILED AMONG. PRAY FOR US.

Mixing Prophets.

MR. EDITOR: I write in quest of light and information concerning some facts of Bible history. Anything coming from the pen of our elders has great weight upon the minds of our younger brethren. If they make mistakes, we may be misled, and it is with due deference and modesty that we would dare to call in question any of their statements. However, in a recent issue of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is a very interesting article from the pen of our venerable friend and brother, Rev. William Spillman, in which he alludes to the rebuilding of the city and walls of Jerusalem, and makes Jeremiah the leading spirit upon that occasion. Does he mean Jeremiah the prophet? He is the only Jeremiah commonly known and spoken of in Bible history. Again, in a recent issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate, is a very readable article copied from the Alabama Advocate, in which the writer alludes to Jeremiah as riding around the walls of Jerusalem by night. Does he also have reference to the "weeping prophet?" These are the questions I would ask. It seems almost incredible to my mind that brethren of their size and extensive learning could make a mistake of this kind. It is in no critical spirit that I write. According to my knowledge and understanding of Scripture history, it was Nehemiah who was the leader and organizer of God's people during the rebuilding and restoring of the city and walls of Jerusalem. I read nothing of Jeremiah in this connection. It was also Nehemiah who rode upon a beast around the walls of Jerusalem by night, surveying the ruins thereof. (Nehemiah ii, 12, 13, 14, 15.) I have not yet read of Jeremiah the prophet, or any other of Jeremiah, doing this self same thing. The days of the last kings of Judah, seventy years, if I am not mistaken, before the arrival of the first company of returning captives to restore their temple and city. At the time of the last captivity, in the days of Zedekiah, Jeremiah must have been an old man; and the last we hear of him, he was carried by the rebellious Jews into Egypt, where it is supposed that he died.

Now, Mr. Editor, am I mistaken, or are these older brethren? If I am mistaken, then I only wish to be enlightened. If the mistake is theirs, then, coming from such a weighty and authentic source, it is a very grave historical error to be printed in our church papers, and sent forth to the public without correction. It has bothered my mind somewhat. When I saw first the allusion made by Bro. Night, like a sable bird, has spread its starry wings over the landscape, and lately illumined by "the sunset's radiant glow," and with feelings and sentiment, I know I shall never see again the "Sunset on the Buffalo."

Sub and Super.

I think it is Emerson who somewhere says that enthusiasm is a characteristic feature of every great movement in the world's history. The philosophy of this statement is apparent. Men, as a class, drift idly down the stream of human events. Born forward with the sweep of the mighty tide, they little heed the troid of things about them. It requires industry, and courage to resist this onward tendency to idleness and uselessness. Enthusiasm is a necessary concomitant with each of these elements. The world looks with distrust and suspicion upon the enthusiastic man, especially if he be an enthusiast concerning spiritual things, and is continually confounding true enthusiasm with fanaticism. It does not require a lengthened experience or deep insight to detect a difference as marked as day and night. The distinction is patent. A cool, calculating non-enthusiast may perform wonders in the science of mathematics, or arrive at marvellous deductions in a realm of abstractions. There is a good deal about such characters. Holmes says he imagined he "heard wheels clicking in the tracks of the mathematical genius. I get impatient with those people who are geared like clocks, always hearing the same face, and each day marking the same time hour after hour. I would more admire a nervous, busy individual made on the locomotive order, even if there is danger occasionally from steam or general wreck."

Like most good things in this world, enthusiasm is susceptible of cultivation. It can be suppressed until the person attempting anything works like an automaton, with no vigor, no hope. If, then, this element is essential to the success and vitality of every enterprise, should not the Christian ministry co-operate to keep it flame aglow, using every means living and human at their command to the end. The machinery of our church from a human standpoint, is well nigh perfect. There is in this organization man for every place, a place for every man. It boasts of its flexibility, having a ministry for all classes. Some of its ministers work so long the same grooves that these become worn and smooth. Then he wishes for help, that enthusiasm, holy enthusiasm may be begotten and continued along the line of action. Inactivity is trying to men's souls. It fetters and represses every noble emotion. Oh, the people could hear more and secure more of our leading men! Preaching in charge would draw more closely the gridle, and go the work with renewed ardor, and the blessings of our God would rest like a glorious benediction upon the church.

CORNWALL, LA., April 8, 1886.

To the Stewards.

The stewardship is one of the most honorable and responsible of the local offices in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Its duties are more numerous and varied than those pertaining to any other office, and not one of them is unimportant. The Discipline defines them thus:

"The duties of stewards are: to take an exact account of all the money and other resources received for the support of the preachers in the circuit, station, and to apply the same as the Discipline directs; to make an accurate return of every expenditure of money whether for the preachers, or the members of the society; to seek to be ready and disinterested in order to relieve and comfort them; to inform the preachers of any sick or disorderly persons; to tell the preachers what they think wrong in them; to attend the quarterly meetings of the circuit, station, and the leaders' and stewards' meetings to give advice, if asked, planning the circuit; to attend conferences for the application of money to churches; to give counsel in matters of arbitration; to provide the elements for the Lord's Supper; to write circular letters to the societies in the circuit, and to them to greater liberality in their offerings; and to be ready when occasion requires, the state of the temporal concerns of the church."

From this it will be seen that what their chief duty is to have the church so much of the church finances as pertains to ministerial support, there committed to their hands. A careful other interest is also demanded when occasion requires, the state of the temporal concerns of the church.

THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1886.

As we go to press an Eastern war seems imminent. Greece seems determined to resent any infringement of her asserted rights, and in order thereto is hurrying forces to the front. England has sent a circular to the powers proposing to withdraw diplomatic relations with the little kingdom unless she immediately disarms her forces. In the meantime the attitude of Russia and Austria is the cause for much suspicious comment.

Intense interest in English politics seems unabated. Following close upon his proposals for home rule in Ireland, Mr. Gladstone has introduced a measure looking to the purchase of land by tenant farmers. Popular opinion is possibly against the radical measures of the great statesman, but he shows no signs of compromise or surrender. His home rule proposals may be adopted in an amended form. But whether or not, they will be the basis for the solution of the Irish problem in the future. The defections from his Cabinet and the bitter opposition of Mr. Chamberlain, Lord Hartington and other former party associates, do not in the least dampen the spirit of the "grand old man." His eloquence has yet the strange fascinating power of a magic wand. The second reading of his bill has been fixed for May 12.

In a well-considered "leader" the Wesleyan Christian Advocate endorses the suggestion to observe April 30, as a day of fasting and prayer for the approaching session of the General Conference. It is certainly all important that we rely upon Divine guidance in administering the affairs of the church. When personal ambitions displace profound consecration, Zion will mourn throughout her borders. Our experience and opinions quite agree with Dr. Potter's, as expressed in these paragraphs:

"Nine men ask about the men to be elected at the next General Conference, to one that inquires about the measures likely to be adopted. This fact indicates too much relative interest in the men as compared with the measures, and the ripe fruit of this unequal interest will be to leave the Conference without a quorum as soon as the elections are over. We would not underestimate the importance of electing the right men to office, but wise legislation in many matters is of more consequence. Men die, but bad laws live on, working damage through many generations. The inefficiency of one officer may be overcome by the influence of others and the general strength of the church, but a bad measure may do much damage in defiance of the aggregate wisdom of the executive officers. Let the church, then, pray that the General Conference may not exhaust the grace of the Divine guidance in the election of Bishops and other officers."

Accepting an invitation from the Temperance Reform Club of Vicksburg, to deliver an address on Friday evening last, we had the pleasure of renewing old friendships and associations. En route thither, Thursday night was spent in Jackson and an exhortation delivered to a large congregation in the West Jackson Engine-house. Dr. Andrews has a fine meeting in progress, with every prospect of the largest results. Rev. A. F. Watkins came to his assistance, after Bro. Penn left, and the services continue with growing interest. Several have already been added to the church, with a number of penitents at the altar. We were glad to learn that the West Jackson Sunday-school has prospered greatly. From small beginnings, it has begun to rival the largest schools of the city.

The day was delightfully spent among the friends and parishioners of other years. They shall ever have a chief place in memory and affection. It was in the Hill City that loving hands and prayerful hearts, and ceaseless vigils and skillful treatment, saved our life from the wasting pestilence. With the passing years and growing cares, those friendships lose nothing of sacred tenderness. Despite a very inclement evening a good audience gathered in the Baptist Church to hear a discourse on the question of the hour in Mississippi. A night under the hospitable roof of Bro. Paxton and calls at Dr. Marshall's, Dr. Hunt's, Pastor Woodward's and other's filled up the short time allotted to a pleasant visit.

Romanism Reforming.

Our Roman Catholic neighbor, the Morning Star, of last week, contains an elaborate editorial article on the decrees of the late Plenary Council. Since they have received the Pope's sanction and have been officially promulgated, they of course become the law by which the "faithful" are to be guided. We quoted last week the decree on the subject of the sale of intoxicating liquors. The members engaged in that business were exhorted to seek other more honorable employment, or falling in that were commanded to close their houses on the Sabbath day. Commenting on that decree the Morning Star says:

The duty of Catholics is therefore plain in this matter. The citizens of this city and State are practically the lawmakers. As lawmakers they are bound to provide laws for the essential good of the commonwealth. Now the very life of a Christian commonwealth is worship, and what appertains to worship. It is our duty therefore to join hands with our Protestant fellow Christians to have our grogshops, saloons, beer gardens, et hoc genus omne, closed on the Lord's Day. Always provided that they abstain from those wild and unpracticed schemes which is so common among certain of their hot-headed leaders.

We are glad to hail as collaborators in this field of moral reform the priests and "faithful" of the Roman Catholic Church. If they can be induced to obey in letter and spirit the injunction of the Plenary Council and the "Holy Father," the days of the iniquitous liquor traffic in this country are at an end. Possibly seven-eighths of the saloon keepers in the United States are directly connected with that church. So if the church condemns the traffic its support is forever gone. We would have much preferred for the council to have made a positive, unconditional deliverance on the iniquity and enormity of the traffic. Instead of exhorting it should have forbidden. It is a stain upon the church that she will in any sense or in any instance officially tolerate the crying evil. Her altars and cautions should be free from such a shame.

Another fact in the above extract is worthy of comment. The Star speaks of us "our Protestant fellow-Christians." That is a fraternal recognition quite surprising. Instead, therefore, of denouncing all Protestant heretics to endless perdition we are acknowledged to be "Christians." Surely light is dawning. It will be a happy day for the Roman Catholic Church when such enlarged liberality of thought and speech shall characterize her pulpit and pew. Her ignorant members are led to think of Protestants as the very incarnation of all that is hateful in the sight of God and detestable to true religion. The above indicates that association is doing wholesome work—that intolerance is yielding to increasing intelligence.

We know of no better place in which to inaugurate this reform than New Orleans. Here the Roman Catholic Church has been in the ascendancy from the beginning and for many years dominated social, political and religious thought. While every year is marking the steady advance of Protestantism and the comparative decrease of Romanism, if not numerically, yet socially, commercially and religiously, that church is here a great power. Nearly every saloon keeper and owner of a beer garden in the city is either a member or under its direct influence. As the church decrees, so will be the saloons. If the Archbishop wields the power he possesses, we may expect the reproach of New Orleans to be removed, and every saloon to be closed on the Lord's day. The Sabbath desecration, so long characteristic of this city, lies at the door of the Catholic Church. Now that the Plenary Council has inaugurated a reform, may we hope for improvement? We applaud the earnest words of the Star and shall look eagerly for the evidences of a revival of conscience on this vital question.

Our brethren of the Mission Rooms in Nashville have footed their columns for the year ending April 1, 1886. For foreign missions, $230,000. This is the highest record our church has ever made. Let us praise the Lord.

The opium habit is alarmingly on the increase in this country. Whether the presence of the Chinese here has much to do with it or not, the sad fact remains. In rendering a verdict as to the death of a young woman in New York last week, who had died from the effects of smoking ten pipes of opium in a Chinese laundry, the coroner's jury took occasion to say:

"We, the jury, from the evidence, believe that the practice of opium smoking is too common, and in the interest of public morals would strongly recommend the suppression of opium dens in this city."

Unauthorized Censure.

We find the following in the editorial columns of the Western Christian Advocate:

We have not seen in the papers of the South, even the most pious of them, such denunciations as we had reason to expect of the court-house massacre at Carrollton. It was the most outrageous crime of the month, for it was not merely murder by wholesale, but was murder in a court of so-called justice, and while the alleged offenses of the men who were murdered were under investigation. If the religious press of the South is silent now, the country will be forced to believe that the conscience of that section is still in chains. To be dumb in the presence of such a crime is to exhibit moral insensibility or cowardice.

Certainly Dr. Bayliss has been nothing or he would not have written the above. This paper spoke out freely and fearlessly on the massacre in the next issue after it occurred and again the second week. We sought not to condone the outrage, but to ascertain the facts and earnestly to condemn it. As this paper circulates officially in that locality, we were expected to pronounce upon the outburst, and did not hesitate to do so.

The intimation that the conscience of this section "is still in chains," betrays a partnership of which we thought our readers incapable. It is an impeachment of the Christian manhood and womanhood of this people. From a life-long residence in this latitude and a somewhat extended observation, we have witnessed no special fettering of conscience. Is there so much higher standard of morals and untrammelled freedom of conscience in the neighborhood of Cincinnati as to justify such comparisons? With only two or three exceptions, the entire secular press of Mississippi has condemned in the severest terms the bloody outrage. And yet an entire section is censured because of the censor's lack of information. Such innocence is unpardonable when we turn home.

A Prosperous Preacher.

A press dispatch from Kansas City, April thirteenth, announces the good financial fortune of a New Orleans preacher. The Rev. David Walk, pastor of the Christian Church on Camp street, of this city, about eight years ago invested $1500 in five acres of land at the Eastern limit of Kansas City. He was at that time pastor of a church in the growing city. On Monday of last week he sold that land for $60,250. Quite a good percent on a wise investment. Bro. Walk's friends in this city cordially congratulate him on the successful turn in his worldly affairs. But in this connection we must be suffered a word of exhortation.

1. This is no encouragement for preachers to invest in Kansas City or elsewhere. We hope there will not be a general emigration or transfer of the clergy to the great West intent on such a fortune. It is given to very few preachers to succeed as financiers. They have too little time to spare from their high calling.

2. It is difficult, though not impossible, for a preacher to do full work with a full pocket. Those are the exceptions who preserve in wealth the fidelity displayed in poverty. It is not necessary to be poor in order to be pious, but rich preachers are tempted to spiritually impoverish the pew—allow the people to suffer a famine of God's word.

3. Seek diligently the paths of appointed pastoral toil and all these things will be added in sufficient measure. Bro. Walk never turned aside from his faithful, legitimate work as a pastor to make money. While industriously discharging the duties of his high calling, he incidentally made a small investment that has yielded a large return. That was the part of wisdom. We ought not to be improvident or inconsiderate of our temporal welfare. But it should be secondary. Let our divine employ consume us, and worldly affairs incidentally engage us.

The Overflow of Methodism.

In an old issue of the New York Methodist we find an article signed D. C., written no doubt by Dr. Daniel Curry. The following facts are suggestive as to the wealth of our contributions to the ministry and membership of other churches and at the same time maintaining a remarkable ratio of increase in our own ranks. We make a short extract:

Without going back from the present time, or passing beyond our own city, we find a remarkable list of first-class non-Methodist churches served by ex-Methodist ministers. Within the range of a mile, north and south, and between the Fourth and Fifth Avenues of this city, we find Holy Trinity (Episcopalian), Rector W. F. Watkins, D. D., late of New York East Conference; Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, pastor, the Rev. Dr. Armitage, formerly of the Troy Conference; Church of the Covenant (Presbyterian), pastor, the Rev. Marvin Richardson Vincent

(the son and grandson of two leading names of the New York Conference, both of which he bears), himself, also, for some time in the same ministry. The Rev. Robert Collier, of the Church of the Messiah (Unitarian), was for many years an English Wesleyan local preacher. The Rev. Mr. Davis, who has just now vacated the Madison Avenue Congregational Church, to be replaced by Dr. Newman, was a somewhat popular Methodist preacher in the Baltimore, New York East and the New York Conferences. The Rev. Mr. Lloyd, of the Central Congregational Church (Madison Avenue near Forty-seventh Street), it is well known, quite recently was a member of the New York Conference, and pastor of the Washington Square Church in this city. Dr. J. C. Leland of St. Mark's Church (Episcopal), was if we recollect rightly, for some time a Methodist minister, and so was Dr. A. M. H. of the 'Church of strangers.' Here, then, are nine names of chief city pastors, all of whom were once of us, but are no more.

Andover and the Temperance Reform.

I have just been reading "My Study," by Dr. Austin Phelps. It is a book of miscellaneous essays, embracing such topics as Retribution, Second Probation, Inspiration, A Study of the Episcopal Church, etc. The first essay, "My Study," which gives the title to the book, is a historical paper, all about the Andover Seminary, the great men who presided over it during its early history, and the great measures which those men had the honor of setting on foot. Aside from the entertaining style of the "Study," abounding as it does in fine passages of humor, and lively descriptions, it is rich in historical information on these very subjects that are uppermost in the public mind to-day.

How many, for instance, are aware that it was here in this Andover college that the project to send missionaries to the heathen was first thought of in America? That Judson, Nott, Newell and Miles, the pioneer missionaries, were in the seminary, and asked for support in their resolve to preach the gospel to the heathen? Here also originated the monthly Concert of Prayer for the conversion of the world, the annual Concert of Prayer for colleges, those beginning in the dissemination of religious literature which culminated in the American Tract Society, the American Education Society, which "has been in operation seventy years," and "has aided in their training for the pulpit more than seven thousand men"—"more than one-half of the ordained missionaries of the American Board," as well as many pastors of metropolitan churches, and many presidents and professors of our schools of learning." And here, too, it is said, was started that most powerful adjunct of the modern pulpit, the religious newspaper. The Boston Record, the original of "The Congregationalist," was "the pioneer of all kindred publications in the world."

But not to stop to record other great enterprises of this Andover group, let it be said that here, too, was started the great temperance reform movement. "It is not generally known," says Dr. Phelps, "that all the organizations now existing for the promotion of abstinence from intoxicating liquors owe their origin intimately to the Andover Conference." That was the first organized movement in the world founded on the pledge of entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks.

There had been other temperance societies, but they only touched the surface of the matter. They were founded upon a principle, not only distinct from, but opposed to abstinence. "The moderate use of intoxicants they encouraged." The result was that "intoxication among gentlemen of culture and refinement was too frequent to excite surprise, or provoke censure. Everybody was expected to make the slip sometimes. Lawyers came to the bar, and judges to the bench, and ministers to the pulpit, occasionally in a state of inebriation. Young preachers at their ordination were sometimes charged not to allow themselves to be intoxicated by the hospitality of their parishioners." "The popular theory was, that to abstain wholly from spirituous liquors was cowardice; to remove the deacons from the sideboard was parsimony, and to pledge one's self or others to total abstinence was a sin against the example of our Lord." "The pledge of one clerical association in Massachusetts whose members were frightened at the increase of drunkenness among themselves, ran thus: 'We solemnly pledge ourselves not to use more of intoxicating beverages than we conscientiously believe to be good for us!'"

Dr. Phelps goes on to say that "it is more than a twice told tale; that New England rum and New England missionaries went abroad in the same brig, and nobody saw the force of it." But the Andover's was the true temperance principle—to keep the temperate temperate by total abstinence. An European writer says of this: "On whose mind this great truth first rose is not known. Who ever he was, peace to his memory! He has done more for the world than he who enriched it by the discovery of a continent."

So we who are at work in this great cause believe, and the contrast in public sentiment on the liquor question now and then shows how well the cause is succeeding. We are very thankful for that Andover-born total abstinence principle, and then we are equally thankful for the later-born idea of closing up the saloons—not merely of fortifying with a pledge, but of taking away the temptation.

Better Stop Blowing the Coals.

"The curse causeless shall not come," said the wise man long ago. When mankind are shocked by such wholesale manslaughter as that which occurred at Carrollton, Miss., not many weeks since, the thoughtful may well enquire for a cause. How is the killing of more than a dozen negroes in a court-room during a trial to be accounted for? The killing was not accidental, nor directly in self-defense. What were the causes of the killing? I do not now enquire whether the killing was justifiable or not, but what were the causes which brought it on. The reasons for an act may be very bad ones, and yet be its real reasons. Great moral demonstrations, whether good or bad, have their producing causes, just as other events have. Great revivals of religion are produced by preaching the gospel. Such outrages upon humanity, as that at Carrollton, proceed from a spell of a different kind. I take the facts from the Clarion, of Jackson, Miss., as copied from a report in the New Orleans Picayune.

First, whisky was evidently at the bottom of the whole affair. "The immediate cause of the affair was that a gentleman from Leflore county, a friend of Mr. Liddell, being decidedly under the influence of drink, was hit over the head by Ed. Brown." The local law makers set up whisky for sale, and does not everybody know that drunkenness, fighting and killing are among the natural and common effects of the sale?

Secondly, in consequence of the above mentioned difficulty, "a shooting affair, in which twenty or more shots with double action Colt's revolvers," took place. "It is a miracle how the parties escaped death, as they were only a few feet apart and the weapons used were all of large calibre and of the best make." Such weapons are a common article of commerce in Mississippi and in most other States of the Union. They are made to imperil or destroy human life. Most bad men are apt to carry them concealed, while good men are prevented from carrying them by prohibitory law. Pistols fired by whisky either do or cause most of the unjustifiable killing of men in this country. But for the pistol battle in the street, the great swelling threats and the sweeping affidavits of the Browns had never brought on the massacre in the court-house.

It is worthy of note that the father of the Browns being three-fourths and the mother one-half Indian, the sons were five-eighths Indian blood. The law of Mississippi forbids the selling of intoxicating drinks to an Indian, yet the testimony is that "Ed. Brown was a bar-room bully." If they had not sold the Indians whisky they had not become the incarnate devils they are represented to have been. These preparatory steps bring on the slaughter in the court-house. Nor should the good citizens of this country shut their eyes to the fact that the great uncertainty of obtaining justice, and the inevitable delays usually attending all efforts to procure it through the ordinary channels of law, have produced a too widespread disposition among our people to take the execution of law into their own hands. Having pointed out the foundation facts, my object is accomplished. Society furnishes the implements of evil, and bad men use them. He who furnishes willingly and unnecessarily the means which not only facilitate, but prompt the commission of crime becomes a participant therein. In the court-room Ed. Brown's pistol began the shooting and ushered in the bloody scene. Had the one hundred armed men known there were no pistols in the court-room (and men would not have gone into court with visible weapons), they would doubtless have selected the few victims of their displeasure, and not have slain the innocent. Pistols caused the rifleman to fire indiscriminately. "Drugs, too, no doubt fired the brains of all who participated in the final conflict. Society furnishes whisky and pistols; bad men use them, as they always have done, to destroy themselves and others. Society blows the coal in the shavings, and then stands aghast when the conflagration sweeps the city. Better stop blowing the coals!"

Another Word about the German Work.

"The German work has not met expectation. Nearly all the fields have been on the mission-list for many years, nor does it seem probable that they will ever become peculiarly independent." This remark was made by one of the most prominent preachers of our church. It is true. But the following is the truth:

1. As a rule, the German immigrants are poor. Gathering them into our churches we can not expect pecuniary aid from them. It is sacred duty to give the gospel to the poor.

2. By the time the Germans have accumulated a sufficiency, enabling them to assist in carrying on church work, they are usually Americanized to such a degree that they prefer to join American churches. This appears, that decay sets in when ordinary circumstances succeed where would have been assured.

3. From the above it becomes evident, that the German preachers have a mission solely to the recent immigrants. But immigration in most of the Southern States rapidly diminishing, our labors will terminate soon.

It would be wicked to reproach our German preachers with lack of ability of coping with existing difficulties. "See our success in Mexico," remarked a brother. The common sense would do us injustice. The Mexican fields will never suffer loss of members because of aid rendered having become Americanized to such a degree as to feel at home in American churches. No.

But now the General Conference must devise measures and means of branching out, enabling us to do pioneer work throughout the house of our church, even there, where the paucity of Germans would not warrant the organization of German churches. If things are left to quo, speedy decay is inevitable.

As to what should be done, I am not now prepared to say. If great success could be assured by reorganizing our various German fields into American Annual Conferences, whose bounds they are located, I, for one, would heartily support such a measure. As for our German work in Louisiana, such a step would surely be beneficial. We could then consign our Americanized German churches to be occupied by American preachers, enabling our German preachers to branch out, search for and occupy new fields, thus making full proof of their ministry.

Those of the German preachers specially fitted for the work, could be appointed as German evangelists working at large in the bounds of the Conference among the German, securing them as members for the American churches.

J. B. A. ANDREWS.

Rhode Island has taken her place beside Maine and Kansas as a prohibition State. The following speech, which we find in the Globe Democrat, indicates the effect of victory:

Newport, R. I., April 9. "The result of Wednesday's vote throughout the State, carrying the constitutional amendment which forbids the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, has caused great commotion here, especially among saloon keepers. Many prominent dealers are thus early arranging to meet the inevitable. One of the best known merchants has announced to his friends his determination to give up business in July, and that they intend to close their saloons entirely directly the law goes into effect; and will make no effort to evade the law, which will probably compel each city and town to enforce its provisions. The carrying of the prohibitory amendment has caused an excitement not equalled for many years."

The colored people are responsible nobly to the cause of temperance reform. Their ministers are carrying out the spirit and purpose of Conference and Associational resolutions against intemperance and the liquor traffic. Rev. B. S. Rayner, preaching elder of the Seashore district, addressed a large colored audience at Pearl River last week on temperance. At the conclusion of his speech, he proposed to see how many men present would work and vote for temperance and every voter in the hall rose to his feet. The women and young people also pledged sympathy with the great movement. Let preachers everywhere show a like interest in them and similar results will follow.

Obituaries.

COTTON.—FRANKIE, son of Edward Cotton and Zelander Jacobs, departed this life January 15, 1886, in New Orleans, aged ten years, four months and two days. He left those who loved him so dearly almost heart-broken. He was the subject of the tenderest care of his grandparents, and the source of their greatest comfort. He had been a cripple most of his life, being unable to walk without crutches. His mother took him to a surgical institute, and put forth every effort to cure him, but nothing was accomplished. He was going to school, learning rapidly, and could write a beautiful letter, and always stood first in his class. We saw his first copy book, and it was neat, and a masterpiece of work for one so young. He was a member of his Sunday-school, and ever manifested that spirit of kindness, love and purity, that should possess every child of Jesus. His parents were away at sea when he died, and have not yet returned. The little boy never retired without praying for himself, relatives at home, and parents away. His playmates loved him dearly, and when he died, many of them gathered around his remains, shedding burning tears of grief, and bestowing parting kisses upon his forehead. He was a flower of the family circle, whose fragrance will be more greatly missed than in this case. His grandma preserves his books, slate and tops as so many rich treasures, and will always think of little Frankie with joy and grief combined, because she says "he was so good." He was bright and beautiful here, but how much more lovely he will shine in heaven, where his afflictions are healed, and his body made like unto Christ's own glorious body.

To little Florence, his dear cousin, we say, that although you can not join him in play any more, you may join him in the golden walks of the city celestial, if you live as he did—"so good." Mother, you will return to find Frankie gone, but just over the sea, where you may meet him on the shining strand, at the "grand gathering home." Grandparents, be faithful to Frankie's Saviour, and you may soon meet him in fond embraces, just after the golden sunset of your life, which is drawing near. May every companion of this little saint strive to live as he did, ever breathing an atmosphere of obedience, love and truth! Then what a happy meeting there will be when the shining of night are past, and the morning star has arisen, never to set in the kingdom above.

HOLMAN.—SISTER ROSA F. HOLMAN, daughter of Rev. T. W. Castle, was born September 15, 1837, of professional religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the fall of 1872; graduated at Brookhaven, Miss., in 1876, under the presidency of Rev. H. P. Johnson; was married to J. C. Holman, November 1877, and died at her home, in Webster county, Miss., July 8, 1885. ELLA LEE, aged five years, and Josie, an infant of three months, the only children of J. C. and Rosa F. Holman, were not permitted to live long enough to realize their orphanage. The former survived her mother only two weeks; the latter, three short months.

Sister Holman was a model Christian woman. By her quietness of manner and consistency of life she adorned her profession as a child of God, and won the highest esteem of all who knew her. She met death calmly and fearlessly; talked without excitement to relatives and friends, assuring them that she was passing out of suffering into sweet rest. She died, as none but Christians can, happy. The little ones were such as Jesus blessed and said, "of such is the kingdom of Heaven." While in the heart of the husband and father, he needed not mourn as those who have no hope.

MASON.—MRS. JULIA PEACE MASON died November 9, 1885, at her home in British Honduras. She had been for many years a great sufferer from acute rheumatism. The disease finally attacked the heart, and carried her away in the prime of a useful life. Mrs. Mason was the second daughter of the Rev. Levi and Mrs. Maria Pearce, and was born at the parental home, in Yazoo county, Miss., September 18, 1854, while her father was in the active work of his itinerant ministry. Through her tender, unfolding nature took on its bent and temper under the nurture of Christian doctrines and example. She knew the race and power of home religion. Julia became a pupil in Woodville Female Seminary. She was among the foremost in her class, and her gentle, cheerful, amiable bearing, Christian character, won the love and confidence of teachers and pupils. In 1870 she joined her parents in their new home in British Honduras. She came again to Mississippi in 1878, but the malady which began its fatal work on her system compelled her to return to Honduras. Comparative relief brought her new hope of life and usefulness. On March 18, 1879, she was married to Mr. James Mason, of Kentucky, who has settled in Honduras. From a child to the end she was a Christian. As wife, mother, daughter, sister, friend, she was the same true woman. To quote her sorrowing sister, who knew her from birth to death: "What a noble woman she was! Without exception, the best I have ever known. Through all the years and annoyances of life, which were added to her constant ill health, she never for one moment lost that amiable sweetness of temper, which characterized Julia Pearce as a school girl." Her aged and honored parents, a devoted husband, four little children, a devoted sister and three brothers, together with many loving friends, are left behind, while she has passed to her eternal home and reward with the saints and the innumerable company of saints. Would we call her back? Only for the good of the dear children. Many hearts will be comforted with her sympathy and prayers for the bereaved, and that God will shield and guide those tender children in their way through life. Julia has joined many of her school-mates on the other shore—the shining shore. She has left to her family, in her daily life, the imperishable treasure of Christian example to encourage them in the way in which she has walked with God. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them, also, which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

W. T. SULLIVAN.

PURCELL.—G. D. PURCELL was born in Prince William county, Va., June 17, 1811, and died at Black Hawk, Miss., March 24, 1886.

We have, between the above dates, the hardships, crosses, griefs, joys and successes of a good and useful man, whose earthly pilgrimage was a little over seventy-two years. We have clearly demonstrated to us in the life of this good man what a boy can do for himself and the world, if he has the will, industry and application. Bro. Purcell was left an orphan when about two years old; was cared for by his older brother until he was large enough to do some work, at which time he went to Washington city and gave himself to a cabinet-maker to learn the trade. After learning his trade he went to St. Louis, Mo. From there, in 1840, he moved to Tusculum, Ala., where he remained until 1852, at which time he moved to this place in the city of Black Hawk. When about twenty-two years of age he joined the Methodist Church, and ever remained a faithful and honorable member of her communion. I suppose he was a class leader for over fifty years, and for many years a learned exhorter. He held his membership, at this place, more than thirty years without impeachment. Soon after he moved here he lost his companion. This added to his care and responsibility, as he had to take the place of father and mother for several little children. He thought all the Lord brought him safely. He was a man of strong convictions and true to what he believed to be right. He fought whisky, sin and the devil, with a vim. A more faithful man to religious duty and attendance in church service would be hard to find. True to his pastor, his church and his God. "Well done, thou good and faithful servant!" We miss him; yes, we miss him at home, at prayer and class meeting, and his hearty "Amen" during the service. It is one loss, but his gain. Life was a struggle, but Heaven will crown a crown of rejoicing. He died honored and loved by those who had grown up from childhood about him. His remains were deposited in the Black Hawk Cemetery in the presence of a large concourse of people.

J. F. EVANS.

HARPER.—ALBERT LEE HARPER, son of James Washington and Rebecca Morgan Harper, deceased, was born at Harpersville, Shelby county, Ala., May 1, 1832, and died of consumption, March 12, 1885, at Summerfield, Chatham parish, La.

He came to Louisiana in the latter part of the year 1848 with a number of relatives and friends, who formed the greater part of what has been known ever since as the Alabama settlement. Here a church was built at his own expense and named after him, called Alabama Church. It was in this church that Bro. Lee was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and ever after lived a consistent member. Religious with him was no uncertain sound, but a divine reality which lifted the soul up and gave it a foretaste of heaven. Naturally timid, he never sought notoriety, but he loved God and his church, and exhibited his faith by his works. When the war of secession broke out he volunteered as a private soldier, and went to the rank of captain in the Seventeenth Louisiana Regiment (where the name by which he was familiarly known of Capt. A. L. Harper). Taken prisoner by the fall of Vicksburg, he was paroled, and came home, and on April 27, 1864, he was united in bonds of holy wedlock to Mrs. Maria A. Lowrey of Union parish. About the year 1870 he moved to Summerfield, Chatham parish, where he lived till his death, engaged most of the time in the mercantile business. In his death the church at Summerfield has lost her most valued leader, the home a worthy member, and the country a good and true citizen.

After a beautiful and timely tribute to his memory, delivered by the Rev. A. L. P. Hickerson, D. D., LL.D., of the Methodist Protestant Church, the Masons took charge of the corpse, and buried it with Masonic honors, a large sympathizing audience being present. He leaves a dear companion, four sons, and two step-daughters to mourn his loss and follow on. Too great a meed of praise can not be bestowed upon his faithful and devoted wife for the untiring and unflinching care she so freely gave him in his affliction. Confined to his room for nearly five months, and most of the time to his bed, she was always at his side to minister to his every need, so far as human aid could go. May God give her strength to rear her sorrowing and fatherless three little boys—Willie, Marvin and Linnus—to be useful and God-fearing men; and may the elder son, who has just graduated in the medical profession with honor, prove an honored instrument in the hands of the great Physician, not only for the cure of temporal ailments, but for their spiritual as well! To the many relatives and friends who have known and loved A. L. Harper we say: Cousin Lee has gone to the celestial city he loved to talk of. Suffering most of the time, in his last days, from severe suffering, he could not talk much, but he had long before talked of death, calmly and quietly, and had no fears about the future; and while he dreaded the thought of suffering to death, he prayed that if it was God's will he might die easily. Faith triumphed and, conscious almost to the last, he closed his eyes, folded his hands over his breast, and breathed his last peacefully and quietly. His last words (that we understand) were, "Bless God!" and his pure spirit left the prison-house of clay for a mansion in glory. "Blessed are the dead, which die in the Lord, from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

A. C. HARPER.

McKEY.—The work of death goes on. Nouns can stay his hand. Our hearts are full of sorrow. Bartonton community is again bereaved. Miss M. O. McKey, wife of N. K. McKey, died April 2, 1886. She was the daughter of Dr. W. L. and Martha L. Shelby. She was born November 17, 1815, and married to N. K. McKey September 7, 1835. She had been for several years a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She was a devoted worker for her church. She was one of those Christians whose life tells for God, "as a city set on a hill." To the Bartonton community, many of whom have known her so long and well, she was greatly endeared, and her pleasant home and Christian character are as "ointments poured forth." She leaves a mother, husband, six children, three sisters and a brother, to mourn her loss to them, but gain to her. May they all find in their sorrow great comfort in the beautiful Christian life of the dear departed daughter, wife, mother and sister, and in the sweet and blessed assurance that she is not dead, but gone before! And may they find in her gracious, loving Savior the same blessed experience of saving love, live in the light of the same blessed hope, and, like her, triumph over death, and have an abundant entrance into the same happy and eternal home above!

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Vicksburg, Miss., April 13.—Capt. A. Antler, the oldest steamboat captain in this section, who commanded boats running into this port forty years ago, and now in his eighty-second year, is seriously ill at his residence in this city. He has ever been considered a good man, morally, and was kind-hearted and upright in his dealings with his fellow-men, but never has been a churchman. He surprised his family and friends by summoning the families of his children, three or four in number, to his bedside yesterday, the command being that they be there at 10 o'clock A. M. sharp. Soon after their arrival Rev. Mr. Woodard, a Methodist minister, arrived, and the old captain announced his intention of having the minister baptize him and connect him with the Methodist Church which he did, after having the minister pray for him.

Atchafalpa, Tex., April 15.—About 10 o'clock last night the most devastating cyclone that ever visited this section passed through the southwest corner of this Wise county, four miles south of the town of Atchafalpa. The storm, coming from the south, was a broad swath through forest and field in its course northwesterly toward Red river. About 9 o'clock a heavy rain set in, followed by an electrical display and hailstorm. Suddenly, during a brief lull in the storm, the last roar of an oncoming cyclone was distinctly heard at this place. The inhabitants were panic-stricken. The night was pitch dark; the dull roar lasted a quarter of an hour, growing gradually less and less. Over a dozen farmhouses were demolished. Occupants in nearly every residence sustained severe injury. So far as heard from no lives were lost, but several injuries, it is believed, will prove fatal. The loss of property is very great, being estimated at over $100,000 in Wise county alone. The path of the cyclone proper was only 200 yards in many places, but everywhere was leveled to the earth. For fifteen miles the track was covered with ruins from residences and barns. Many horses, cattle and sheep in barns or field were killed. The extent of loss and exact number of injured cannot be learned for a couple of days yet.

St. Cloud, Minn., April 15.—The work of devastation in the districts visited by the cyclone is complete, as the littered and shattered remains of what were frame buildings will testify. The scene to-day was one of appalling horror. For a width of about 600 feet running from southwest to northeast the tornado had leveled almost everything before it. The force of the storm was such as to wrench the door of the safe in the post-office and carry it some distance from the building. The church bell, weighing 1500 pounds, was found among the debris 400 feet away from any building. The remains of the dead are almost unrecognizable, being terribly crushed and blackened. There are no remarkable number of persons injured about the hips and limbs. Many of the survivors will be disabled for life.

Sank Rapids, Minn., April 15.—The disaster work of searching for the dead among the debris of the storm-swept section still continues, while the recovered remains, blackened and mangled, are being shrouded, while the wounded are receiving every possible attention. Physicians from neighboring cities are still on duty, relieving the efforts. As the returns come in from the country along the track of the tornado few fatalities are discovered, and the unmailed are being brought in for treatment. No pen can depict the horrors of this scene. The final musters of casualties will show the total to be 100.

Montreal, Can., April 16.—A thoroughly representative public meeting, which was attended by the mayor, aldermen, members of Parliament and leading citizens, was held here last night. Resolutions were passed endorsing Mr. Gladstone's home rule bill. The hall in which the meeting was held was crowded, and much enthusiasm prevailed. All the speakers warmly endorsed the measure.

Bismarck, Dak., April 15.—Reports of a disastrous storm from the upper counties, but it is understood that large numbers of cattle were killed. The storm is not classed as a cyclone, but the wind was so terrific as to cut down trees and over five miles of timber along the river bank was leveled. The storm was located 150 miles northwest.

St. Paul, Minn., April 17.—The evening Dispatch has received a special report of the killed and injured by the cyclone, as follows: St. Cloud—Killed, 21; injured 80. Sank Rapids—Killed, 37; injured 100. Rice's Station and adjacent country—Killed, 135; injured 33; missing a total of killed 73 and injured 213. The death of Mr. Holbert to-day makes the total number of dead 74. The property loss is $300,000.

Leavenworth, Kan., April 17.—The loss of life and property to-morrow's Times said that during the great storm period, from April 25 to 26, a hurricane will organize on near the Gulf and sweep up the Southeast Atlantic coast, and that about the same time a cold wave will appear in the Southern States, followed by heavy frosts as far South as Tennessee and Southern Kansas.

Newburyport, Mass., April 18.—The annual love feast in connection with the New England Conference was held here to-day. This evening the missionary anniversary was celebrated. The General Missionary Society has seventeen stations in the foreign field, to which are assigned 16 missionaries and 140 auxiliaries, besides native and other helpers aggregating fully 2000. The church property is rated at $1,307,455, and the average attendance at Sabbath worship is 55,420, almost entirely in lands having no Sabbath.

Edinburg, Ill., April 18.—Recently Oak Hill Church was destroyed by fire and the circumstances related to arson. A man named Christian was arrested for the offense, tried and acquitted. Last night while going home in company with his wife Christian was met by a mob and riddled with bullets.

McComb City, Miss., April 18.—A revival meeting, conducted by the Rev. B. N. Hatch, of Columbia, Miss., has been in progress at the Baptist Church here for the past two weeks. Considerable interest is being manifested, and there have been fifty conversions and thirty-one accessions up to date. The meeting will be continued throughout the coming week.

MEMPHIS, April 19.—The river here to-night lacks but ten inches of the extreme high water mark of 1882. It is fourteen inches over the danger line, with fair prospects of at least a foot more water. Planters below, especially those on the Arkansas side of the river, are fearing disaster from broken levees.

Louisville, April 19.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Watterson returned last night from Old Point Comfort. Mr. Watterson has gained greatly in flesh and strength, but Mrs. Watterson was much fatigued by the journey. They will sail for Europe with their family on the 12th of May.

Pittsburgh, April 19.—At the regular meeting of the United Presbyterian ministers to-day a resolution was adopted condemning boycotting.

FOREIGN.

Constantinople, April 15.—The Porte has been notified by Germany, Russia and Austria that they are taking fresh steps to compel Greece to disarm.

London, April 15.—Dr. Werner Selma has given £2000 to the German government to establish an institute for scientific experiments.

Paris, April 15.—Nine persons were killed and a number were injured to-day at Ajaccio, the capital of Corsica, by the collapse of a mansion.

The government proposes to donate 200,000 francs to the fund to Prof. Pasteur for the establishment of a hospital for the treatment of persons who have been bitten by rabid animals.

Brisbane, Italy, April 16.—Sixty-eight cases of cholera have occurred here, ten of which proved fatal. The officials declare that the disease is sporadic.

Paris, April 16.—The development of cholera at Brindisi causes alarm in France, particularly along the Italian frontier. A French frontier station is being instituted to prevent the scourge from invading France.

London, April 17.—A conference of the representatives of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, the direct United States Cable Company, the French Cable Company, and the Western Union Telegraph Company as lessees of the American Cable Company, was held yesterday. When May 1 the cable rate to and from all places in the United States east of the 97th parallel of longitude to all places in Great Britain, France and Germany shall be twelve cents per word by the cables of those companies.

Vienna, Austria, April 19.—The fire at Stryl is still raging. The situation there is appalling. Thousands of the inhabitants are victims of the flames. The charred and blackened remains have already been dug out of the ruins. The mayor of the town has sent a telegram to Limburg, asking that troops be sent to Stryl with appliances to extinguish the fire. The damage is estimated at several million florins. The total number of dead is now forty. Most of the victims were children.

When the fire commenced the bulk of the inhabitants were absent at a fête, and on their return they were so completely dazed by the calamity that the conflagration was allowed to proceed unchecked. The gale carried three miles and set fire to numbers of huts occupied by the peasantry.

Richmond Conference.

Delegates to the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to be held in Richmond, Va., May 5, will have a most delightful trip by taking the "Kennesaw Route," i. e., East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad, which passes through the beautiful mountain scenery of the South. Parties will be permitted to stop over at Chattanooga, Bristol, Roanoke, Waynesboro and have an opportunity to visit "Luray Caverns," in the neighborhood of Waynesboro Junction. By this route you cross the Blue Ridge and Alleghany mountains and reach Richmond without change, if desired, in the fast time of forty-eight hours. The rates by this route are as low as any other. No other road can offer lower rates. For further particulars address Maj. J. C. Andrews, General Southern Agent, Richmond, Va., or Common streets, New Orleans, La.

There are two classes of men in the clerical profession—there are men who sustain the pulpit, and men whom the pulpit sustains.

Sketches and Portraits of the General Conference.

The Rev. Dr. Lafferty, of Richmond, Va., has nearly ready a rich and unique volume. It contains a sketch of each of the two hundred and fifty members of the Conference, with a faithful and superior likeness of every delegate. It is a portrait gallery of the body. The volume is in square shape, printed on heavy-tinted paper, specially made for it. The sketches are in black and white, and rival the best work in America. The "Sketches and Portraits" is a sumptuous book, an ornament to the parlor, and worthy of the great Methodist Senate it portrays.

It will be in colored and embellished bindings. The edition will be one thousand. Price, $1. If ordered by mail, it will be forwarded in boxes and for the purpose. Enclose name and amount to Rev. J. L. Lafferty, Richmond, Va.

A THOUGHT.

A few days may—A few years must—
Repose us in the silent dust;
Then is it wise to damp our bliss?
Yes, all such reasonings are foolish:
The voice of nature loudly cries,
And many a message from the skies,
That something in us never dies;
That on this frail mortal state
Hang matters of eternal weight;
That future life, in worlds unknown,
Must take its hue from this alone,
Whether as heavenly glory bright,
Or dark as misery's woful night.

—Burns.

Reminiscences of an Old Itinerant—No. 3.

MR. EDITOR: Soon after I joined the church I called one day at the house of a Methodist aunt, a sister of my mother. In her affectionate style she said to me: "Cousin John, you have joined the church, and you ought to make arrangements to be baptized as soon as convenient. The Methodists are strong believers in baptism, and you can not be received into full fellowship until you are baptized." "O!" said I, "I intend to be baptized, but it will be by immersion." She knew that I had seen but one side of the question about the mode of baptism and asked me to read a pamphlet entitled, "Two Letters On Baptism to a Friend," by Rev. Timothy Merritt. My first impulse was not to take the pamphlet, but in a second I thought this would be treating my aunt with discourtesy, and I took the book intending to give it a hasty reading with a fixed determination that it should make no change in my views as to the mode of baptism. I had not got far into the book before it opened up a new field of argumentation on the scriptural mode of baptism, showing that John the Baptist and the apostles baptized with water and not in or under it. I now thought the book required a more careful reading, and as the Baptist preachers sometimes accused the Methodist preachers of misquoting and even changing the Scriptures to suit their views, I took my Bible and the pamphlet and went into a quiet place determined to give it an honest and thorough reading, referring to my Bible to see if every text quoted by the author was quoted correctly, which I found to be the case, and I rose from that investigation fully and finally convinced that baptism by affusion is the scriptural mode. In process of time I read many other authors on the subject, which only confirmed me in the belief that pouring or sprinkling is the scriptural mode of baptism. I will here say that Methodist books put into my hands by the lay members of the church, both male and female, had a great deal to do in confirming me in doctrinal, experimental and practical religion, as will appear in what I shall write hereafter about my personal experience. A short time before I was converted, while in a state of deep penitence and sorrow for my sins, the Calvinistic creed, which I had often heard preached by Calvinist ministers, was thrust on my mind, and I said if it is true that "God hath from all eternity freely and unchangeably decreed whatsoever comes to pass, and has elected a certain number to be saved and reprobated all others to be damned," it is useless for me to be so much troubled about my sins and to persist in seeking their sensible forgiveness. If the "eternal decrees" are true, if I am elected I will be saved, do what I may; and if I am reprobated I will be damned, do what I can. For a moment I was completely befogged, but said to myself this Calvinistic creed is so mixed up and self-contradictory I can not understand it. Some few passages of Scripture admit a construction that seems to favor it, but the general tenor of the Bible is against it. It is plainly written in the Bible, "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." Again it is written, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." The meaning of these Scriptures, and many others of the same import, is plain and unmistakable. I said I will utterly ignore any further thought about Calvinism for the present, and take these and parallel Scriptures for my guide and encouragement until I obtain the sensible forgiveness of my sins, and then I will be better prepared to investigate what are called the "eternal decrees." Soon after this I was happily converted, and it was not long before something seemed to remind me that I had promised, when I got religion, I would thoroughly investigate the Calvinistic creed, and I seemed to be held to my promise. I did not know of a book in the world that I could get to read on the subject, and I went to my class leader with my troubles. He loaned me a little volume published by our Book Concern in New York, entitled "Doctrinal Tracts." It was made up of a series of tracts written by Mr. Wesley as a clear refutation, upon scriptural authority, of the errors of Calvinism. This little book and Dr. Adam Clarke's Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, which I read with great care, swept the last vestige of Calvinism from my mind, and I have never since been haunted by the ugly ghost. I will have something more to say about what good Methodist books did for me.

HAZLEHURST, Mississippi.

As One Having Authority.

"He spake as one having authority, and not as the scribes," is the way the more serious characterized the preaching of Jesus. "There is food for meditation here. Did he speak thus only because he was the Divine Son, or because he delivered a Divine message? Rather, did he not thus set forth the true type of all preaching? Had not the prophets of old spoken thus, when such miraculous results followed their preaching? Had not John the Baptist so preached, when all Judea and Jerusalem went out to hear him, and he baptized thousands in a single day? Did not the apostles so preach at Pentecost, when so many were converted and added to the church daily? In short, has not this been the true element in all successful preaching down to the present day? Preaching with authority. What else has the preacher to ensure the acceptance of his message but this authority? If he be learned, there are others also who are learned. If eloquent, eloquence is not peculiar to the pulpit. Earnestness is catching; but men will look at what is back of the earnestness first. Personal popularity will give one the semblance of success; but it is not such as will endure. Brought down to the last analysis, it will be seen that that single element of the sermon that is worth more than all the rest combined is authority. There is a religious sense about men that intuitively recognizes him who speaks "as a teacher come from God." There may be no learning and no eloquence; but the authority of his words falls with a power that is irresistible. Men will rush to hear such a preacher no matter how downcast oratory of their sins his words may be.

There is something exceedingly gratifying about this fact. It teaches that, after all, men are more concerned about the sovereign will and authority of God than all else. Any thing that brings this into view is sure to enlist attention and concern. Hence this power over men's minds of the miraculous, the solemnity of death, or of some great catastrophe. People appear to us sometimes irreligious only because the religious sense has not been adequately touched. Sermons that speculate about science, that are strung with flowers made to order, or burnished with periods under the tireless pen of the study, or that trifle all the way through with this peculiar notious of the preacher, and that might as easily be spoken to those without souls as with, such sermons may be tolerated by the religiously trained, but they never strike those who are not. But men are not insensible to that word that is spoken with authority.

Then, how this thought exalts the ministerial office. The minister is not a mere professional, concerned with the petty arts of manipulating "services," of cultivating oratory, or of playing the mere priest; but he comes clothed with authority to "cry aloud and spare not," and the whole dignity of his office is in the fact that he speaks in God's name and in the name of the most sacred interests of humanity. The man is thus sunk in his office. He has no message of his own. If he appears in our eyes as a good man, the very word that he preaches has made him so. The "word" is what he is armed with. Not his genius, not his argumentativeness, not his familiarity with learning, not his anecdotal power; but the fact that he is anointed to preach the acceptable year of the Lord, and to proclaim liberty to them that are bound.

Winona District Conference.

The Winona District Conference, of the North Mississippi Annual Conference, met at Carrollton, Miss., April 9, 1886, Rev. R. P. Mitchell, P. E., in the chair. J. B. Streater, secretary, and T. H. Bligham, assistant secretary. Three charges were without representation, five preachers were absent, and fifteen laymen were present. The district is composed, at present, of seventeen charges, the most of which made cheering reports as to the financial condition and spiritual interest. The preaching during the Conference was of the practical kind that the Lord always blesses with the outpouring of his Spirit, and which resulted in a gracious revival of religion. The invincible J. A. Bowen was present in the interest of Grenada Institute, and of the Lord's work generally. His speech to the children on Sunday afternoon interested the young folks, aroused the thoughts and, I trust, touched the hearts of the parents. Our new presiding elder seems to be peculiarly fitted for the office. Many regrets were expressed on account of the absence of the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: J. R. Bligham, H. C. Williamson, J. R. Watson and J. B. Streater, with L. A. Powers, O. J. Moore and W. W. Hart as alternates. The following resolutions were adopted by the Conference:

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, The necessity for circulating our books and periodicals being so important a part of our labor, that our Annual Conference saw fit to appoint Bro. G. W. Bachman to that special work; And, whereas, It being very essential that the office be supported; therefore, he it.

Resolved, That the members of this District Conference transact as much of their periodical and book business through the authorized colporteur as possible, thereby giving him the benefit of the transaction.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Conference are due and are hereby tendered to the good people of Carrollton for their generous hospitality in the entertainment of the Conference, and for furnishing free transportation to and from the railroad.

THOS. Y. RAMSEY,
R. A. BURROUGHS,
N. O. AUGUSTUS.

Resolved, That we are gratified to know that the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is increasing in prosperity and growing in favor with our people, and that we heartily approve of the utterances of the able editor on all the leading questions of the day.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Temperance beg leave to offer the following: After investigation we are gratified to report that there has been a large and healthy growth in the sentiments of the people on this subject, both in the church and out of it, in the bounds of this district. Now we have but few persons in the church using intoxicating liquors to excess, and very few, if any, engaged in its sale. There is also a marked improvement in this direction outside of the church. In a good many of our pastoral charges total prohibition prevails, and we think the people, as a mass, are becoming thoroughly aroused on this question, for where liquor is still kept for sale, the saloons are not as largely patronized as in former days. As a refutation of the charge that "Prohibition does not prohibit," the reports show exactly contrary results, and also show that from a business standpoint, trade has been better, and the money that has heretofore been spent for whiskey has been appropriated for the necessities of life.

The morals of the people have also greatly improved, and we earnestly recommend this matter to the prayerful consideration of our people, trusting that the time will soon come when it will not only be banished from our district, but from our entire State. In view of these facts we offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we lift our hearts to Almighty God, the source of all help, in songs of praise and profound gratitude for what has been done, and that we constantly pray his help on all human efforts put forth in this direction.

Resolved, That we are in hearty sympathy with prohibitionists throughout our land, and will earnestly co-operate with them in all prudent and laudable efforts to remove entirely this great evil.

Resolved, That we recognize the prayers, faith and efforts of our godly women, especially the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mississippi.

Resolved, That it is of great importance that temperance literature be circulated in our district, and we recommend for the consideration of temperance workers as cheap and effective tracts, the following: "Prohibition from Principle," which may be obtained at seventy-five cents per hundred, by applying to Rev. L. L. Pickett, D. D., and the forthcoming "Handbook of Prohibition," by Dr. C. B. Galloway, all of which is respectfully submitted.

Committee.

The next District Conference is to be held at Saltillo.

Bible Work in Louisiana and Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I take this method of informing your readers, and especially the friends of the Bible cause, that I have been appointed by the American Bible Society to take charge of this work in all the territory embraced in Louisiana and Mississippi. The object of the American Bible Society is to promote the wider circulation of the Scriptures. To that end they direct all their efforts and means. The co-operation of all who love the Bible is not only most earnestly invited, but urgently needed. It is a mistake to suppose that this society has resources which make it independent of generous contributions from churches, individuals and auxiliary societies. The society has recently begun a new canvass of the entire country, with the aim of carrying the Bible to every family which is destitute of it, and leaving without excuse every person who chooses to live in ignorance of God's word. Through the help of auxiliaries and the agency of colporteurs, more than a million families a year have already been visited in this way; about twelve per cent. of which are reported as having been found without a copy of the Bible.

The northern portion of Mississippi has already been largely canvassed, and much good work done. We desire to begin the active canvass of all South Mississippi and the whole of Louisiana—the territory once under the care of the South-western Bible, but now under the immediate supervision and control of the American Bible Society. To do this work as it should be done we need the active co-operation and sympathy of all the preachers of every Christian denomination, and of all the people who love God and desire to see men saved. I hope to be much in the field: to visit the churches, to take collections for this important work, and to organize Auxiliary Societies and Bible Committees, which shall themselves be important factors in this great work.

I address myself to this work with the hope that Christian people will help. Any information from any place in the district, concerning the necessities of the work, the destitution of the people, the condition of auxiliaries, or the probability of organizing new Auxiliaries or Bible Committees will be gladly received.

The Relation of Missions to Christian Life.

BY REV. J. M. WHEENS.

The early days of Methodism, both in Europe and this country, witnessed a broader comprehension of this relation and zeal in its development than is manifested in the faith and efforts of the Methodism of today. Whether this fact was the result of the inspiration that necessitated being, or the environments of the hour of birth and early growth, or the two combined, is not the object of this paper. I simply state that I find no grounds for doubting the fact stated. In those days both men and means were scarce, and to send either from a community into the waste places must have appeared to the natural man more like the hallucination of a blind fanaticism than the discretion of a pure faith in the mission of Christian life.

Yet, if the why was ever asked, it was more than answered by a fidelity to purpose that made a plea for Methodism far more eloquent and convincing than any thesis ever written or spoken. With no apology but the desire to save souls, and claiming no authority but the command of her Lord to save them, she traversed land and sea to accomplish the end. And it would be unjust to the spirit and the history of our fathers to assume that they were inspired to these efforts by an apprehension of their relation to the future development of Methodism. Indeed, we may well question whether this was a thought among them, for their methods of enterprise were as unostentatious as the clothes they wore. Of course we see how the methods, humble as they were, and executed under the weight of self-denial, suffering and death, laid the foundation for a success that constitutes the Methodism of to-day the wonder of all ages.

But what was far more to them, and should be to every Christian, it made them a distinguished people of the Lord, and left to us a name more precious than gold. And while we still retain the theory of mission work, is it not true that we have largely lost, and are now acting under the lowest motive that can influence us in it? I do not say this is the case; yet is it not true? After a long and careful study, I find our people influenced by a variety of motives to feel and take an interest in missions.

1. There are those who regard it simply as a privilege—i. e., that they may or may not pay to this cause, just as they may or may not go to the city. And in each case this measure of the privilege is the same. If the cause is strongly pressed, they will give; but if not, they do not think of it as a duty at all.

2. Others regard it a duty to do something for missions; yet they never think of it only in its relation to other duties. With these there is nothing fixed, either in giving or doing. If they but imagine, an easy thing to do, that some other duty is more important, duty to missions is neglected.

3. But how few among us look upon the support of missions as a means of grace. Indeed, so few that I can not now recall one single instance of a contribution to this cause unsolicited in some way. To my mind, therefore, the conclusion is natural, that the people do not regard giving to missions an act of worship and a means of grace. But is this the case? Writing to the church at Philippi Paul said: "For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity. Not because I desire a gift; but I desire fruit that may abound to your account." It is plain that Paul wanted them to contribute to the spread of the gospel as they did all other Christian duties—as a means of grace.

And if there is not this element of strength in missionary effort, to the individual and the home church, then we are without an abiding motive for the enterprise. But we can no more doubt this fact than we can discredit the sacred promise of Christ to be with us in our visits to "every nation" and to "every creature." Either we have misapprehended the meaning of Christ in this promise, or efforts in behalf of missions is a means of grace, for none can fail to be strengthened in a work that receives the presence and approval of Christ.

Is it not time, then, that there was an awakened conscience in the church on this subject? Why should not a Christian support this cause as he prays or reads his Bible? The only reason that can be assigned, he is not taught in this duty as in others. And I must say the excuse for this neglect is wholly wanting; yet if any pastor asks for help other than his own efforts, I freely advise the organization of the women. I know of no agency more effective, nor have I ever failed to see the good effects on the spiritual life of a church where they are organized and receive the support of the pastor.

Notable Increase.

The increase in the contributions for foreign missions during the quadrennium has been greater than in any other department of the church, having more than doubled, as follows:

1882, $103,000; 1883, $160,000; 1884, $177,000; 1885, $184,000; 1886, $230,000. These are given in round numbers.

Of the $230,000 contributed for foreign missions by the church, from April 1, 1885, to April 1, 1886, the Tennessee Conference has given over $18,000. This puts the Tennessee Conference second in the list, being led only by the North Georgia.

Much credit is due to the able and efficient management of the office, as well as to the increased liberality of the church. It will be seen by the rigid scrutiny of the General Conference, that the present secretary and treasurer, with their luculent labors and liberal and enlightened policy, have contributed to this grand result more than any other one agency. When the church comes to understand fully the history of the Board of Missions for the past four years, and the magnitude of the difficulties encountered in its work, and then counts up results, there will be less disposition to criticize and complain. It is easy to find fault. A man seated on the lower limb of the moon, might describe mountains on the earth where there are none. No quadrennium in the history of the church can show greater results, either in money collected, missionaries employed, or pagans converted to Christ. Just as the church has increased its money, God has increased his mercy, until mission fields have been erected into conferences, and districts, stations and circuits have taken the place of small missions where the church scarcely had a footing four years ago. There have been a few men in the church for the last thirty years who have closed up each quadrennium by flinging the same old criticisms at the Board of Missions. I do not mean the open and enlightened discussion of this policy of missions with which this paper has recently been filled; but this chronic grumbling, who complain instead of commending, and who are nothing if not grumblers—Dr. W. M. Lott, in Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

"Learn of me," says the philosopher. "and ye shall find restlessness." "Learn of me," says Christ, and ye shall find rest.

"Divine Providence holds in one hand the 'sorrow' that 'endureth for a night;' in the other hand the 'joy' which 'cometh in the morning.'"

PEACE.

How vain are thoughts that wing the soul,
But lift it not to purest light!
Like vapors sunset clouds they roll,
Then fade across the hills of night.

How weak the deeds with which the soul
Still seeks to soothe her restless state!
Like waves that toss and roll,
And beat in vain at heaven's gate.

We look across the waters of life,
And yet our straining eyes discern
Beyond the languor and the strife,
The perfect peace for which we yearn.

It comes upon its silent way
In breath of noon or starlight hour;
It soothes us with a hush away,
It brings with it a boundless power.

From all the beauty we have known
A fresher light of beauty springs;
With pure gladness free from grown
The soul within us thrills and sings.

That peace of God! Each restless deed,
Each daring thought, at last must die,
God knows the vigor that we need,
God knows the peace for which we sigh.

In some still hour when self is not,
And some unknown vast power we see,
Our wayward folly is forgot—
We yield, and then the soul is free.

Science, the Friend of Religion.

"One of the interesting, and to most of plain common sense, amusing, studies of the day is that of the history of geological theories and speculations. Mere speculation, and that only, has it been from the first on down to the present. Every theory to a greater or less extent is based on bare assumption, unproved and unprovable. Literally so."

The above, which I certainly do not understand clearly, is the recent utterance of a theological writer of no mean repute; a mature man of large philosophical bearing, of no superficial study, large practice and greater accuracy in the use of words. His exact meaning may be seen in his exact terms. And if so, while I have a profound regard, both personally and professionally, for his learning and wisdom, I am unable to receive the above teaching, and for the following reasons:

The above statement may be true considered in the light of pure, rigid metaphysical philosophy; and if so, then it follows by the same rule of reasoning, that nothing is demonstrably certain but abstract truth in the nature of pure mathematics. It is then certainly true that two and two make four, but not demonstrable that two apples in this basket and two others in that constitute four apples.

The late Rev. Dr. Hitchcock, of Massachusetts, was as eminent in the pulpit as he was celebrated in the collegiate chairs of natural science, chemistry and geology. In these branches of learning and research he stood as high in every part of Europe and America as in his native State. Among his other writings, his "Religion of Geology," published in 1851, was translated into all the popular languages of Europe and used as a text book in most colleges and universities of the age. His geological teachings have never been questioned, so far as I have seen or heard, by any geologist or other man of learning or science whose writings have been published. As a clear exponent of his title-phrase it is generally regarded as unrivaled in the literature of the age. The following quotation is in point:

"It is indeed a favorite idea with some that all the rocks and their contents were created just as we now meet them, in a moment of time; that the supposed remains of animals and plants, which many of them contain, and which occur in all states, from an animal or plant little changed to a complete conversion into stone, were never real animals and plants, but only resemblances; and that the marks of fusion and of the wearing of water, exhibited by the rocks are not to be taken as evidences that they have undergone such processes, but only that it pleased God to give them that appearance, and in fact it was as easy for God to create them just as they now are as in any other form. It is a presumption against such a supposition, that no men who have carefully examined rocks and organic remains are its advocates." (Page 19.)

We laymen are almost wholly dependent on astronomers, chemists and geologists for the facts we believe respecting those departments of knowledge. The astronomer tells us that the sun is nearly a hundred millions of miles away, and that he demonstrates what he calls the solar system, and that the world on which we live is a round ball and rolls over every day. But he gives me no demonstration of this. It is a mere unproved hypothesis. I do not see that the sun is any further away than the moon. The stars all appear to be about the same distance—five or ten miles or so, and the ground lies quite still.

And so the geologist; he says, he discovers evidence under ground, at such and such distances beneath the surface, and of such appearances, which, when compared with living bodies, plants, etc., prove that they were once living substances, and that some of them contain demonstrable evidence of having existed hundreds of thousands of years. And I reply, How do you know that God created all these things just that way about six thousand years ago? Certainly that was possible.

I next met a botanist, an uneducated woodsman and farmer; and we go into the woods.

"Sir, what is this?"
"This is a white oak tree, three feet in diameter and about a hundred feet high."

"How old is it?"
"Don't know, but will soon tell you." So he felled the tree, smoothed off the stump, and began to count the rings. One, two, three, forty, fifty, etc., and replied: "It is certainly over ninety-four years old, but not much over a hundred."

And he insisted on his knowledge of rings, and I failed to convince him that probably God created that particular tree, last year, "just that way." I pushed him closely as to his knowledge of the testimony of the rings, and he declared it to be demonstrable. Every tree has its rings; a ring for a year.

I took him into the corn field: "What is this?"

"A corn stalk, ten feet high and one and a half inches in diameter, green and soft with sap."

"How old is it?"

"Not quite four months old."

"How do you know? Could not God have created it yesterday, or four years ago, 'just that way'?" He insisted that the testimony of corn stalks was infallible. "Call it assumption unprovable, if you will," he replied, "but I know that corn stalks don't make mistakes."

Tako a man acquainted with Yazoo land, blindfold him and set him down on any acre of bottom woodland, and he will tell you, with what he calls certainty, the relative height of that acre; not to a foot, but with approximate certainty. Ask him how, and he will tell you, "By the testimony of the timber." And he will hit it exactly every time in ten thousand.

A witness in court is required to testify as to the identity of a certain gentleman with whom he was seen to converse on a certain occasion. "How old was he?"

Ans. "An old man of seventy or eighty."

"How do you know?"

Ans. "Gray hair, wrinkled face, general appearance."

"Do you know certainly that he was over twenty?"

Ans. "I know he was a long ways over twenty."

His testimony is discredited because he says he knows when his only means of knowing was by comparison of some men he calls old with others he considers young. He knows nothing about it. He only presumes.

The following fact was known to me. In the time of the war a drove of broken-down cavalry horses were brought in to Nashville to be sold off at auction. An expert in horse breeding was requested to look at some of them, when his attention was arrested by a very poor old skeleton, which he examined very carefully and with repeated expressions of amazement. The man became almost frantic with astonishment. "What is the matter?"

"The matter? Why this horse! Look at this horse! This horse is enough to turn a man crazy! I can't believe my own eyes. Here is a thoroughbred Lexington, and I know there is not a Lexington thoroughbred colt in America as old as this horse by at least five years. Something is wrong."

"O, you are probably mistaken in the blood or the age."

"Mistaken! Tell me I don't know a horse from an ox!"

The man insisted that he knew the age of the oldest horses in America, bred from the celebrated Kentucky horse, Lexington, and that this one was several years older and of unmistakable blood. And it turned out that he was right, inquiry revealing the singular fact that this horse was none other than poor old Lexington himself. The man had never seen him before, but would have risked his life on the testimony of horse hair, teeth, hoofs, ears, etc., and yet he did not know.

All this reasoning leads to the inevitable conclusion that no fact is absolutely demonstrable. Nothing is certainly known but abstract truth in the nature of pure mathematics. What we call proving facts, or applied truths, is only by comparing a questioned fact with some others supposed to be known; and the truth of that depends in like manner on something else, and that on something else, and so on through an infinite series; and if we could reach an ultimate fact that would, in like manner, need the same kind of proof, which proves that there can be no ultimate, demonstrable fact. The only way any fact is provable is by its resemblance to something else, which latter is provable only in the same way.

And as we have no ultimate facts which are self-evident, it is held that there is no proof positive of physical existence. This is the ultima thule of human reasoning. Therefore all facts are but unproved hypotheses. What is commonly called proof of facts, and on which men rely in the affairs of life, is where such comparisons have not been known to fail. We prove natural things by nature. Some sciences are in the hands of the laity. A woodsman proves the age of trees, a boy demonstrates a corn stalk; gray hair and wrinkled skin prove the age of persons and the testimony of horse hair, teeth and hoofs show age and breed of horses. Other sciences are necessarily in the keeping of professional men. Common people know but little of astronomy, geology, chemistry and biology. We get our information on these subjects second hand. And when it comes to demonstrated, but well authenticated, we rely upon it. I believe the sun is much larger than the earth because, and only because, all the astronomers say so.

Facts are considered authentic when they agree with universal experience. Scientific facts are considered authentic when all men versed in such science say so. Three hundred years ago nobody believed in the diurnal revolution of the earth, or the circulation of the blood; now everybody believes both these because all astronomers and physiologists say so.

In like manner all intelligent men believe in the antiquity of the earth far away beyond the Adamic period, because all the geologists tell us that the rocks and a hundred other kinds of fossil remains so testify. They all agree in explaining this testimony so to make it at least plausible to us who have not made the examinations. I say all, for here there is no disagreement. And further: most of these geologists, and generally those most eminent, are theologians and other Christians of no mean stamp.

Surely so far as geology itself is concerned, we take it as readily from the hands of Darwin, Huxley, Spencer or Haeckel as from Hitchcock, Harris, I. P. Smith or Hugh Miller. Do not your boots fit as well and will not they last as long made by a skeptic as by a Christian?

But illogical, illegitimate and unfair deductions, intended to cast distrust over the Bible, are made by skeptical men of all professions. That is another matter. Those who traduce the Bible most are those who are most ignorant of its teachings. Mr. Huxley is an able geologist, but his ignorance of the Bible is as profound as it is marvelous. Science is the Christian's best friend. Ignorance is his worst enemy. To quarrel with science is to ally with ignorance. It was well said by the Rev. Dr. Roberts, of Brooklyn, in an essay in a late number of Christian Thought, that, "One of the saddest pages in ecclesiastical history has been the ignorant opposition of the church to science."

YAZOO CITY, Mississipp.

From the Work.

CENTERVILLE, MISS.

Mr. Editor: Having been so much edified by the recent visit of our brother, Rev. W. C. Black, of Morristown, we must let your readers know what a rich treat is in store for those who may be so fortunate as to secure his services. At the suggestion of Rev. P. Howard (preacher in charge here), Bro. Black delivered for our benefit, on the nights of March 18 and 19, his lectures entitled "Genesis and Geology" and "Glimpses of Glory." The audiences were large and attentive and were held completely spellbound. A perfect torrent of speech abounding in scientific terms made intelligible to a general audience, interspersed with beautiful figures of rhetoric and of stereopticon (and attracted and delighted the people as well as furnished a large fund of information concerning the latest teachings of geology and astronomy. The proceeds of the lectures were donated to the committee having in charge the building of a Methodist Church here.

We could not forbear "riding a free horse," so on the morning of the eighteenth, we had a third lecture on "Prohibition," of which I need only say the speaker maintained his reputation. His vigorous articles on this topic your readers are familiar with and his address, just referred to, has evidently done the cause much good here.

I know you will be rejoiced to learn that our prohibition organization, a Lodge of Good Templars, is growing rapidly, having very nearly fifty members. Through its instrumentality we have had one saloon closed by law, and the providential circumstances attending the other to day make our town at present (and we hope for all time to come) exempt from the whiskey curse.

Of this place, Centerville, permit me to say a few words. It is situated upon the eastern border of Wilkinson county on the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas railroad. Only two crop seasons have elapsed since the ground upon which it stands was in corn and cotton, and we have now some 300 people residing here. It is beautifully situated upon the ridge which constitutes the watershed between the Amite and Comite rivers and is some 390 feet above the sea level. The surrounding country is slightly rolling; numerous clear branches are seen collecting the water from perennial springs of freestone water. By far the larger portion of this section has been at some time in cultivation, and much of this is now grown up in pines and may be bought very reasonably. The original forest growth is beautiful consisting of hick, magnolia, white oak, poplar etc., which indicates the natural fertility of the soil. Until the construction of the railroad we were very remote from market and our people lived mostly at home in simple but comfortable style. Now, things are rapidly changing; and our facilities for the rapid shipment of fruits, vegetables etc., open up many new avenues of profitable labor.

We have here a splendid school of more than seventy scholars, taught by Prof. J. M. Fly and lady, recently of Natchez. We have a Presbyterian Church already built, and Methodist and Baptist Churches will soon be erected. Our people are a very moral, church-going set; and, as a sample of our way of doing, I would state that our Methodist and Baptist Sunday-schools meet in our school-house at the same hour and are together presided over on alternate Sundays by the superintendents in turn. We have written thus of our town and the surrounding country, hoping a perusal of this may turn the eyes of some good brethren this way, for we certainly have unusual advantages to offer those in search of new homes.

Respectfully,
J. C. ROBERT.
APRIL 19, 1886.

HAZELHURST, MISS.

Mr. Editor: Many long years have passed away since I first made Hazelhurst my home, and during my time here, I have never seen nor experienced such a waking up of the people of our town in the interest of their soul's salvation as has been fully demonstrated during our two weeks' protracted meeting, which closed Tuesday night. Large and attentive congregations filled our church, at almost every service, coming from all demonstrations. Our dear brother, J. T. Nicholson, assisted by Bro. Holman a few days, preached the gospel in power, spirit, and truth, to the conversion of many souls to God, and adding eighteen to our church. Our Methodist membership have felt the spirit of our Master and all revived and renewed in the faith. The prayers of the righteous avail much, and we pray that the good spirit of the Lord may continue to move upon the hearts of our people till all shall be brought under its blessed influence. We all love our pastor and feel that we are blessed to have such a good, faithful man of God to move among us. May the Lord stand by him. Your brother,
J. W. MC.

MORTON AND FOREST CIRCUIT.

Mr. Editor: This pastor desires to acknowledge the "pounding" he got last Monday night at the live town of Morton, having gone there Saturday previous, accompanied by his "better half," to fill his regular appointment. We were invited on said night over to Dr. L. R. Moore (who, with Bro. Bond, are model stewards). Soon after dark here came the pounders, young and old. The Baptists contributed with the Methodists, and some kind friends, not yet members, were helpers in the business. A better variety of oysters could not have been made, even if they had got together previously and had a mutual understanding about it. The box with the articles weighed 175 pounds; a barrel of elegant flour to follow, paid for by different contributors. A large, nice pound cake, wreathed with flowers, furnished by Sister Moore, was placed on sale, the proceeds to go toward painting (plaster now at work) their new chapel. It brought a good price; then turned over to wife and I. So we bowed gratefully to those kind people, and returned home at Forest next day. Morton has adopted the plan of paying their assessment quarterly this year. They paid most of it before the first quarterly meeting for first quarter. This is a time when the preacher needs it most, and whenever this plan is adopted and carried out, there is no trouble to wind up at the end of the year. I must not forget to mention that our churches in the country did not fall in the early part of the year to bring in supplies for their preacher and his horse. Do you not know, dear brother, this sort of work puts encouragement in a preacher's soul; and if he fails to do his best for such a people, he ought to be ruled out. We have a comfortable parsonage at Forest, with garden and some path ground. We are behind some in paying for it. Some of the good sisters are trying to stir up matters to pay all by fall. I got my presiding elder to take up the foreign missionary collection at my quarterly Conference. Got some cash and some promises. Hope to get more soon, and will remit. I do not forget the good old Advocate at church Conference and elsewhere.

Yours,

O. BANCROFT.
P. S.—I ought to say that Mrs. Wells has been at Forest and Morton and delivered a fine temperance lecture at each place. A Woman's Christian Temperance Union is organized at Forest. The ladies are at work with a petition against the sale of liquor. It is sold here by the gallon; there are no saloons. No liquor is sold at Morton publicly. We want to have the local option election in this county as soon as possible.

CARROLLTON, MISS.

Mr. Editor: The secretary will furnish you a report of our District Conference.

It was a great blessing to our people here. The members left the impression of holy men on our community. Especially was the hearty singing enjoyed by our people. The Christians had been praying for the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and it came before the Conference met.

Large congregations listened attentively to the preaching of the word, which was accompanied by the power of God. We continued the meeting after Conference adjourned. Bros. J. A. Bewon, G. H. Hodge, H. C. Parrott, G. W. Bachman and J. P. Evans remained several days to help us. They have our thanks. The meeting was one of great power. The church was generally and thoroughly revived, and Christians who had heretofore been dumb as to their religious experience joyfully testified in the congregation of the great blessing they had received during the meeting. The young members of the church took an active part in the meeting, speaking frequently of their religious experience. Timid young ladies and girls testified gladly of their religious experience. We had service at ten A. M., and four and seven P. M. The ladies had prayer meetings at private houses in the afternoon, and the men at the same time at another place. These prayer meetings were occasions of great profit to those who attended. The meeting closed yesterday, the revival continues. Results to date, twenty-two conversions, and sixteen accessions to our church, with more to follow, and family altars erected, and new subscribers to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Bro. Bachman sold a number of copies of the "Aid and Guide," Bishop McTear's History of Methodism and other good books.

We give God the praise for this work of grace.

Fat Places vs. Lean Places.

Mr. Editor: As an itinerant preacher, it has been my good fortune to enjoy the hospitality of all classes of people, from the aristocrat to the humblest peasant, and I know what it is to be tortured in the home of each class above mentioned.

In the home of the aristocrat I have suffered from that stiffness so utterly unhome-like, and in which there was so little of the spirit of Christ, as to force me to sit munching for two hours at the dinner table, a silent listener, or a participant in a very small talk—fashion, cotton, sugar, stock in trade, incidents of travel, etc.

On the other hand, I have been besieged by a good brother to go and spend the night at his home, until the last excuse was exhausted, and I yielded to the inevitable and set out just in time to reach the place at twilight. Following the directions given, I arrive at last at the little opening or clearing, near the center of which is situated a single log-house. When, horror of horrors! I find this to be the residence of my good brother and numerous family, consisting of wife, four grown daughters, two sons and a hired man. But I am encouraged at the sight of a large deer skin stretched by means of nails to its utmost capacity on the outer wall of the house. Soon my horse is disposed of, and one of the sons is dispatched to Neighbor B's to get a sack of corn for his special benefit, my good brother assuring me that my visit was unexpected, notwithstanding it was the very evening agreed upon between him and myself for the visit. I am ushered in through numerous dogs of all ages and sizes, and invited to a seat near the fire-place. A fresh supply of pine wood (called "litter") is thrown on the already blazing fire, notwithstanding I am literally drenched with perspiration. Every eye is as intently fixed upon me as if I were a whole menagerie. Time drags heavily on until the repast, which is spread on a small table in the center of the room. The success of my good brother in killing the deer gives him a theme, and he entertains me for two hours in relating the simple facts of his killing a deer. He tells me how he was impressed with the idea of going hunting; how he revolved the thought in his mind; how he reluctantly yielded to the impression; how he unharnessed his ox from the plow. Then followed a description of the ox, and so minute was his description that I shall certainly know that ox if I ever see him. How the dogs greeted him when he reached the house; what he said to his wife, and what she said to him; how he took his rifle down from the rack. Then followed a description of the rifle, embracing its make-up and the length of time it had been in the family, and quite a number of incidents connected with the history of the rifle, until the good wife said to him, entreatingly: "Well, John, the gala laywone to sleep in their cheeks. We had better have prair, and go to bed."

With a sigh of relief, I wiped the perspiration from my face, and accepted the Testament, and, as best I could, I conducted the worship; after which preparation was made for sleeping, which was doubtless perplexing to the good wife, as, of course, the preacher must occupy one of the two beds, and, consequently, a division must take place, which left each bed poorly supplied with bedding. When the task of arranging beds, pallets, etc., was complete I was shown my bed, and the mother and daughters retired, leaving me the benefit of light on the hearth to light me to bed. Getting to bed was the work of but a few moments. Soon all was darkness, and all seemed to be wrapped in slumber except poor me. I could not adjust myself to the numerous knots, bumps, slats, etc., that were in such close proximity to my aching frame. Very soon I was made painfully conscious that I was not the only animate occupant of that couch. My bed-fellows grew more and more familiar until, like a rapacious pack of wolves, they seemed to have determined to devour me bodily. But, determined to sell my life as dearly as possible, I struck out right and left, with both hands and feet, until exhausted. I decided to arouse mine host. "Bro. C., Bro. C.," I shouted, lustily. "Yes, sir. What will you have, Bro. S.?" he answered. "Will you please arise and rekindle the fire?" "Certainly, Bro. S.," he replied. Soon we had light, which enabled me to survey the field of action, and I fairly chuckled with delight when I saw that the conflict had not been bloodless, and that some of my foes had bravely died on the field of battle, and that others were slowly dragging their bruised and broken bodies from the scene of action.

The good brother kindly entertained me the remainder of the night and until breakfast in the morning with the deer story, and others equally interesting, after which I took my departure a "wailer, if not a better man." Lost in reflections anything but pleasant, I wandered my way to Bro. G., a member of Post Oak Church, where I was to begin a meeting that night. I was greeted at the gate by kind Sister C., who ordered my horse cared for, and who conducted me up the gravel walk (on either side of which grew rare shrubs and flowers) to the neat little cottage on the porch of which I was greeted by her lovely daughters. Soon the ladies came in and, gathering around, plied me with questions, over and over suggesting something for my comfort. Soon Bro. G. came in from the post office with files of late papers, and good news from the neighborhood. The day was spent in reading the church papers, talking and singing, until the hour arrived for service at the church, when we gathered in the parlor and knelt together and asked the blessings of the Lord upon the meeting. After the service at the church, Bro. C. came to me and insisted on my returning and spending the night with him; but I declined, and accepted an invitation to spend the night with Bro. G., notwithstanding I ran the risk of being censured for going to the fat places.

Reminiscences.

BY REV. H. J. HARRIS.

More than three years ago I began to write of men and things I had seen and heard and known during a ministry of more than forty years, little thinking that, with brief mention, I would reach at this date have reached the eighth year. If the record was an attempt at autobiography the material, I am sure, would long since have been exhausted. But as I write my recollections of others, the field widens and enlarges and I may never compass the work in hand. I am urged by many, notwithstanding, to resume the task, still giving you, Mr. Editor, license to say when I shall stop.

My last paper was about the old "Crystal Springs Circuit," afterwards called Cayuga circuit, and the remains of it now known as the Utica circuit, lying altogether in Hinds county, Miss.; whereas, in 1847, when I first traveled there, the circuit embraced parts of three counties—Hinds, Claiborne and Copiah. I have already mentioned a few of the notable men of that region and of that period. I can not take leave of this circuit without some further mention. Rocky Springs, in Claiborne county, was at that time the home of the loved and honored Thos. Owens, Richard Hardlog, the Lums, McClellan, Powers and others, whose names will be cherished, and whose devotion to the church a volume might be written. Only one of these "ancient worthies" still lingers upon these mortal shores—Samuel McClellan. What pleasant retreats, delightful homes we used to have beneath the roofs of those princes of our Israel! They were all men of wealth, but still they were men of God. They attended class and prayer meeting regularly, and sustained the camp meetings with out the aid of "gate fees" or the modern restaurant, ice cream and other luxuries. (I do not object to the supporting plan of modern times, only to the extravagance and almost dissipation that characterize our present "feast of tabernacles.")

The old Bear Creek Church, some nine or ten miles east of Utica, has many names upon her roll that look down from the heights above and say, "I was born there." "Uncle John Ervin," the grandfather of your "glib w," Mr. Editor, was the patriarch of the congregation in those days, and was one of the very few remaining links in the chain that bound us to the generation in which Miles Harper, Thomas Griffin, the Fords, John Burruss Owens, Peter James, Thomas Clinton and Barnabas Pipkin were burning and shining. He was brother-in-law to Miles Harper and connected by marriage to the extensive Ford Pope families, many of whose descendants still live. Whether these names are following in the footsteps of their "illustrious predecessors" is not known to their neighbors; but surely, if they have failed to heed the precepts and imitate the example of their fathers, they will have cause to regret their folly when it may be too late. "Uncle John Ervin" was the last one of the spiritual giants of that day who succumbed to the power of death. None of his sons have yet, far as I know, aspired to fill his place in the church. Thomas Griffin lived in this neighborhood; was, perhaps, one of the original settlers, but not sure but Dr. E. P. Lowe now owns a part of the tract on which Thomas Griffin resided. During this year of the succeeding one (1847-48) my old league, Bro. Strickland, the master church builder of his time, succeeded in creating several good houses of worship on this circuit, for some of which, unfortunately, he received more commendation than thanks, and to accomplish good work, sacrificed freely of his private means. Our immediate predecessor, P. B. Baily, however, had guaranteed this good work.

I remained but one year on the

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1886.

Bishop Keener left on Tuesday for Baltimore, accompanied by his wife and his son, the Rev. Christian Keener. We are glad to learn that Bro. Keener's health has greatly improved. The Bishop will proceed to Richmond after a few days among old friends and relatives in Baltimore.

Returning from Columbus on Saturday last, we ran up to West Point, at the solicitation of Bro. Kilgore and made a talk on prohibition. An impromptu audience, gotten up in about two hours, quite filled the court-house, and gave diligent heed to an earnest message. Quite a number of colored people were present, everyone of whom we believe will cast a pure ballot on election day. Our brethren in Clay county are organizing and marshalling their forces for victory. We believe it is almost assured. To Bro. White we make acknowledgments for cordial hospitality and to Pastor Kilgore for the privilege of a delightful visit.

The election in Alcorn county last week resulted in a majority against prohibition of forty-two. This apparent defeat was a real victory for reform. The whisky men expected to carry the county by five hundred majority. They were organized and succeeded in precipitating the election, giving only twenty days for the canvass. Six of the ten precincts in the county gave prohibition majorities. Corinth, the county seat, went for reform by a handsome vote, and no saloon can be opened there. It is believed that a majority of the negroes voted for prohibition. This should be remembered and used to advantage in other counties. Now after the election, under the operation of this new local option law, it is doubted if a single saloon can be opened in this county. We congratulate Bro. Mitchell and his collaborators upon their gallant fight. They are ready and eager for another contest.

The following item with accompanying comments is taken from the Meridian Daily News. So gratifying is the statement and so just the commendation of the railroad authorities, that we take real delight in its transference to our columns. It will be a great day for our Christian civilization when the example of the Mobile and Ohio railroad will be the practice of every line of railway in the United States:

The action of the Mobile and Ohio railroad in stopping the running of freight trains on Sunday is a grand move. Besides the coveted rest of the Sabbath which it gives to its employees, it will stand as one of the highest moral lessons enacted in this country in a long time. We hope it will be the good work of the old reliable to prove and practically demonstrate that the produce of this great country, so blessed of God, can be moved without trampling on this Divine command, and that other roads will soon follow its praiseworthy example. If the railroads will but determine to do it, the convenience of business can be made to yield to the Sabbath, instead of the Sabbath being made to yield to the convenience of business.

This from the Pittsburg Christian Advocate will do to pass around:

"That is a good story which the Rev. Dr. Rust, secretary of the Freedmen's Aid Society, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, tells to the Annual Conference before which he presents the claims of his society. A young negro in the South had been converted, and at once wanted to preach. His elders thought he was not fitted for the important work; but he well nigh staggered them by relating a vision, in which he had plainly seen the letters, 'G. P. C.'—which could mean only, 'Go preach Christ.' A white-haired negro preacher slowly arose, and told the ambitious young brother that, while he had no doubt seen the letters in a vision, he had failed in the interpretation. They probably meant, 'Go pick cotton,' or, 'Go plough corn.' This settled the matter. A preacher in the New York Conference, when the story was told a few days ago, remarked to a friend sitting near: 'I wish we had men in our white Conferences sharp enough to explain away as satisfactorily the arguments by which our young incompetents try to convince the committees that they have been called to preach the gospel.'

The Georgia Evangelists at Columbus, Miss.

The revival meetings conducted by Revs. Sam Jones and Sam Small at Columbus, Miss., were remarkable for spiritual power and the great number of conversions. In large cities grander audiences have crowded to hear the evangelists; but it is doubted if proportionate results have been greater anywhere in their wonderful ministry. From far and near the multitudes gathered to Columbus, and at each hour for service two large churches were packed with eager congregations. Sam Small began the meetings on Sunday, and conducted them alone, holding three services a day, until Sam Jones arrived on Wednesday morning. Mr. Small charmed the immense multitudes, and his preaching was blessed of God in the conversion of many souls. He is a polished gentleman, finely educated, profoundly consecrated, and intent on the winning of souls to Christ. Entirely different in manner and mental characteristics from Sam Jones, they are admirable and mutually helpful collaborators.

Of Sam Jones much has been and more will be written. He is a man of genius. In manner and method he is the one representative of the race. There never was another like him, and his generation will cease with the end of his days. Rarely, wonderfully endowed, he has come to the kingdom for such a time as this. We sat under the spell of his power, and tried to study the secret of his marvelous success.

This must be borne in mind—the ordinary newspaper reports of his sermons and sayings convey a very inadequate idea of the man. One must see and hear him to discover and admire his genius. It is the man, back of his brilliant and biting sayings, that charms and convinces. From reading the papers the conclusion is naturally drawn that he is merely a satirical delineator of character, a fierce denunciator of shams, or a sort of brilliant free lance in the pulpit. Instead, he has the tenderness of a woman, indescribable pathos and a poetic conception equal to Burns.

We were most agreeably surprised in Sam Jones as a preacher. He is a lucid, able expositor of the word. The exegesis is luminous; the arrangement, logical; the statement of propositions, singularly clear and concise; the illustrations, varied and apt; the argument, convincing, and the application often grandly eloquent. A distinguished jurist remarked to us in Columbus, that Sam Jones' power of condensed statement excelled any man's he ever heard either in the pulpit or at the bar.

He is an orator without appearing so to be. He is a perfect actor without the slightest suggestion of attempting histrionic effect. His entire naturalness and equanimity impress his audiences with the assurance of an exhaustless reserve power. This keeps up expectation until the last syllable has been uttered, and, though an hour and a half has passed, there is pleasurable disappointment that the discourse is so short. This makes the crowd eager to come again. His most enthusiastic hearers were those who heard him often. They were sure of something better the next time. There was no indication of exhausted forces and resources.

Withal he is a man of sincere, simple piety. The zeal of his Divine commission consumes him. He is bent on glorious toil—the wise winning of souls. To arrest the wayward, to convince the doubting, to unmask the self-righteous, to alarm the unconcerned, to arouse those at ease in Zion, and establish the sincere in the faith, command his every faculty of mind and energy of soul. Not for fame, but from the constraint of Christ's love, does he labor. Though he denounces sin with a sublime audacity, he yet manifests the yearning tenderness of a loving friend. He uses ridicule for the Master's sake.

Sam Jones has the genius of common sense. His discernment of character is wonderful and almost unerring. This makes him a master of assemblies. He knows what to say, and when and how to say it, in order to the accomplishment of the greatest good. He is seemingly never embarrassed or abashed.

The results of the meeting at Columbus can never be tabulated. There is no human arithmetic for computing spiritual things. The numbers added to the several churches may be enumerated; but who can count the doubts removed, the visions enlarged, the hopes kindled, the sorrows assuaged and the backslidings reclaimed? These are written in the chronicles of the skies. The churches of Columbus have received a baptism of power more significant than the numerical increase of membership. And what a world of work has been given the diligent pastors of that city! How much must now be done in the way of teaching, nurturing and organizing!

We regretted that our stay was so short; but other duties called us away on Saturday morning. To our special friend, Dr. R. W. Jones, president of the State Female College, we are indebted for true homelike hospitality. Bro. "Gilderry" and this editor shared the shelter of that genial home. Dr. Jones has demonstrated eminent abilities as an organizer and the administrator of a large institution of learning. There are over three hundred young ladies in the college during this the first term of the institution, and everything moves like clock-work. We were pleased to learn of the fine religious tone of the college, and that so many of the pupils had been blessed by the meetings. Space forbids further mention of sights and insights on that pleasant visit.

The Bishop's Domicile.

"Of course a domicile does not make a resident Bishop in a technical sense. Certainly there is no violation or evasion of any law for a Bishop to reside in Richmond, Nashville, Baltimore, or Shanghai. But when our brother of the Wesleyan Advocate intimates that this General Conference, by resolution, can fix these residences, we do claim there is legal objection. The Bishops can and should arrange this important matter themselves, but the General Conference can not do it.—N. O. ADVOCATE."

Now, if there is anything which the Wesleyan Christian Advocate has not "intimated" being in favor of, it is just that. In both our editorials, on the subject we stated our objection to it, argued against it, and illustrated our argument. We even went so far as to intimate that the General Conference ought not to propose a Bishop from living in China. If he chose to do so, or his colleagues advised it. We could hardly believe our own eyes, therefore, when we saw the above copied into the Nashville Advocate, where it first struck our attention. We commend to our brethren of the NEW ORLEANS and NASHVILLE ADVOCATES Ruskin's lecture on "How to Read."

We oppose General Conference action fixing the residence of the Bishops, but our opposition is not based on any supposed legal restraints, but on the deeper, broader ground of competency in our system.—Wesleyan Advocate.

It quite surprised us to read the above disclaimer of our good friend, Dr. Potter. We do not deny him the inalienable right of interpreting his own writings; but not only the entire trend of one of his editorials, but some specific passages, impressed us with the view quoted above and commented upon. From his article we reproduced and here republish, the following:

It strikes us as very strange to see persons writing against a Bishop's going to live in China, as though his doing so would make him a resident Bishop. Suppose the General Conference should say by resolution or the evident drift of debate, a Bishop ought not to live in Tennessee, would that be any more violation or evasive of our economy that to say by like action or debate that a Bishop ought to live in China?

Did not Bishop Granbery move from Richmond to St. Louis? Might not Bishop Wilson move from Baltimore to Shanghai without violating or evading any law?

Now, we submit that our conferees' supposed case in the second paragraph logically and grammatically justified our comments. If the General Conference can say "by resolution" that a Bishop ought not to reside in a certain locality, it has the authority to say where he ought to be domiciled. If our brother did not intend to convey the idea that the General Conference could "by resolution or the evident drift of debate" declare against a certain place of residence, there is no force in his supposition. Why introduce into an argument an unassailable proposition?

But, of course, every writer has a right to explain his own language. If the Wesleyan is on the orthodox side of this question, we are pleased to know it. We only want to show that so far as this case is concerned, there is no need for our going to school again with Ruskin's "How to Read" as a text book.

New Orleans District Conference.

This body met in the Carondelet Street Church, on Friday evening of last week, with Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker, presiding elder of the district, in the chair. The Rev. J. H. Harrison was elected secretary. All the pastors of the district, the local preachers and a goodly number of lay delegates were present. Rev. B. S. Rayner, of the Mississippi Conference, and Rev. R. S. Holcombe, agent of the American Bible Society, were in attendance and invited to seats within the bar of Conference. Reports from the pastors, covering the disciplinary questions, were made, showing some substantial progress. Handsome new churches have been built during the past year at Carrollton and Plaquemine.

The following were elected a Board of Trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground: W. H. Foster, E. P. Mackie, P. Werlein, T. J. Carver, H. Jamieson, Jr., B. O. L. Rayne, L. T. Bell and J. H. Campman.

Delegates to the Annual Conference were elected as follows: H. Jamieson, Jr., B. O. L. Rayne, W. H. Foster and Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, LL.D. Alternates: Dr. J. W. Adams, F. A. Daniels, Jr.

Board of Church Extension.

The fourth annual meeting of the Board of Church Extension was held in the city of Louisville, beginning April 8 and closed on the tenth. The occasion is represented as most profitable and pleasant. There was a good attendance of the members, with a number of visitors from abroad. Among the latter were Dr. D. C. Kelley; Dr. T. H. B. Anderson, of the Pacific Conference; Rev. L. B. Stetler, of the Montana Conference; Rev. W. B. Stradley, of the Los Angeles Conference, and Rev. L. P. Norfleet, of the Southwest Missouri Conference. Bishops McIntyre, Granbery and Hargrove were present and took an active interest in the proceedings.

The Board appropriated $20,000 in donations and $6,950 in loans. Of the 120 applications before the Board for aid, only 67 could be granted. Many worthy cases had to be laid over for lack of means.

The following is the summary of the work done by the Board during the first quadrennium. It is certainly a grand exhibit.

"The total amount from all sources, raised and disbursed, shows that good work has been done in this new and important department of church work. This sum foots up $145,242.23. Churches helped by loan fund, 26—to the extent of $28,950; 81 churches have been helped by donation by the General Board to the extent of $34,694.08. The Conference Boards have helped 459 churches in 38 Conferences, to which were given $51,671.33, and showing that during the quadrennium the General and the Conference Boards together have helped by donations 540 churches, to which were given $86,365.63. To which add 12 helped by loans from General Board, amounting to $28,950, and you have 552 churches aided, which received $115,315.63."

Competent and Convincing Testimony.

No charge is more industriously reiterated by the rum power than the utter inoperativeness of prohibitory laws. "Prohibition does not prohibit," they repeat with boldness and emphasis. That is a question of fact and can only be settled by testimony. Competent and convincing testimony accumulates to disprove the baseless assumption. The latest comes from Alexandria, La. In that and the Pineville wards, of Rapides parish, the police jury have been besieged with petitions for a ballot on the question. This led at length to an application to the district attorney for an official written report as to the practical result of the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the parish, with reference to the enforcement of the law in this courts, an estimate of the cost to the parish of prosecutions, and the effect of prohibition as to the diminution of crimes usually chargeable to the influence of liquor. The district attorney, Col. J. C. Wickliffe, responded with a full and accurate report, which has been filed with the police jury. A synopsis of the admirable paper telegraphed to the Times-Democrat is here reproduced for the benefit of friends of reform everywhere:

In the two years since prohibition forty-two, showing an increase of fourteen cases in offenses not affected by whisky. The cases of personal violence disposed of in the two years preceding prohibition were fifty-three; in the two years following prohibition were thirty-two, a decrease of twenty-one cases which are affected by whisky. In the two years prior to prohibition fifteen murder cases were disposed of in this parish. In the two years following prohibition but four murder cases were disposed of.

Prior to prohibition the average number of cases investigated by each grand jury was 180, since prohibition 75. Prior to prohibition the average number of indictments returned by each grand jury was 50; since prohibition, 20. About 35 per cent. of the persons prosecuted for violating the prohibition ordinance have been convicted. The cost of all the prosecutions for violating the prohibition ordinance in this parish since its adoption, two years ago, has been about $234.

The increase of cases of offenses against property, a class of cases which are not affected by whisky, shows an increased vigilance on the part of grand juries since prohibition, while the decrease in cases of personal violence, a class of cases which are affected by whisky, shows that the grand jury have failed to detect by a large number as many of these crimes as were committed before prohibition. The decrease of cases reported for prosecution will necessarily entail a large decrease in criminal expenses, and this at an expense to the parish for enforcing the prohibition ordinance of less than $150.

Reformed Judaism.

A Hebrew friend gave us recently a copy of The Jewish Reformer, a paper published in New York and edited with signal ability. It is the exponent of advanced thought in Jewish theology and certainly indicates a marked drift toward a true Christology. In an "exceptionally able editorial article on 'What Constitutes Judaism'" an emphatic protest is entered against the hierarchical assumptions of certain Rabbinical doctors of the old orthodox school. The Reform favors the transfer of the Jewish Sabbath to Sunday, the abolition of the Dietary and Matrimonial Laws of "Mosaic-Rabbinical Judaism" and the Hebrew ritual, and the renunciation of the idea of national restoration with all the expectations and notions connected with this form of the Messianic hope. We can but regard the growth of these doctrines as most momentous and auspicious. What the near future will disclose no prophet can declare. This we know, that the teachings of Jesus the Christ, are commanding more and more the homage of the world. We make some quotations from the Reformer:

Moreover, suppose a congress of representative Jews of America and Occidental Europe would—for ought we know—lifty or twenty years hence, would for the sake of preserving Judaism and from mere religious necessity agree upon the transfer of the Jewish Sabbath to Sunday as the civil day of rest, would the learned professors of Budapest exclude the Jews of the entire Occidental world from the inheritance of God? Would they have the arrogance and stupidity to say that these millions of Jews stand no longer on the fundamental doctrines of the decalogue?

Well do they know that, with the exception of a small respectable minority, the Jews, wherever they have come into closer social intercourse with the Gentile world, have long since broken away from Mosaic-Rabbinical Judaism, if not in theory and in clearly defined principles, at least in practice, in their everyday life. But instead of countenancing these facts fairly and squarely, instead of admitting the principle of historical growth and progress underlying the whole course of Judaism, they would rather insist on having the Jews come every year once and twice with their lips before God to ask his forgiveness for having transgressed the laws on diet, etc., etc.

The Time-Limit in English Methodism.

In a very vigorous article on "The Crisis in London Methodism," the Methodist Times makes a bold plea for the extension of the three years' limit of this pastoral term. The Times represents the younger and more aggressive Methodism of England and is doubtless an accurate interpreter of current ecclesiastical thought. It has advocated the release of district chairmen from circuit work—our present presiding eldership—and a grand scheme for a forward movement in London Methodism. Both suggestions are under consideration by a large representative committee, and will doubtless be adopted. The plan for work in London contemplates a seemingly large outlay of money, but will certainly yield a magnificent result. In order to its accomplishment an extension of the time-limit is demanded. The Times says:

"We may appoint whom we like, but until we realize that the filling of a huge London chapel at the end of the nineteenth century needs a different system from that which admirably suits a country circuit, Great Queen Street Chapel will continue to be a failure. God alone knows how gigantic and far-reaching an evil that failure is. It casts a dark shadow over London Methodism. It is silently and ceaselessly educating thousands of young Methodists from the country to believe that Methodism is played out. It is breaking the hearts of eloquent ministers, and blighting the enthusiasm of the younger generation. What a change has come over the Established Church in London since St. Paul's Cathedral—once as feeble as Great Queen Street Chapel—has been adapted to the needs and habits of the nineteenth century! A similar change would come over London Methodism if the glad news went forth that the mighty building in Great Queen Street was once more crowned with a rejoicing multitude. And it would be so easy to fill it, if we only admitted that the mission of Methodism is not to preserve and worship ecclesiastical relics, but to spread scriptural holiness through the land. If John Wesley were permitted to rise from the dead, with what astonishment and with what indignation would he hear the doctrine that the preservation of the three years' limit and of all the machinery of the buried past should override every other consideration! The three years' limit is most successfully emptying our largest chapels in town and country. We believe that the principle of the itinerancy is allurable. The Churches of England and of Scotland are beginning to realize their need of it. We, at any rate, advocate more strongly than ever the principle of the itinerancy. But to apply the principle to a chapel like Great Queen Street, in this extreme form of a three years' limit, is to reduce the principle to absurdity. Three years is often quite long enough in a country village or small town, but three years in Great Queen Street is one of those grotesque and fantastic perversions of a great and beneficent principle which make angels weep. To think that we have such a magnificent cathedral in Great Queen Street, and yet go on deliberately year after year keeping it half empty! The remedy is so obvious and so easy. Appoint Great Queen Street such a man as Mr. Oliphert, who has been so successful at Paddington. Let him have no other to look after, and appoint him for six years as you appoint departmental officials. No departmental official has in hand so arduous and so spiritual a task as the evangelization of one of the greatest districts in London. Surely we might give an ambassador of God to the people of London the same chance that we give a secretary who keeps accounts or a tutor who teaches the elements of education! Then, if the blessing of God rests upon the great undertaking, it is mutually agreeable, when it is mutually agreeable, we are appointed for a second term of years. By the end of that time we will probably have done all that we can do on that spot, and new blood should be introduced. Of course it is assumed that during his term of service each minister will be allowed to adapt and modify the methods of work. The one condition should be success. If he succeeds, all religious irregularities should be forgiven, if he does not succeed, no degree of propriety or amiability should release him from the necessity of quitting the spot promptly, and making way for someone else.

"Was Christ a Jewish Priest?"

The question, "Was Christ a Jewish Priest?" is more curious than profitable, and, yet, it is not without some interest to the Bible student. He was and is and ever will be the Priest of humanity—a Priest forever. John the Baptist was the son of a priest, in the regular line of succession from Aaron. He was also a prophet. The Spirit of Inspiration was on him. Guided by this Spirit, he washed, or baptized, Christ, as required by the law, preparatory to the Divine anointing. The Spirit of the law was maintained—"righteousness was fulfilled." It was becoming in Christ and John to conform to the law that far. When Christ was into the Temple and took charges, it began to perform some of the functions of a Jewish priest, the chief priests, scribes and elders came upon him and asked, "By what authority doest thou these things? or whogave thee this authority?" Christ answered, in substance, "John gave me this authority when he baptized me." Luke xix, 45-48 and xx, 19. If John's baptism were of heaven, then Christ had the authority of God for what he did. The questioners were afraid to say it was of men. John was a prophet Divinely inspired, and knew what he was doing. John was both priest and prophet, and Christ was prophet, priest and king. David had taken liberties with sacred things long before Christ came, and all the Jews honored David. Melchisedek and Christ were priests of the same order—both were called of God to the priesthood. Abraham, the prince and father of the Jews, honored Melchisedek and paid tithes to him. It would not be the Jews to do by Christ, as the father had done by Melchisedek. This seems to be the drift and current of Paul's argument in Hebrews vii. He is trying to show the Jew why they should accept Christ as their priest. God had a priest before Aaron, who was not of that order and why might he not have another not of that line? Was the law given to be limited to one line and to one family of that tribe? Surely this were magnifying law above God.

Many of our controversies about orders, ordinations and the like are nothing but old rituals gone to seed. If God calls a man to preach and use him in the salvation of souls, what fools we are to sit in judgment and condemn him because he is not of the tribe of Levi nor of the family of Aaron. We still ask, "Who gave thee this authority?"

Fruits, fruits. Fruits are the prayer tests. "By their fruits shall know them." If God ordains and blesses a man it is folly for me to turn up my nose, and say, "He has not been baptized—has not been properly ordained." For the sake of order, and to prevent confusion, ordain men. Ordination confers gifts. It becometh us to conform to the rules and regulations of the churches, but we need not magnify them above God.

Diseases Of The Stomach

The Liver, Kidneys, and Bowels, originate in impure blood. When the action of these organs is impaired, the general health becomes endangered, and prompt treatment is indispensable. For the cure of these diseases, and all disorders of the blood, the most effective and economical medicine is Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

I have suffered enough, with a disordered Liver and to kill a dozen men. Ayer's Sarsaparilla has cured me. — Wm. H. Mulvin, 122 North Main St., Boston, Mass.

I suffered greatly from Kidney Complaint, for two years. After trying many remedies, without relief, I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and was cured. — M. H. Disney, Attleboro, Mass.

For several years I suffered from Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint, the latter being so severe, at times, that I could scarcely attend to my work. My appetite was poor, and I was much emaciated; but, by using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, my health has been perfectly restored. — John McElahan, Bridge and Third sts., Lowell, Mass.

A few bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured me of Kidney Complaint, from which I had suffered for years. It is the most effective remedy I ever used. — Philip G. Raymond, Duluth, Minn.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured me of Kidney disease when all other remedies failed. It is the best of remedies for this complaint. — Eli Todd, Xenia, Ill.

I was a long time under treatment for Heart Disease, and an affection of the Kidneys, but after using Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after taking a number of bottles of this medicine, the difficulties of my heart and kidneys ceased, and I am in better health, every way, than I have been for years. — E. C. Davis, Jamestown, N. Y.

A disordered condition of the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys, afflicted me for years, and I never found any medicine to relieve me, until I commenced taking

As is sensitive to ailments affecting any other part of the body as a thermometer is to changes of temperature. When the blood becomes vitiated, the stomach is one of the first organs to suffer. Ayer's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, and restores to the stomach the vigor required for the natural performance of its functions.

I suffered greatly, for over two years, with a disordered Stomach and obtained no relief until I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has restored my health. — Mrs. M. F. Humboldt, Lawrence St., Lowell, Mass.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla in my family, for years. As a blood purifier it has no equal. It proves invaluable in diseases of the Stomach and Liver. — J. J. Stoddard, Parkersburg, W. Va.

My wife was long subject to severe Headaches, the result of stomach and liver disorders. After trying various remedies, without relief, she used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a short time, was cured. — S. Page, 21 Austin St., Lowell, Mass.

I gratefully certify that I have been cured of liver and stomach troubles

By Taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was sick, for a number of years, with these complaints: suffered from Headache, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, and Debility, and finally became so weak that I was utterly unfit for business of any kind. Neither of the remedies I tried seemed to relieve me, and I had given up all hope of being well again, when a friend recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I commenced using this medicine, and, after taking a few bottles, was completely cured. My liver and stomach are now in a healthy condition, performing their functions naturally. — D. M. Ross, Bucksport, Me.

For a number of years I suffered with Dry Salt-Rheum. I tried various mineral springs, but neither these nor physicians did me any good. Upon the recommendation of a friend I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than six bottles of this remedy cured me. — R. Wild, Hutto, Tex.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER
Secretes the bile and acts like a filter to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action, or suspensions of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhoea, a languid, weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms generally termed liver troubles. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood restorer.

Dr. JOHN BULL— I have been for a number of years severely afflicted with a mercurial headache and a dull, heavy pain in my liver. Three bottles of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA gave me three relief from all the above complaints.

Dr. JOHN BULL— I have examined the prescription for the preparation of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, and believe the combination to be an excellent one, and well calculated to produce an allusive impression on the system. I have used it both in public and private practice, and think it the best article of Sarsaparilla in use.

M. PYLE, M. D., Louisville, Ky.
Res. Phys. at Lou. Marine Hosp.

KIDNEYS
Are the great secretory organs of the body. Into and through the Kidneys flow the waste fluids containing poisonous matter taken from the system. If the Kidneys do not properly filter the blood, the poisons are retained, and the blood, causing headache, weakness, pain in the small of back and loins, flushes of heat, chills, and disordered stomach and bowels. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA acts as a diuretic on the kidneys and bowels, and directly on the blood as well, causing the great organs of the body to resume their natural functions, and health is at once restored.

Dr. JOHN BULL— I have used BULL'S SARSAPARILLA for Rheumatism, Gout, and my son has taken it for asthma and general debility. It has given us both great relief.

KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

DYSPEPSIA
Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach; heartburn, wind in the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. There is no form of disease more prevalent than Dyspepsia, and it can in all cases be traced to an enfeebled or poisoned condition of the blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Dr. JOHN BULL— I have no hesitation in saying that I believe your Sarsaparilla to be the best medicine for the cure of Scrofula, syphilis, and many other cutaneous and glandular affections, having used it with entire success in numbers of the above cases.

JAMES MOORE, Louisville, Ky.

Dr. JOHN BULL— I presented one bottle of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA for my son. Among the remedies and various prescriptions that he has tried for weak lungs and chest, this one bottle has been of more benefit to him than all the others.

Dr. JOHN BULL— I have no opinion that your preparation of SARSAPARILLA is decidedly superior to any other now in use, and I will take great pleasure in recommending it for the cure of Scrofula and all diseases of the blood and kidneys.

H. R. ALLEN, M. D., Bradford, Ky.

SCROFULA
Is a peculiar morbid condition of the system, caused directly by impurities in the blood or by the lack of sufficient nourishment furnished to the system through the blood, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, blotchy eruptions on the face or neck. Erysipelas is akin to it and is often mistaken for Scrofula as it comes from the same cause, impure blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by purifying the blood and toning up the system forces the impurities from the blood and cleanses the system through the regular channels.

Dr. JOHN BULL— I have no opinion that your preparation of SARSAPARILLA is decidedly superior to any other now in use, and I will take great pleasure in recommending it for the cure of Scrofula and all diseases of the blood and kidneys.

TRADE MARK

A WONDERFUL and SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THESE GLASSES ARE CHEMICALLY TREATED IN THE PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE, AND possess the property of keeping your eyes in good condition, as when first you use them. They have been carefully examined and analyzed by American and European oculists, who claim that the MEDICATED GLASSES have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the sight, if used in time, but in no case can the eye become impaired by their use for the following reasons:

1. The chemicals make the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that is usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours of use.
2. The chemicals make the glasses hard; they retain their polish. Hence you will always see through them as bright and clear as at first.
3. The chemicals keep the glasses cool, and the result is that the optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye.
4. With these glasses you can read, write or see all night, the light having no effect on the eye, with no dimming or tireless sensation, which necessarily improves the eye.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS—NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED.

The MEDICATED GLASSES are all stamped on the frame H. HOUSAH, MEDICATED.

Our Young People.

A YEAR AGO.

BY GEORGE KINSELE.

I was a rich a year ago
That every day
A little child looked up to me
And I played
I was so rich because
The child was mine;
I did not think he was but least
A little time.
I dreamed for him bright dreams,
And he
The child that he built
Were all for me.
I can not tell you, if I try,
How golden bright
The hand upon my pillow
Every night.
I never could be told
I wish I could—
How sweet this child of mine—
How sweet, how good;
Or how rich I felt myself;
You do not know
How very rich I was
A year ago.

Mr. Editor: As I have never seen a letter from this place, I thought I would write one. I am a little girl eight years old. I have never gone to school, but study at home. I have been through the fifth reader three times. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. I am in the intermediate class. I will answer Dolly Kennedy's question. It is in Psalms lvi, 8.

Your little friend,
JENNIE E. LUTER.
Big Creek, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: As I have never written a letter to the ADVOCATE, I will write one. I am a little girl thirteen years old. My mother is dead. She died last September. I have two brothers and three sisters living, and one sister and five brothers dead. I will close by asking the little cousins a question: Where in the Bible is the word "girl" found?

Your little friend,
CARRIE HOSEA.
Rolling Green, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: I am a little girl thirteen years of age. I live two miles and a half from Denton. I go to school every day when I am well. My teacher's name is Prof. Wooten. He has sixty-two scholars. I am going to attend Sunday-school when the weather gets good. My papa has been taking the dear old ADVOCATE about twenty years. I will close by asking the little people a question: Where is the word "confectioneries" found in the Bible? I remain,

Your little friend,
MAUD MIDDLETON.
Denton, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: I am a little boy ten years old. We live one mile from Haynesville. My papa is a farmer, and I am very fond of helping him work. I am going to school this year. We have a very fine school. Our teacher is a young Methodist preacher. His name is Bro. Godfrey. I will close by asking a question: What chapter in the Bible speaks of "bonnets being put on men"? Many good wishes to the dear old ADVOCATE.

Your little friend,
EDWARD BROWN.
Haynesville, Louisiana.

Mr. Editor: I am just thirteen years of age. As you are so kind as to supply the young folks with a column in your nice paper, I thought I would address you with a few lines. I have four brothers and one sister. We are living with our father and mother about six miles below the V. S. and N. R. R. We have such a nice time fishing in the summer. I wish for summer all the time. Well, I will close by asking the young folks a question: In what portion of the Bible will you find "slumbering"?

Your little friend,
NETTIE A. RANDELL.
Delhi, Louisiana.

Mr. Editor: I have come this beautiful spring morning to gain admittance to your happy circle of little cousins, and, if you think proper to permit me, I will speak a few words, hoping my first attempt will not find its way to that waste-basket. My papa does not take the ADVOCATE, but my grandpa does. He lends it to us, and we enjoy the reading so much. I have two brothers living, and one dead. I have one little sister with large blue eyes. We call her Laura. I am going to day-school now. My teacher is Uncle Jeff Liddell. I like to go very much. He has but one arm, is a very large man, but is just as lively and clever as he is large. I have one little brother going to school that is only four years old, and who will soon be in the third reader. Uncle's, also, Bible class teacher at our church, called Ebenezer. He is loved by all the scholars. We have a juvenile missionary society called Willing Workers. Parker McDonald is our president. I collected ten dollars last year for our society, and received a pretty badge with name May Noyl (the name of the little Chinese girl we are helping to educate) stamped on in gold letters. Our good pastor, Rev. J. P. Drake, also presented me Scott's poetical works, of which I was very proud; but mamma says in working for our Saviour we should not expect presents, although we appreciate them when given. We have an organ in our church. We would enjoy the singing so much, but Mrs. Maddux who performs is now dangerously ill in New Orleans. We hope she will soon return to us in safety. I wish some of you dear cousins could accompany me in visiting my grandma. What delightful times we would have playing among the flowers! I will answer Emma N. Patton's question: The word "cucumber" is found in Numbers xl, 6; Isaiah l, 8. Now, I will ask a question: Who was the only plowman mentioned in Scriptures? Your little friend, SALLIE A. RUSKIN.

Fayette, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: As my papa takes your valuable paper, and you have never seen a letter from this vicinity, I thought you would appreciate one, even if it is written by a little school-girl. Bro. Burton is pastor of our church this year. He is a fluent speaker, and has won the admiration of all. We have a flourishing Sunday-school at our church. Mr. M. M. West is our worthy superintendent. I will ask a few questions: What was the greatest miracle Christ performed? What verse is it that has forty-two Ps? As we have just reorganized our Sunday-school we only have twenty-three names on the roll. Miss Lizzie Bate, of Summit, Miss., is teacher of the intermediate quarterly, and we, the members of her class, are striving to win the laurels in the Sunday-school. Miss Lizzie is also principal of our day-school. A. B. Weeks, Esq., of Uca, was teacher of class B; but his day-school having closed, he has bid us farewell, though his absence has left an aching void in the hearts of both his Sunday-school and day-schoolers that none other can fill. Our quarterly meeting will convene at P. R., the seventeenth and eighteenth, and we anticipate some excellent preaching from our new pastor and elder.

Your little friend,
FLORA SELLERS.
Hazelhurst, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: As I have not seen any letters from Magnolia, I will write one to the ADVOCATE. I am a little girl ten years old. My papa takes your valuable paper, and I am always eager to get hold of it, that I may read the little cousins' letters, as I find them so interesting and valuable. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. My teacher is Miss Mary Copes, and I like her very much. My superintendent is Mr. T. C. Simmons, and is liked by all of the scholars, as he is very kind to all of us. I will answer Dolly Kennedy's question. It is found in Psalms lvi, 8. I will close for this time by asking the little folks, where in the Bible are these words found, "I will water thee with my tears"? Hoping as this is my first letter, it may not find its way to the waste-basket.

Your little friend,
ROSA B. LAZAR.
Magnolia, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: As I have never seen a letter from this place, I thought I would write to you. I am a boy about fifteen years old. I am going to school to Mr. A. J. Hutto. We have a large Sabbath school at our church, and I like to go very much. My papa takes your dear paper, and I like to read it very much, especially the little folks' letters. We live near Vossburg, a small town on the N. O., and N. E. R. R. I will answer Albert Talley's question: Abaz was the father of Hezekiah. It is found in II Kings xviii, l. I will also answer Mary Robertson's question: Methuselah was Noah's grandfather. It is found in Genesis v. I will close by asking, where in the Bible is it mentioned that King Og had an iron bedstead? What book in the Bible is the Lord's name not mentioned?

Your little friend,
HORACE E. RUSHER.
Vossburg, Mississippi.

ask a question: On what did Christ write the only sentence he ever wrote? Your little friend, EDNA A. HOWARD.

Mr. Editor: We are always glad to get the ADVOCATE. It is very interesting to me, especially the children's column. I have four sisters, and one little brother. We live about two miles from the church. We go to Sunday-school. Bro. W. A. King is our superintendent. We were all delighted with your visit to Adams last year, and hope you will come and preach for us again. Ollie M. Rape, the answer to your question is found in II Kings ii. Now, I will ask a question: Where in the Bible is the word "pulpit" found? Please do not put this in the waste-basket, that the little folks seem to be so afraid of. With many good wishes to you and the ADVOCATE, I remain,
Your little friend,
GEORGE CARRUTH.
Summit, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: Mamma takes your paper, and I read the letters of the little people with delight. It gives a relief for the study of God's word. We want the readers of your valuable paper to hear something from us, and hope you will give this little communication a place. We have a prosperous and interesting Sabbath-school for the children, and, in addition, a juvenile missionary society was organized for us last September. We call our society Bethesda's Little Workers. We organized with seventeen members, now we have thirty. We meet every third Sunday, and oh! how we enjoy these meetings. We read and recite psalms in the interest of the missionary cause, and we hope to hear from other societies for our encouragement. I will answer Carrie Tyre's question. It is found in John xi, 35. I want to ask a question: Who was the first missionary?

DIUTURNITY.

A Complete Essay, by Rev. E. ARREY. Showing the world's infamy. Its present future. Undiscovered treasures. Indestructibility. Wisdom of Providence. The gift of science. Scope of Christianity. Folly of a nation. A human record coming of Christ, and the glorious destiny of mankind.

Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.50 by Mail.

"No ordinary ability is displayed. Have read the whole book with interest and pleasure. Very readable and very remarkable book."—Tr. Abel Stevens, in N. Y. Aitken.

Mr. Editor: As I have never written to the ADVOCATE, I thought I would do so now. I am a little girl twelve years old. Mamma takes your good paper, and we all like it very much. I like to read the children's letters. I go to Sunday-school when I can. Mr. Strong is our superintendent. Bro. Sullivan is our pastor. He preaches every first and third Sunday. We like him very much. I will ask the little cousins a question: Where in the Bible is the word "grass" found? As this is my first attempt to write, I will close, hoping this will not reach that horrid waste-basket. With love to all, I remain,
Your little friend,
MINNIE H. JACKSON.

Obituaries.

ARMISTEAD.—Died, at the residence of Robert L. Armistead, Clarke county, Ala., December 4, 1885, Mrs. NANCY E. ARMISTEAD, aged fifty-two years. She was the daughter of Matthew and Eleanor Cox. She was twice married. Her first union was with James H. Gilmore, February 11, 1852; after his death to Robert L. Armistead, December 17, 1865. She joined the Baptist Church in early life, and soon after the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which she remained a member until Jesse made her come up higher. This eldly lady's death was a very sad one, and cast a gloom over the entire neighborhood. She was visiting a neighbor in company with Mrs. Maria Armistead, and on returning home the horse ran away with the buggy and threw her out against a tree, from which injury she lingered but a few days. The writer was her near neighbor until five years ago, ever since the war; and some of the happiest moments of his life have been spent listening to her tell her daily experience and communion with Christ. In looking through her diary a few days after her death, we find she was fully consecrated to God and waiting for the call to be borne to that haven of rest. She was a good neighbor, a true and devoted wife, and all that constitutes the sweetest mother. She was kind to the poor, never turned them away empty. Sister A. was a great admirer of nature. She delighted to ramble in the woods, to gather the beautiful flowers, and gaze upon the landscapes. The writer visited and prayed with her. She was ready and willing for the summons. Like the good man who wraps the diary of his own life around him, to lie down to pleasant dreams, she was so anxious to see her only daughter, Mrs. Mary E. Harbourn, of Terry, Miss., before she passed away; but alas! she arrived too late to see that fond mother. We deeply sympathize with her aged mother, who is ready and waiting to cross over the river to meet her many loved ones that have gone before. We sympathize with her sisters and relatives in this great sorrow; but sympathize most with her kind and devoted husband in his great loss.

B. M. ALLEN.
COOPER.—Mrs. TIRZAH COOPER was born near Nashville, Ky., April 12, 1807, and died in Madison county, Miss., December 30, 1885.

The proper commemoration of the worthy dead is a duty which the living owe to themselves and to posterity. The record of the lives of those who have passed the mortal conflict well should afford comfort, strength and inspiration to all who are to follow them into the unknown world. It is at once a privilege and a duty to write words of appreciation of one who lived and died as did the subject of these lines. Mrs. Cooper's maiden name was Ford. In her thirtieth year she was married to Robert Cooper, of Kentucky, and moved at once to Mississippi, landing a home near Sharon, in Madison county. Here she professed religion, and was by baptism made a member of the Methodist Church, Rev. John J. Jones being the officiating minister. At about thirty years of age she was left a widow by the death of her husband, having four little children to rear and educate. This she did with faithful care, giving them the best instruction the schools within reach afforded. When the late war began, her four sons went forth with the thousands of their countrymen to the field of conflict. Two of them were killed and a third lost an arm in the great struggle. Bereft of her children she gave her remaining days to the care of her grandchildren. The sorrow and trials of her earthly pilgrimage were of no ordinary character. But if her sufferings were remarkable, so was her faith in God. She was an every-day Christian. Her faith seemed never to waver, and her peace appeared to flow as a river. In moments of joy, especially in the house of God, her face was often radiant with hearty delight, and, at times, appeared to shine with ecstatic glory. No trials embittered, no sorrows hegloomed her spirit. God was to her a God of consolation and of joy. She endured as seeing Him who is invisible. Looking beyond the things of time she rested in the eternal. She was often heard to say that religion had done at least one thing for her; it had delivered her from the fear of death. She lived in expectation of the final day, and when it came she was not surprised nor dismayed. It was to her the welcome harbinger of eternal joy. When the end drew near she said, "Suppose I had put off getting ready to die until now! No, no, this is what I have been waiting for, a long, long time, to be ready when this hour should come; and I am ready." She was a member of the first pastoral charge served by the writer of these lines, and he can truly say he never knew a more constant, cheerful and joyous Christian, or one who amid all the necessities of life kept so steady an eye on "the things which are not seen, which are eternal." Her life was faithful and her end was peace. Dying at the home of her grandson near Soutle Chapel, she was buried in the churchyard there. Would that the mantle of her spiritual power might be inherited by her posterity! W. L. C. B.

CHAMBERLIN.—Died, Sunday, seven o'clock P. M., March 7, 1886, WILLIAM CHAMBERLIN, aged seventy-seven years, seven months and fifteen days. Bro. Chamberlin was born in the State of Vermont, August 23, 1808, and quite a young man he came to Warren county, Miss., where he was married to Miss Emily Marshall in 1830. He was converted at a camp meeting in Carroll county, Miss., and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1838. He was a citizen of Texas as early as 1838, and a member of the little army of patriots that achieved her independence; and was saved from the fate of the Alamo by illness and the peremptory order of his commander, the illustrious Travis. After a residence of two years in Texas he returned to Mississippi, where again, in 1874, he came to Frath county, Texas, who at his home, near Duffan, at the time above stated, he laid down the labors of a well-spent life, to enter that rest prepared for the people of God.

Bro. Chamberlin was an active, zealous Christian of old Methodist type, proving his faith by his works. Ever ready to give a reason for his hope and faith, he became prominent in the church, and was the greater part of his religious life the occupant of some important offices in the church, as class leader, steward, or member of the Board of Church Trustees; the latter of which he resigned on account of his health only a few months before his death. Though Bro. Chamberlin lived to a ripe age his loss will be felt here by the community, the church, but especially by his sorrowing family and grief-stricken wife, who has been alike his companion and counselor for nearly fifty years. But his life, full of good works, rich in faith, abounding in hope, is a happy consolation to them. May his children—a son and four daughters—imitate his good example, and follow the path that Christ gave, "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; the end of that man is peace." "He that walketh uprightly, worketh righteousness and speaketh the truth in his heart," shall dwell in God's house and be forever at rest, for Bro. Chamberlin that he cast his lot with the people whose God is the Lord, and well for the church which his modest and unostentatious piety served so richly to adorn.

HATHORN.—Miss JENNIE L. HATHORN, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nannie Hathorn, was born in Covington county, Miss., November 20, 1857, and died February 9, 1886. Jennie joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, August, 1883, under the pastorate of J. W. McLaughlin. Miss Jennie was a model girl, a devoted Christian, and a regular attendant upon the preaching of the word. She had been a member of the church since her childhood; during which time, she was patient, and resigned to the will of God. She bore her afflictions without a murmur. The writer had the privilege of conversing with her, a short time before her death, with regard to her hope of eternal life, she said to me, "All is well, I have made every preparation." She knew for some time that the evil monster was at his work, and that it would soon be over. She was not alarmed at the approach of death. She called her young friends around her bed and said to them, "I am going to leave you in a few hours, and will not be able to come to you but you can come to me," and after bidding them good-by, asked them to meet her in heaven. During the day as her friends came in to see her, she would speak, and then ask them to meet her in heaven. With heaven already in her heart she looked for heaven to come. She selected the hymn for her funeral: "Jesus, lover of my soul," and, "Jesus, my all, to heaven is gone." She then requested that her pastor officiate at her funeral. A few moments before she died she said to her grandmother, "I am better now," and fell asleep in Jesus. Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching.

RICHARDSON.—It is with inexpressible sadness that we chronicle the death of Mrs. RICHARDSON, wife of W. B. Richardson, who is a citizen of this town. She has been a valetudinarian for several years, but was not confined to her room until a few weeks before her departure. On Friday evening, before her death on Sunday morning, the writer of this visited her and saw that her condition was more desperate than her friends and loved ones thought. Her emaciated form, quivering lips and gasping breath bespoke a speedy extinction of vital forces, and a consequent cessation of physical life. She frequently spoke of her sufferings. Though a member of the Presbyterian Church she manifested a great interest for the Methodist minister and his family. The occupants of the parsonage will not only miss the cordials she used to send them, but other nice things, and especially her religious conversations. She was a friend to the poor and to everybody; but she leaped from his never to return again. May God be with and comfort her grief-stricken husband, father and niece, and help them (for they feel confident that she is in heaven) to say, she can not return to us, but we will, by God's grace, go to her. O husband, father and niece, God invites you to a home above the sky, where he may wipe away all your tears, and where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. A home that will not be visited by death nor anything that grieves or makes sad; there, for ever, press with vigor on to it, and when you shall have reached it, you may then embrace loved ones gone before, and sing and about together forever and forever.

SMITH.—Died, near Monticello, Miss., April 2, 1886, ETHEL VICTORIA, daughter of Thomas H. and Emma Smith. Ethel was born February 20, 1885, and just as the flowers of spring were blooming the angels transported this tender rosebud to the garden of Paradise. H. B. DOWNEY.

PHILIPS.—Dr. J. C. PHILIPS was born in Jackson county, Ga., August 23, 1821; came, when quite a young man, to Russell county (now Lee), Ala.; was married to Miss Mary E. Edwards, February 7, 1850, and died in Opelika, Ala., September 15, 1885. In 1850 he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he continued a member till called away. By energy and management he accumulated quite a competency of this world's goods. But he was not always satisfied with his spiritual condition; a clearer and a more constant evidence of his acceptance with God. He often lamented his want of spirituality and efficiency as a member of the church. During his long protracted sickness his thoughts were turned more directly toward God and heaven, and he was enabled to rely more implicitly on his Savior. His faith grew stronger, more direct and abiding; his spiritual prospect brightened, and the evidence of his acceptance with God became clear. For days before his death he felt the Savior near, and outcried the death valley, fearing no evil. He leaves behind a widow and two children to mourn his departure. May Heaven comfort them, and sanctify this sad

HESTER.—Mrs. VIRGINIA HESTER, wife of James L. Hester, of Copiah county, Miss., quietly "passed from earth away," March 15, 1886. The deceased was born in Carroll county, Miss., January 25, 1815. Her maiden name was Baskett. She was married August 9, 1841. She became a member of the Methodist Church the same year. The date of her conversion was unknown even to herself. She has, however, for years lived a meek, humble, Christian life. She was quite exemplary in all the relations of life. As a neighbor, she was exceedingly kind and obliging. She was a devoted wife. As a mother, she sought to discharge her obligations with the utmost fidelity. She had ten children, four of whom preceded her to the spirit land. One of her surviving children is a little infant—Her daughter, Emma, and she gave her heart and testimony to the power of Christ to save from sin, and to give solace in that solemn hour when human help is vain. RE PATIENT WITH THE LIVING.

Sweet friend, when thou and I are gone,
Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
From comrade or from neighbor;
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
And done with all the striving—
What tender truth shall we have gained,
Alas! by simply living?

Then lips too chary of their praise
Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift to find our faults
Shall on defects discover;
Then hands that would not lift a stone
When stones were thick to cumber
Our steep hill path, will scatter flowers
Above our pillow'd slumber.

Sweet friend, perchance that thou and I,
Ere long is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home—
Be patient with the living!
To-day a repressed rebuke may save
Our blinding eyes to sorrow;
Then patience when we knearest edge
May whet a conscience's sorrow.

Be easy to be gentle when Death's silence shames our clamor,
And easy to discern the best
Through memory's mystic glances;
But wise it were for thee and me,
Ere long is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
Be patient with the living!

—Good Cheer.

Report on New Orleans Advocate.

To the President and Members of the New Orleans District Conference—

BRETHREN: The undersigned committee on the ADVOCATE submits the following as its report:

Journalism that is contented with the passivity of reflecting popular thought and sentiment surrenders the elements of power appurtenant to it, and thus sacrifices the value of its function to the imperiousness of financial claims. More than this, it operates a policy of obsequiousness and baseness that can not be without an ultimate reaction that culminates in its dethronement.

While popular journalism must be in a measure a faithful exposition of the popular soul, it should have that emphasis and vigor of editorial conviction and manhood that should direct and regulate popular thought and conviction.

Popular religious journalism should not only become the mouthpiece of the religious thought and conviction of the community of its circulation, but should seek to direct and control the current of religious life within the compass of its influence; and contribute the influence of its composition and spirit to the maintenance of a mobile equilibrium of spiritual forces. The religious journal that contributes an atom of influence to a thoughtless and convictionless sedimentation in the religious life is in virtual antagonism to that great Spirit that searches the deep things of God and is the comforter of man. A carefully studied suggestiveness should characterize its productions. A profound discrimination and insight into the elements and forces of human life should regulate its strictures, its criticisms, its consolations and its aggressions—ever seeking for the pulse of the Holy Ghost in human life.

Practical Christianity imposes upon itself in its readiness to accept any formula of truth as final. The consequent opposition to progressiveness in the formulation of faith and readjustment of creed to higher and clearer convictions is the historic anti-Christ of the church. We think our religious journals should operate a discreet and judicious, and at the same time, an inexorable an-tagonism to such a spirit, for we know its insidious movements.

A religious journal that fills its pages with purely technical and practical religious matter subjects itself to the danger of a morbid enfeebling of its readers, that gradually and stealthily develops into a diseased fanaticism; and the true religious life is choked out and dies.

A healthy spirituality must be the outgrowth of a healthy humanity. A healthy humanity is conditioned upon a general intelligence and accurate information of the movements and enterprises in all the departments of human life. Religious journalism should, therefore, embody in its composition authentic and accurate information concerning all the departments of life and thought. It should be one long, many protest against the divorce of the religious and secular departments of life. Its secular homilies should be incapable of remote or indirect imposition upon the credulity of a religious populace.

In all candor we claim for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE a creditable approximation to this ideal of popular religious journalism. Its contributed matter is fairly representative of the intelligence of its reading community. In this source we find evidence of its general representative character and influence. The vigor and intelligence of its editorial composition gives it an emphasis and influence that must be productive of good and command recognition in the rank of representative journalism in the church.

In the department of advertisement there is an intelligent endeavor to preserve its harmlessness and innocency, and at the same time meet its financial necessities.

There is gratifying evidence of its rank and influence in its exchange list—local, national and foreign.

Its circulation is creditable alike to the editor and to all concerned. We think the management of its financial interests worthy of commendation.

There is a small indebtedness of no great significance that, no doubt, can and will be readily adjusted.

A new press and engine and other facilities have contributed much to the financial interests of the paper.

We find its finances in a healthy, prosperous condition.

We find an insurance in the Southern Insurance Co., of New Orleans, to the extent of $8,500 paid up to 1887.

The roof of the building is in a bad condition, and some other repairs are needed.

We think it worthy the consideration of those who have the control of the financial interest of the paper to consider the advisability of getting authentic information from the various pastors of the Conferences that have adopted this paper as their organ concerning the pecuniary of worthy Christian families, and of putting the paper at prices within their reach for at least one year.

J. D. HARRISON.

Reminiscences of an Old Itinerant—No. 4.

MR. EDITOR: Soon after I was born of the Spirit I went with my classmate, William M. Curtis—afterwards long a member of our Conference—to a quarterly meeting. He noticed I did not partake of the Lord's Supper on Sunday, and asked me as we rode off together why I did not. I told him I was afraid I did not fully understand the import of the ordinance, and might "eat and drink my own condemnation." He proposed to loan me a volume of Wesley's Sermons that had in it his sermon "On the duty of constant communion." That sermon removed all my scruples about the holy communion, and I longed for an opportunity to commemorate the sufferings and death of my blessed Savior, which I soon after enjoyed. This was my first introduction to Wesley's Sermons, and I derived such great benefit from them, intellectually and spiritually, that I procured a copy and read it through twice with close attention and very great profit, for with these sermons I laid the foundation of my theological education. They are more than equal to anything I have ever read outside of the Bible.

For about six months after my conversion, though I had the evidence of my acceptance in Christ and endeavored to live in the faithful discharge of every known duty, my spiritual enjoyment, at times, was very nusteady. I felt that I needed something over and above what I had yet received. In reading Mr. Wesley's sermons on the subject of sanctification and Christian perfection, I was led to believe that what I needed was a heart cleansed from all the impurities of sin and filled with that "perfect love that casteth out all fear." I adopted Mr. Wesley's views of entire sanctification because I sincerely believed them well supported by the Scriptures and the experience of many living witnesses, and I at once became an earnest seeker after "A heart in every thought renewed, and full of love divine." My hungering and thirsting after full salvation from all the pollution of sin, and entire consecration to God for all coming time, became the absorbing interest of all my waking hours. I thought of little else, prayed for little else. But I was yet a mere babe in Christ, and had some peculiar trials and met with some formidable obstacles in my earnest struggle for a clean heart filled with perfect love. In the midst of this great struggle, which was carried on several weeks unknown to any human being except myself, I fell in company one day with one of the most experienced female members of our church, who, I understood, had once professed the enjoyment of perfect love. I unbosomed my case to her very freely, and desired her advice. With her characteristic modesty she said but little about her personal experience, but asked me if I had ever read the "Life and Letters of Hester Ann Rogers." I answered that I had never heard of the book before. She said she would loan me her copy, which she did immediately. I read it with intense interest and great profit. If it had been written expressly for me, it could not have suited my case better. Her peculiar trials and temptations were mine; her fears and hopes were mine; her intense groaning and struggling in mighty prayer for a clean heart and all the fulness of God accorded with my experience, and her triumph through faith encouraged me to believe that I would soon have a similar triumph, which took place in August, 1822. I am yet familiar with the greatly matured state of that experience. I shall say but little hereafter about my personal Christian experience. I had a definite object in view while writing the foregoing articles. I desired to show from my own experience the great importance of placing our church literature in the hands of all our young members and new comers into the church as soon as possible. My early Methodist associates had to use much care, diligence and perseverance to make a good and consistent Methodist out of such a stick of Baptist timber as I was; but they were faithful, and succeeded. If I have been worth anything as a member or minister of the Methodist Church for the last sixty odd years, it may, in a great degree, be attributed to the good little books which the lay members, both male and female, put into my hands when I mostly needed them to correct my unavoidable errors and start me out on a life of holiness and usefulness. I shall not write any reminiscences about my early ministerial life until my part of the ADVOCATE hopper gets empty again.

Education by the Church.

MR. EDITOR: Some time ago I noticed the expression of a desire on the part of the editor that more should be written about our schools. It came with the force of a rebuke to some of us who have been laboring in our secluded recitation rooms, under the impression that the world had quite lost sight of us and of our work. But what should be of greater interest to the friends of humanity than the work of the school room? You may talk of your temperance and your missions; but, after all, education is the universal interest. Doctor Mayo will convince any community that hears him that to put a good school into every neighborhood will sooner transform all the surroundings than any thing else. For, as he rightly says, near the school-house will soon be found the church, the Sunday-school, the temperance society and all the other agencies of benevolence. It is ignorance that makes men contented with vice and idleness and poverty. Enlighten the immortal mind, and all bodily comforts and conveniences will next be sought, and then spiritual and religious blessings will soon be added. Christianity itself was not given, perhaps could not have been given, until the world had reached the civilization of the Augustine Age. The decline of the church followed the irruption of the Goths and Vandals into the Roman Empire, and the revival of learning preceded the Reformation. Verbum sat, Mansfield Female College has been steadily pursuing the old path of useful and ornamental work during the past year. The patronage has grown steadily, the discipline better, and the religious tone of the institution has been maintained. Some ten young ladies are preparing for graduation honors, on the second Wednesday of June.

A few years ago a wealthy gentleman walked into the office of a friend in Rome, Ga., and asked him what would be the best investment for a large sum of money for benevolent purposes. His friend advised him to put it into a college for the education of the daughters of the leading families, saying that such women would exert a more lasting influence upon society than any other class of persons. The result of the conversation was the establishment of Shorter College at a cost of more than one hundred thousand dollars. When I was there, more than fifty young ladies of the best families in Georgia were boarding and being educated in the beautiful buildings and grounds.

Since the founding of Mansfield Female College more than one hundred young ladies have been graduated here, and probably five or ten times that number have received a partial education here during the same period. When it is known how few do graduate, it will be understood that something is attempted at least in the higher walks of education.

It was wise in the fathers of Methodism to lay hold upon the facilities of the school room for disseminating the doctrines of Christianity. Religion has its social side as well as its spiritual. Ignorance in the pulpit can only be tolerated by ignorance in the pew. A John the Baptist may sound the call to repentance, but Christ himself came to teach the morals and the aesthetics of Christianity, and the learned apostle to the Gentiles followed to elaborate its doctrines and reduce them to a system. They may have had little to say about the sciences which had barely begun to exist in their day, but they made free use of the arts of logic and rhetoric then most skillfully studied. Moses put as much geology into the first chapter of Genesis as was consistent with the knowledge of mankind when he was writing, and the beautiful expressions of David in reference to the stars are vastly augmented in meaning by the knowledge of astronomy. Botany, mineralogy and chemistry have thrown a thousand rays of light upon the work of the Creator, and he who supposes that a person ignorant of these things can as well understand God and his works as the one who has studied them, must think that a man can be as good a patriot who has never read the constitutional history of his country, or as good a citizen without knowing its laws.

The Louisiana Conference needs the colleges it has at Mansfield and Jackson just as the State needs its institutions at Baton Rouge and New Orleans. And if the State of Louisiana needs the influence of Methodism to spread the doctrines of Christianity among its population, it wants that influence augmented and reined by religious education. If our preaching and our morals are supposed to be better than those of Roman Catholicism, then our schools ought to be better than the convent system in which so many ladies of this State were formerly educated. As we look upon their form of religion as more or less devoid of the truth of inspiration, we may expect it to be deficient in sound reasoning and scientific accuracy. What we should demand of our own schools is an education as thorough in science and learning as our doctrines are clear and consistent with the truths of revelation. No half-done work can pass as a religious education in this age when knowledge is knowledge and science is science. Let music and dancing and needle work amuse the votaries of image worship and the manipulations of the priesthood; but the Methodist Church wants schools of science and language and mathematics, and a knowledge of history and the useful arts to qualify her sons and daughters for positions in the church and in society.

F. M. GRACE.
MANSHFIELD, La., April 24, 1886.

To the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana.

The Memorial and Petition of the Subscribers, citizens of the State of Louisiana, with respect represent:

That your memorialists have been informed that measures will be introduced before your honorable bodies and pressed for enactment, the object of which will be to make the day of the week known as Sunday, a day of personal or individual rest, as well as one of public rest.

Heartily in sympathy with the purposes of such a law, our object in this memorial is to urge upon your honorable bodies its favorable consideration and speedy enactment, well knowing that such a result would not only gratify vast numbers of our people who believe that the Sabbath was ordained of God and should be devoted to his worship, but that it would also prove conducive to the general welfare and material interests of our entire population, without reference to the question of religious observance.

To enumerate the many instances which call for remedial legislation at your hands, of the nature now under review, would put a too heavy tax upon your time; but your memorialists respectfully call attention to this fact, viz: There are thousands of employees, who are required to work not only during the six days of the week, but also for the greater part, if not the whole, of Sunday. Persons of this class, without the protection of a Sunday law, have the alternative either to labor seven days of the week or give up their employment. When times are hard and employment difficult to obtain, such an issue condemns the laboring man to unrelenting toil, without rest and recuperation, from the beginning to the end of the year. Such never-ceasing work sends thousands to untimely graves.

In connection with this fact is seen the other fact, that men of this class receive, usually, no increase of wages for this extra day of labor, and this unrequited Sunday work amounts to nearly two months in every twelve. Could these fifty days be devoted to rest, family enjoyment, innocent and healthful recreation, or religious worship, at the option of the individual, they would prove an inestimable blessing to the laboring class. As the case is now, these days are the most irksome, because of the unjust labor that is exacted.

A law which would emancipate this class of our people from such unremitting and unrequited toil, would be hailed as a measure bringing individual relief to thousands of weary souls, and scattering public benefactions all over our commonwealth. Another fact to which we respectfully call your attention in this connection, is the demoralization resulting to labor from open bar-rooms and like places, where those who are not compelled to work on Sundays are enticed into dissipation, which unfits them for service during the early part of the week and tempts them to squander in vicious habits the hard-earned wages which would otherwise be devoted to the comfort of themselves and families. There can be no doubt of the propriety or beneficence of that legislation which will remedy such grievous wrongs and shield a useful and meritorious class of our people from undue temptation to dissipation, extravagance and vice, during their hours of relaxation from toil.

Not to mention other weighty considerations in favor of the enactment of a Sunday law, your memorialists respectfully call the attention of your honorable bodies to the fact, that the statute books of all our sister States of the Union bear enactments of the nature in question, and by their enforcement and observance, the best interests of labor and capital, of public morality, and of personal and general prosperity, have been greatly promoted.

If this memorial, we are not asking for enactments which will trench upon the freedom of individual conduct, nor do we seek to regulate and control those matters of private concern where public regulation would be oppressive and unjust. The legislation for which we petition is required by the best interests, both of society and the individual citizen, and, to our belief, these would be promoted more surely and more permanently by the enactments we now invoke at your hands, than by any other measure of public policy within the power of the State to prescribe.

Therefore, your memorialists ask of your honorable bodies the consideration of this petition, and the enactment, in proper form, of the measures of legislation hereinabove referred to; and your petitioners, as their duty bound, will ever pray, etc., etc.

Prohibition in Issaquena.

MR. EDITOR: I trust that to-day marks an important event in the history of Issaquena county. I think it marks an advanced step financially, socially, morally and religiously. Certainly the promiscuous sale of liquors is one of the strongest enemies with which society and the church have to contend. Only think of over twenty licensed saloons in the little county (Issaquena). If I mistake not very much "the signs of the times," to-day's work sounds the death-note of saloons in this county. Quite a number of citizens, white and black, met in mass convention at the courthouse to-day and perfected an organization for a prohibition campaign in this county. The friends of prohibition are fast multiplying in our county. We hoped to have you with us, and were very much disappointed that you did not come. However, you can hold yourself in readiness.

We have already a sufficient number of petitioners to order the election. We hope by the last of July to be able to join the Black in singing the long-meter Doxology loud enough to be heard all over the State, and that the chorus of victory may be heard across the mighty Mississippi on the banks of our sister States. We trust that the note of victory shall come up from us "be-nighted swamps" in tones unmistakable. It would interest and astonish you to see the interest the colored people are taking in this move. The whisky men are beginning to learn that the colored people are well aware of the baneful influences of saloons, and are willing to rise up to rid the country of this enemy of law, morality and religion. Let other counties where the colored people are largely in the majority take courage and free themselves from the disastrous results caused from the promiscuous sale of liquors. I am very much gratified to say that we are now thoroughly organized for the contest, and think, with this organized effort when it is put to the vote, prohibition will be victorious.

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1886.

Rev. Sam Jones has consented to spend a week at the Seashore Camp Meeting, which has been changed from the fourteenth to the seventh of July, to suit his convenience. We are delighted to chronicle this announcement. Thousands who have long desired to do so, will have an opportunity of hearing the great evangelist. The trustees of the Camp ground will make extended improvements and enlargements in view of this announcement. No doubt it will be the grandest gathering ever seen on the Seashore.

After preparing copy for this issue the editor left on Saturday for the General Conference. He expected to spend the Sabbath at Calera, Ala., and proceed to Richmond on Monday by the way of the East Tennessee and Virginia railroad.

Elaborate preparations have been made for the revival meetings to be conducted by Revs. Sam Jones and Sam Small in Baltimore. The call to them was signed by nearly all the Protestant ministers of the city, including a few Episcopalians, and the most entire union of sentiment prevails. The services will be held in the skating rink on Biddle street, near Charles, which has a seating capacity of about four thousand. We hope to report grand results from these meetings as auspiciously begun.

During last week all the railroads leading out of New Orleans were more or less interrupted by floods and washouts. The Illinois Central suffered great damage in the neighborhood of Bogus Chitto, and was unable to run trains or transfer mails for several days. This is the first interruption that superb road has encountered in five or six years. During the past four years there has very rarely been a detention of even an hour to a single passenger train. No road in the United States is under more skillful, able management or more entirely worthy of public confidence and support.

In response to the action of the Board of Missions in May last, Bishop McTear has appointed Rev. J. W. Lambuth, D. D., Rev. W. R. Lambuth, M. D., and Rev. O. A. Dukes, M. D., to proceed to Japan and open a mission there. The brightening prospects of our missionary treasury makes this appointment now possible, which has been prudently delayed. We favored this movement several years ago and now give it hearty endorsement. The elder, Dr. Lambuth, speaks the Japanese language well and can commence active labor at once. A much needed sanitarium will be founded by the younger doctors.

The formal cornerstone laying of the Confederate Soldiers' Monument at Montgomery, Ala., on Wednesday last week, was an imposing affair. Mr. Jefferson Davis was present and made a short talk, and Gen. John B. Gordon, of Georgia, delivered an eloquent, patriotic oration. Mr. Davis stood on the very spot where twenty-five years ago he took the oath of office as President of the Confederate States. The venerable man stood as erect and with the same soldierly bearing as on February 15, 1862, despite the sorrows and burdens of a quarter of a century. The capitol was beautifully decorated. From the dome floated our national flag, while from the columns were suspended Confederate banners. So the differences of the past have faded their ensigns, while above all and over a reunited people waves the flag of the nation. There was genuine, hearty response to Gen. Gordon's eloquent peroration when he said, "Let your fidelity to the whole country be as conspicuous in peace as was your devotion to the South during a devastating war; let the South's plighted faith to the permanent union of the States and the legitimate results of the war be forever unquestioned."

It is said that Montgomery has not witnessed such a demonstration since the day this young republic was born in that city. Such a memorial of heroic and historic deeds is altogether proper. And that man must be narrow indeed who regards it with disfavor or an expression of disloyalty.

Our German Work.

We have published recently two excellent and timely articles on this subject from the pen of Dr. J. B. A. Ahrens. He has been prominently identified with it for years as a presiding elder and editor of our German publications, and his opinions should have weight in forming any judgment as to past success or prospective good. Considering the embarrassments attending the missions both in Louisiana and Texas, and the prostrate condition of our treasury for a number of years, the work has prospered greatly. In the matter of ecclesiastical discipline and connectional liberality, the German Mission Conference stands deservedly at the head of our connection. The membership remains at about the same figure as some years ago. Into this latitude comparatively few German immigrants are coming, so that the increase has been almost entirely from the children of the church. We congratulate our brethren upon the gracious results of their labors and their loyalty to Southern Methodism through all these years.

But we are brought face to face with a practical question growing out of this success. The organization and maintenance of German churches, in which the native language is used in song, prayer and preaching was wise and necessary. By that means the sons and daughters of fatherland have been preserved to our progressive American Protestantism. But they are of necessity, also temporary in purpose and history. It certainly was never designed that language, idioms and customs should separate forever citizens of the same commonwealth or country. By constant contact and association with our native Anglo-Saxon population, the foreigner at length drops his brogue, changes his peculiar un-American opinions and becomes a constituent, harmonious element in our social, civil and religious institutions. Unless the body politic readily assimilates the immigration to our shores, we can not hope long to exist as a government.

As a matter of fact the children or at farthest the children's children of foreigners, become thoroughly and enthusiastically American. They rarely learn the language of their fathers, are taught in our schools, love our institutions, and become native, potent factors in our national civilization.

Now this fact indicates the true policy of the church in all her home work among persons speaking a foreign language. She shelters and nurtures them until their children can become identified with our social and political life. Should immigration entirely cease, the necessity for separate congregations would soon pass away. Indeed they would demand incorporation into our American communities and Churches.

We are not surprised therefore that the Dryades Street German Quarterly Conference of this city last week, memorialized the General Conference to annex that church to the Louisiana Conference. They want pastoral service in English as well as German. The old people find that their children are wandering off every Sabbath to the American churches. So the course indicated above is the logic of necessity. It is probable that our other German churches in the city will follow the example of Dryades Street. If so, an easy solution is found for a difficult question.

Possibly our German work in Texas can best be maintained as yet by separate organization and native pastoral oversight. Those conversant with the facts can best advise as to that. But the general principles outlined above must determine the policy of the church.

We take this pleasant item of news from the columns of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate:

"The citizens of Macon and friends of the Wesleyan Female College were delighted last Friday by a visit from Mr. George I. Seney. He is ever welcome in these parts, whether he comes in accordance with previous announcement or, as in this case, unheralded. He was accompanied by his wife, three daughters, and a grandchild, little 'Mudge' Plummer. How nice it would be for Miss Mudge to graduate at the Wesleyan Female College, and then marry a graduate of Emory College. Be that as it may, there is a growing attachment between Mr. Seney and Georgia. May their love run smooth!"

Rev. G. F. Thompson, pastor at Ocean Springs, Miss., writes as follows. We are pleased to hear of our good brother's improved health:

I have this day forwarded Dr. D. C. Kelley $37.25 of the $50 assessed to Ocean Springs circuit for foreign missions. I am glad to see the success of the Advocate. Am sorry I have not been able to do more for it. My health is much better.

Romanism and Church Revenues.

Of all the decrees of the late Plenary Council none is more questionable than the one against church revenues. The Roman Catholics have led in this matter, thereby debauching the public conscience and leaving patient communities of multiplied thousands. They have conducted the most elaborate bazaars and resorted to schemes for gathering cash, that have done much to foster and develop a generation of gamblers. Priests have rolled horses and other property and received thereby no little ill-gotten gain. The "most popular saloon keeper" has been voted for at twenty-five cents a vote, thus condoning the business and giving to it the sympathy of the church. "Punch-bowls" have been popular articles for raffle, sometimes bringing fabulous sums.

But a reaction has set in. The constant protest of evangelical Christianity has had its effect. At length, the church has seen that its hold upon the public mind of this country depends upon a closer walk in the paths of scriptural morality. We are glad to see this change of conduct even though there may be no radical change of heart. When the attitude of Romanism to public morals is thoroughly reformed, we may expect a brighter day for our country.

In this matter of raising money for churches we hope the conversion of Rome will be an appeal to all Protestants. On no account should raffles, or anything looking in the direction of games of chance be countenanced. The Lord will not smile upon any church or people that resort to such sinful devices. A ticket in a raffle is followed by a ticket in the Louisiana Lottery, and then a full-fledged gambler is hatched out.

Archbishop Elder, of Cincinnati, well known in the Southwest as the Bishop of Natchez, for many years has delivered an address to the "faithful" explanatory of the Council decrees. From a report of it, republished in the Western Christian Advocate we extract the following:

"The holding of festivals, fairs, bazaars and other entertainments for raising funds for charitable and church purposes is decreed against by the papal edict. His grace said it was better to lay aside all those methods and ways of raising money and appeal direct to the people. The decision of the Council, as approved by the holy father, is that festivals of this character are never to be held without the expression of the Bishop and it is laid on the conscience of the Bishop to see that the circumstances are such as to justify the holding of these festivals. His grace said further that the holy father urged on him while in Rome the importance of urging upon all citizens the duty of using whatever influence they might possess for the welfare of their fellow-citizens, particularly those persons who have the right to exercise a share in the polity of the government under which they live. His grace showed how important it was that every citizen and member of the church should take a part in the election of men who would fittingly represent them in the government of the country, and deprecated the fact that many held aloof from a participation in the affairs of the government because at times unworthy men were in power. His grace said in conclusion that nine-tenths of the evils existing in all communities, and of the crimes committed, of the misery and degradation extant, of the pauperism of orphans, resulted from the abuse of liquor and excesses in drinking. He said that there were efforts made to diminish that excess, and that much of the crime is committed in connection with the deprecation of the holy day of God—the Sabbath.

"He said it was the duty of all men to seek to aid in the remedying of these evils; that they should be remedied as plain, but as to how to regulate it, or what laws are wise to be made concerning the use of liquor or the observance of Sunday, were matters of detail. The State had the right to regulate this traffic, as it had to regulate all other traffic detrimental to the public weal; and he closed by impressing on his congregation the importance of aiding in the work of remedying these evils."

—The Rev. Dr. Dallinger, the eloquent English Wesleyan preacher and distinguished scientist, delivered recently two lectures under the auspices of the Royal Dublin Society. The subjects discussed were—"The Origin of the Lowest Forms of Life" and "Plants that Prey on Insects." It is said that the lectures produced a profound impression. While in Dublin Dr. Dallinger was the guest of the Lord Lieutenant at the Vice-regal Lodge—the first courtesy of the kind ever extended to a Methodist minister.

Congressional Convictions.

The Hattiesburg Herald of last week, contained an extract from a letter written by a Congressman, which struck us as being rather extraordinary. He said:

As to the Blair bill I expect to vote for that out of respect to the wishes of our people, but I do not like it. I regard it as an unconstitutional and dangerous measure. It will keep taxes high—for $77,000,000 is no small sum. Every dollar wrung from the people, its prime object being to educate the negro through to displace the whites are thrown in. * * * It is a bad measure and will in the end do far more harm than good. I am one who don't believe in any alarming extent, in trying to educate the negro. Especially at the expense of the white children, and that is just what this bill does, and was intended to do.

By what sort of casuistry he reconciles to conscience this support of "an unconstitutional and dangerous measure," though the people may wish it, has not transpired. That may be the way of the politician, but it is not the course made plain by an enlightened Christianity. A Representative should defer to his constituency, doubtless, in matters of opinion, but convictions ought never to be compromised or surrendered. If convinced that the measure is "unconstitutional and dangerous" no power of canons, convention or constituency ought to bind his ballot.

As to that other paragraph about trying to educate the negro to any "alarming extent" we do not care to speak. We can only commiserate a man who has no larger or more serious conceptions of the great problem with which the South and this nation has to deal. He who attacks the cause of education, and of negro education, properly belongs to a past generation. If the Blair bill will aid in this cause, and is properly guarded in the equitable, wise disbursement of funds, we give it hearty support.

Bishop Walden's Plan.

We published some weeks ago a letter from Bishop Walden, of the Methodist Episcopal Church touching the relation of our two Methodisms in the South. He said it had been his practice to discourage unnecessary waste and rivalry by the establishment of two Methodist churches in a small town where one fully met all the demands of the community. For his candid and Christian views he has been severely criticized by certain of his brethren. As his letter was addressed to Judge J. Wofford Tucker, of Florida, we are pleased to see something in the Bishop's defense from his pen. In the last Western Christian Advocate Judge Tucker, writes as follows, giving some very interesting facts which may help to a correct judgment on the general question involved:

In your excellent Journal of March 31, I notice an article by C. J. Howes on a matter of current interest, upon which a word of explanation may be timely. At the Florida Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1884, Bishop Walden appointed Rev. H. J. Walker to Kissimmee, Florida, a station forty miles south of the new town of Sanford. But Bro. Walker did not enter upon his work at Kissimmee, but came to Sanford in his journeyings. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Sanford was at the time without a pastor, and Bro. Walker was invited to preach in our church. The announcement of his purpose to organize a society here for the Methodist Episcopal Church took us all by surprise. The next day the good brother sought out such of our members as had been previously connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and made personal solicitation to have them withdraw and join his proposed organization.

This led to a friendly conference between Bro. Walker and our official board, in which we assured him of our willingness to avail ourselves of his ministerial services if he would become for the time our pastor; that we would offer such support as the congregation could give, on condition only that he would not use his position to divide our little band of thirty members; that our church membership knew no North or South, in their Christian fellowship; that we loved one another; and that we could not see that the cause of the Master could be promoted by division, and by generating or arousing old discords now happily supposed to have slept the sleep of death. This proposition Bro. Walker declined; advertised appointments for preaching in the Town Hall, and continued his efforts to draw off some of our brethren to the new town, without getting one single member out of a population of 2,000. No opposition was offered to the good brother in any way whatever. But thinking people and Christian people could not see that any thing good and useful could be accomplished by having an opposition society in which the same Christian teachings would be delivered, and the same church economy would be established.

Soon after Bro. Walker came, he had said he was executing Bishop Walden's orders. Thereupon wrote the Bishop, and explained the facts. This led to the publication of the Bishop's letter in the Sanford Journal, a deliverance so careful, so candid, so broad and so wise, as to mark the able chief shepherd as one seeking to promote the spiritual interests of men by the safest and best methods. The harvest truly is great; there are numberless waste places in Zion to be entered and cultivated; there is room enough for all the Lord's host to make war on the powers of darkness, so that Ephraim and Judah need not hinder each other. Soon after the Conference referred to with Bro. Walker, we engaged the Rev. Henry Hlee, Methodist Episcopal Church, as our pastor for the current year, and we loved him, and do love him. He served us faithfully, and the Lord blessed his labors.

J. WOFFORD TUCKER.

Haman and Esther.

High license for crime is not a new thing. In the book of Esther III, 1-15, we read as follows:

"If it please the king let it be written that they (the Jews) may be destroyed; and I will pay ten thousand talents of silver to the hand of those that have the charge of the business, to bring it into the king's treasury. * * * And the king said unto Haman: 'Do with them as it seemeth good.' * * * And letters were sent by the king's posts into all the king's provinces to destroy, to kill and to cause to perish all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in one day."

Ten thousand talents would be equivalent to about $10,000,000. This sum Haman paid into the royal treasury for the privilege of an indiscriminate slaughter of the Hebrew race.

Horrible! too horrible to think about, isn't it? But America has her Haman. He is usually called Liquor Traffic. He says to our king, "I have a plan on foot for an indiscriminate slaughter of your innocent subjects, and I desire your approval of my plan, and your protection while I execute it. I wish to slay 90,000 of your citizens every year. I also desire to rob 27,000 every year of reason. Fifty-nine thousand more I wish to make paupers. Thirty-nine thousand I wish to convert into criminals. Sixty thousand I wish to transform into drunkards, and 2,000,000 I wish to rob of manhood by making them tipplers."

By all these methods and in very many other ways I desire to produce as much sorrow as possible in all the homes of America. Now, oh king! if you will grant me the privilege of doing this, and promise me your protection, I will pay into your treasury 'the sum of $60,000,000 every year. And our king adopts the language of the ancient Persian monarch and says to Haman: "Do with them as it seemeth good." The difference between the American Haman and the Persian is that, the American pays a higher license—sixty millions instead of ten. The difference between the American king and the Persian, is that the Persian granted license but once, while the American grants it year after year.

The Persian Haman met an Esther and through her instrumentality expired upon a gibbet. The American king also has an Esther in his palace, (she is sometimes called W. C. T. U.) and through her instrumentality a gallows called prohibition is being erected, on which in due time, the American Haman will swing higher than did his ancient prototype. God speed the day. The American king is the American voter.

"Gilderoy" Hears Sam Jones.

MR. EDITOR: Well, I have been to Columbus to hear Sam Jones. I heard him twice, morning and night. There is no other man like him. He is the only one living. Perhaps one Sam Jones is enough for this generation. Men like him need be few and far between. God calls them out now and then for special work. They have special gifts and do special work according to the grace given unto them. A Sam Jones to each State would, perhaps, be two many—more than we need—more than God needs. If God had needed more men like him, doubtless, he would have made more. I am confident it is best that he has made but one. Bro. Jones is a brave man and a true man. He has the courage of his convictions, and he says what he thinks. In the most direct way imaginable. He talks right out in plain English. He calls a spade a spade. Bro. Jones does not mince matters. He says true things, and they often hurt—hurt those most who are the most guilty. He speaks right out in meeting about some things that other preachers, never allude to, or allude to them in a rose-colored sort of way. Some people say, Bro. Jones is not as delicate, nor as modest as he ought to be. Bro. Jones says, "When people get to be modest about committing sin he will be too modest to tell them of their sins." Good that.

For one thing, Sam Jones knows the human heart; its depravity, deceitfulness and lust for sin. For another thing he understands the word of God and the plan of salvation. These are the things a preacher most needs to know. He does not go round to the back door. He takes the candle of the Lord and walks right straight inside the hearts of his hearers. They see themselves and their sin. He exhibits Christ as a present and willing Savior. He shoots straight with a rifle, and his bullets, hit and they hurt and they kill too. His power of illustration is singularly simple and strong. His illustrations illustrate. The people, black and white, young and old, understand him.

Bro. Jones denies the charge, but he is a theologian all the same. He gets right down into the gist and marrow of the word of God. He goes a-fishing after men. He fishes on the human side rather than on the Divine side of the gospel. Men are on the human side. Bro. Jones is after them! He compacts with the he says into a few words. Many of his sayings will come to be proverbs. They will live. I do not know, and hence I will not attempt to say where or wherein his power lies. It is to be hoped no Deltah will find out where his power lies and discover it to the Philistines. Go to hear him for yourself and feel the power and impress of this mighty man of God. May God bless Bro. Jones and prosper him in his great work!

GILDEROY.

Strikes and Their Striking Results.

In this fierce modern war between capital and labor "strikes" have been the popular device of workmen to compel concessions from their employers. That they are born of a false principle and are foolish in policy, we have never doubted. There can be no objection to any man or body of men stopping work if employers fail or refuse to comply with their contracts or if they are denied fair wages for work. But when tyrannous organizations, by majority vote, compel every member to join a "strike" whether he is satisfied with his employer and wages or not, the movement becomes a menace to commerce and the peace of society. That labor has grievances no one can doubt. But this means of remedying them is revolutionary and often becomes illegitimate. The passions of unemployed strikers become inflamed and their imaginations excited with exaggerated complaints, until deeds of violence ensue.

And strikes rarely ever succeed. It is strange that experience has taught these labor organizations so little. In a large majority of instances the workmen are forced to yield, or if a compromise is effected, it restores quiet, but brings no permanent advantage to the "striker." He certainly has lost character with his employer, and can never hope to regain entirely his full confidence. Some statistics as to the results of strikes and lockouts have been gathered and tabulated by Mr. Joseph D. Weeks, an expert and special agent of the Census Bureau. His report has been filed in the Interior Department and advanced sheets given to the press, from which we quote as follows:

The records show, he says, that many strikes and lockouts still grow out of the most trivial causes. It is also true, especially in localities where large bodies of workmen are gathered, that there will always be found men who too frequently, from sinister and mercenary motives, create dissensions and endeavor to inaugurate strikes. When strikes are in progress their duration is liable to be the efforts of such persons, yet the tendency, as stated, is toward less frequent strikes and lockouts. The number of strikes in certain of the prominent trades, as given in the report, is as follows: Iron and steel industries, 238; coal mining, 158; textile trades, 46; cigar making, 42; building trades, 38; transportation, 33; printing trades, 23; glass industries, 27; piano making, 14; boot and shoemakers, 11.

Much the greater portion (714 per cent.) of the strikes and lockouts reported upon were caused by differences as to rates of wages. A total of 503, or 80 per cent. of those relating to the rates of wages, or 62 per cent. of all, were for an advance, and 77 per cent. of those relating to rates of wages, or 91 per cent. of all were against a reduction.

Strikes growing out of demands for advances are much more uniformly successful than those against a reduction. In conditions of trade that justify an advance it is much more to the interest of the employers to give in than to have his work stopped.

Of the 813 strikes the results of 151, or 59 per cent. are given. Of these 109, or 35 per cent. were successful; 83, or 13 per cent. were compromised, and 27, or 47 per cent. were unsuccessful. It will be noted that while the larger number of strikes—503 out of 813—were for an advance in wages, a larger proportion of strikes for this cause were successful than for any of the other important classes.

Of the 307 strikes for an advance, of which the results are given, 127, or 41 per cent. were successful, and 180, or 59 per cent. were unsuccessful. On the other hand, of the 45 strikes for a reduction in wages, the results of which the results are given, 8 were successful, and 37 were unsuccessful.

THE LIVER. Secreces the bile and acts like a filter, to cleanse impurities of the blood. By its regularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, yellow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhoea, a languid, weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms generally termed liver troubles. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, the great blood restorer.

Our Young People.

THE NIGHTINGALE.

BY CELIA SHAXTER.

There is a bird, a pale, brown bird,
That dwells in the forest,
Whose wild, delicious song is heard
With evening's first white star.

When dew-drops fresh and still, the night
Steals on the waiting world,
And the new moon glimmers silver bright,
And the fluttering wings are faried;

When the hush of summer is in the air,
And the deep rose lingers of morn,
And there comes a soft, delicious fair
Through the enchanted dusk;

Then breaks the silence a heavenly strain,
And thrills the quiet night
With a rich and wonderful refrain,
A rapture of delight.

All listened that rare, music ball,
All whistled softly: "Hark!
It is the nightingale singing so Sweetly in the dark."

He has no pride in feathers fine;
"Venus, love, love, love,
Thou wert a thing divine
In his clear minstrelsy."

But from the fullness of his heart
His happy song pours;
Beyond all praise, above all art,
His song to heaven soars.

And through the whole wide world his fame
Is sung, and far and near;
Men love to speak his very name;
That brown bird is so dear.

—St. Nicholas.

Mr. Editor: I am a girl thirteen years of age. I go to school every day. I study history, grammar, geography, spelling, and arithmetic. My mamma does not take the dear Advocate, but we live close to a good, kind friend who lends us the Advocate. I will close by asking the little people a question: Where is the word "chamels" found in the Bible? I remain,
Your little friend,
MARY M'CORMACK.

BENTON, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: I see so many nice little letters from the little folks in your paper; I am tempted to try to write one myself. I live in Hazlehurst with my uncle and aunt. My papa and mamma are both dead; died when I was two years old. We get two copies of your good paper at our home every week. Grandpa Jones, who lives with us, takes one, and uncle takes one. Grandpa has prayers at the breakfast and supper table every morning and night; and when grandpa is not at home uncle has prayers. I have two brothers, and three little cousins. We had so many nice Easter eggs this morning; all colors—red, blue, yellow, and green. We found the nest in grandpa's room. We had an Easter turkey for dinner to-day; wish you had been here to help us eat it. I made a sponge cake for desert, and some nice cake to go on it. My little three-year-old cousin, Jane Ross, asked it to go on it. In answer to my little cousin Susie's question: The word "remember" is found about one hundred times in the Bible, but to mention the places would take too much space in your paper. I will ask my dear little cousin to "remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them."

Your little friend,

MARY C. DERR.

HAZLEBURST, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: As I have written before to this valuable paper, and having the pleasure of seeing that letter in print, will endeavor to write another, which I hope will meet with the same success. I live near the quiet little village of Sumnerfield. There is a very small school here now, but it is larger than it has been for two or three sessions. I attend Sunday-school and church every Sunday when the weather permits. Oh! we have been having some dreadful weather lately. The recent rains have done a great deal of damage for miles and miles around. I am in hopes, now, that we will have some pleasant weather for awhile. I will ask the readers of the Advocate a question before I close my letter. Where in the Bible is the word "Philadelphia"? Hoping to see this letter in print, and wishing all the little folks a merry goodnight, and pleasant dreams, I will retire.

ANNIE N. THOMPSON.

SUMNERFIELD, Alabama.

Mr. Editor: As I see so many letters in the young people's column, and none from this place, I thought I would send you a little letter. I am a little girl ten years old. I am living one-half mile from Bellevue. I go to school, and study arithmetic, first reader, spelling, geography, and writing. I have one pet cat, her name is Fate. Mr. and Miss Marj are my teachers, and I love them very much. Now, I will answer some of the questions asked by some of the little folks. It was Ruth that gleaned in the field of Boaz. I will also answer the question asked by Edwin Leech. It was Moses that wrote the first four books in the Bible. I will ask a question: What was Paul's name before he was converted? Bro. Blocker is our pastor, and we love him ever so much. Hoping to see this in print soon, I remain,
Your little friend,

HURFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

Unexcelled.

Dr. R. M. ALLEN, Fannettsburg, Pa., says: "I think Hurford's Acid Phosphate is the best in any other preparation of phosphorus."

Mr. Editor: As my sister Sally has just written a letter to the young folks' column, I thought I would write one too. I am a little boy eight years old. I go to day-school, and to Sunday-school. Mr. J. H. Keyser is our superintendent. Mrs. Scanlan is my Sunday-school teacher. I have no pets to tell you about except some little goldfish. I love to see the little fellows swim in the pond. We had a spelling match yesterday in school, and my side beat. I will ask the little folks a question: Who climbed up into the sycamore tree to see Jesus? Bro. Blocker is our pastor. He is a precious, good man. I will close by asking that the letter be printed, as it is my first attempt. Your little friend,

GESSY CADE.

Mr. Editor: As it has been some time since I wrote to your paper, I thought I would write again. The Advocate is the only paper my father takes, and it is a welcome visitor. It comes every week, and I do enjoy reading it. Now, I will answer Eddie Barland's question: "Cuckoo" is found in Leviticus xi, 16. Now, I will ask a question: Where in the Bible are these words found, "yesterday night"? With many good wishes to you and your paper, I remain,
Your little friend,
OLIVIA SCARBOROUGH.

STONEWELL, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: As I have no news any letters from this part of the country from the little folks, I thought I would write a short one to the Advocate, so you might know that there are some cousins up here in Claiborne that loves your good paper. I am a little girl not quite eight years old. I live with grandpa and grandpa, that is most of my time. I love to live with my grandpa, for I was born in his house. I go to Sunday-school. Grandpa is superintendent and Bible teacher. He says he has the best Bible class in all the country. The class numbers thirty-six, and more have promised to join. I tell you, they make a right smart ring when all are present. I must tell you about my doll. Grandpa put it on the Christmas tree. It is a large, fine wax doll. I keep it in grandpa's drawer. I will close by answering Ella E. Tribble's question. It was Eli that fell backward from his seat and died. (1 Samuel iv, 18.) Elkanah was Hannah's husband. I will ask a question: Who was the father of Elkanah? In my next, I will tell you what grandpa says about this country fifty years ago. I wish you and the Advocate good success.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF PURE

Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.

Dr. C. W. BARRINGER, Pittsburg, Pa., says: "I think your Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is a very fine preparation, and this is a long list of testimonials. It is very useful in consumption and wasting diseases."

Johnnie's Prayer.—A True Story.

MRS. T. R. MCCLAIN.

There was a sound of scampering feet, and a chorus of sweet child-voiced voices, as the door of a lovely home in a quiet country town was thrown open, and four pairs of nimble feet ran swiftly down the walk, and four voices rang joyfully out: "Aunt Louisa is coming. O good! I really like to see Aunt Louisa!" And the pleasant-faced, graceful lady coming up the walk, was almost surrounded by the children's welcome of her own relatives. Sooner than it can be written, she was seated in the most comfortable rocker, her wraps laid carefully away by dimpled and eager fingers, and four small chairs and their occupants drawn up closely round her as the temperature would allow. How the little tongues ran, for there was something to tell Auntie till at last little Tommie, who had been trying for some time to get his speech in, said,

"And, O Auntie, we have not had a real, for sure, good story for the long time."

"Have you, I do believe?"

"Does that mean you would like to hear one just now?" asked Aunt Louisa. And four eager voices, chorused the answer:

"O yes, yes, Auntie; a real one, please!"

"With woods and wolves and bears and things in it," added impulsive Jimmie.

"Well, then a long time ago, when forest trees stood thick all over the ground where our city now stands, and when there were but few houses, and they were scattered wide apart, there lived in one of the little boys, named Johnnie. One day his mother called him to from play, and said: 'Johnnie, I will have to send you over to neighbor Blanks for something I must have right away; so get your hat, and take your money and come along as quickly as you can.' Now this nearest neighbor lived four miles from Johnnie's home, and the way led through dense woods."

"Was there bears in 'em?" interrupted wee Annie, whose blue eyes had never moved from her Auntie's face since the story began.

"Yes, there were bears and wolves, too, and Johnnie was very much frightened to think of going through them twice with only the big dog for company, but like the Reckless he had been taught obedience, so he said nothing to his mother about his fears, but called Rover and started at once. His way led past the barn, and when he had gotten behind it and out of sight of the house, he took off his hat, knelt down, and lifting his face toward God's sky, prayed this prayer:

"O Lord, if you'll go along with me this time, and keep the bears and wolves off, I'll never ask anything of you again. Amen." Then he went on his way, did his errand, and came back home safely without seeing even the shadow of a bear or wolf."

Obituaries.

WEBB—Dr. S. M. D. Webb was born May 5, 1825, in the State of Alabama, and departed this life in Clarksburg, La., April 23, 1886, at the age of sixty-one years. He was first married to Miss Carrie Johnson, in Scotland, Miss., May 5, 1848. He was married a second time to Miss F. H. Turner in 1854.

Six living children by his first marriage, all grown, are left orphans to be cared for by the world, but in their early life they have the favor of a Christian character left them as an inheritance. Dr. Webb professed religion, and joined the Methodist Church, when not more than fifteen years old, and maintained till death a noble Christian character. The writer was within a few hundred yards of him for fourteen years, and saw him, tested in almost every conceivable way, yet he never faltered or swayed from truth or right. He was a physician; he had an extensive country practice, and was regarded by his brethren in the profession as well as a scientific and reliable practitioner. He carried his religion into the sick room, and, if his patient was religious or not, he hesitated not to give him such words of comfort or admonition as were needed. If he thought the case was doubtful, he would often send for a preacher, or take one with him, to administer comfort to the dying Christian, or pray for the dying sinner. If the preacher could not be had he would perform these sacred offices himself; and many will be able to attest the truth of each of these statements. He was a man of great faith, and a man of prayer and faith. The universal testimony of all who knew him is, that his place can never be filled in the community, or in the church at Clarksburg, La. He was a sufferer for many years, having a tumor on the left side of the neck just below the ear. It was not out some seven or eight times, every operation being very painful and dangerous, it being near the large artery and connected with the bone. I never saw more Christian courage and fortitude than was demonstrated by him on the occasion of each operation. I have seen him go to the operating table as cheerful and calm as if he were going to sit down with his friends at the table to dinner. He was a man of wonderful nerve. After each operation the tumor would return, at longer or shorter intervals, and was finally removed by his death. For more than a year before his death he was paralyzed, and he became very helpless, and, at times, suffered severely; yet he was never heard to murmur. Though living some miles from him at this time, I visited him several times last year on one occasion attending to him with him, I asked him concerning his future prospects, he answered with a pleasant smile, "Bro. Miller, it is as calm and bright as a May morning." His brother, Capt. J. Y. Webb, of Minden, writes me that he was with him all the time. The last few days of his suffering he asked him to pray with him, and the next day asked that they sing for him, "There is rest for the weary." This passed away from earth one of the purest men it was ever my good fortune to be intimately associated with for so many years. Other notices of his death may have been given, but I feel it due from me to lay this garland of respect and love upon the grave of my friend.

JOHN A. MILLER.

POWERS—Mrs. ESTHER ELIZABETH POWERS, wife of Rev. R. M. Powers, presiding elder of the Dallas district, North Texas Conference, has recently been taken by death from earth to heaven. Esther Elizabeth Allen was born in Fredrick county, N. C., October 11, 1849. She was the daughter of the late Rev. A. C. Allen, D. D., and Mrs. M. A. Allen. When three years old her parents moved to Mississippi. Here she was happily conversant at ten years of age, and her Christian life and character are evidences of the great value of early education. She was principally educated by her father, going with him into paths of metaphysics and languages seldom trod by feminine feet. She married Rev. R. M. Powers, October 18, 1873, at Brookville, Miss., with whom she lived happily until death claimed her for his wife upon April 9, 1886, at her home in Terrell, Texas. For eleven years they had made Texas their home, and while her husband was doing his work as a preacher, she was doing his work as a teacher. She was hard at work, too, in her chosen and loved vocation as a teacher. In this profession she attained unusual, even eminent success, and many a mind has been not only trained intellectually, but moulded for Christ under her skillful touch. Thus briefly may her life be chronicled, but if we were to proceed to dwell upon her character, her Christian life, her unobtrusive but constant work for her Master, and for her own loved ones, a volume would not suffice to elaborate the noble worthy of mention. Suffice it to say of her life, that I do not believe that a more noble and ever loved, faithfully also performed her duty in every relation of life; but her death does not seem to me to be a loss. Allocated with a disease that threatened death in a few weeks, there was hope that a surgical operation might entirely relieve her, and restore her to full health to her husband and friends. She determined according to the best medical advice to try this chance. I wish I could make the readers of this memoir realize with what unflinching Christian courage, with what perfect faith, with what heroic patience she submitted to this ordeal, knowing, as well as anyone, the danger. She arrived the morning about three days. When she realized that she must die, there was not a quiver of fear. She called and talked calmly with her husband, her mother, her brothers and sisters, and a few friends. Among the cheerful sayings of these last hours were the following: "It is not so terrible as I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness; "I know that I love my Lord." She fell asleep as peacefully as a babe going to rest. She leaves no children. Her husband and a large circle of relatives and friends held her to rest in the full confidence of a glorious resurrection.

JOHN A. ALLEN.

BARR—Died, at her home, April 6, 1886, in Natchitoches parish, La., of pneumonia. Bro. JOHN B. BARR, son of M. A. and Nancy Barr, was born in Alabama, January 10, 1845; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when he was eleven years of age; moved with his parents to Grant parish, La. He went into the Confederate Army a Christian boy, and came out a soldier of Christ. He was married to Miss M. E. Barnes, of Grant parish, La., January 23, 1870. He moved from Grant parish to Evergreen, La., in 1872; then to Bayou Boeuf, near Cloutier, in 1874, and in 1876 to Natchitoches parish. In all these places he promptly identified himself with the church, and threw his whole heart into the work of building up the cause of Christ. His genial spirit, manly frankness, and sterling piety, made him a suitable person to fill the office of steward, class leader, or Sunday-school superintendent. This tithe was followed by his pastorate, and he always had the responsibility of one or more of these offices. He was remarkably fond of the society of our preachers, and knew many of them personally. He loved the church, its doctrine and its discipline. Bro. Barr was a loving husband, and an affectionate father, a pleasant companion, a desirable neighbor, and a good citizen. In his death this community has sustained a loss from which it will not soon recover; and though he leaves a wife and seven children, we "mourn not as those without hope." For in addition to his Christian life he leaves a dying testimony. Covering with him a few days before his death, he said, "Brother, I must go." We asked, are you ready? He answered, "yes." We remarked, you now realize that Christ is able to "save to the end." He replied with a triumphant emphasis, "yes, sir. His beauty 'Amen' at the close of this prayer was hope inspiring, and increased our confidence in the ability of Christ to save, for we felt that before us was a demonstration of his power. This brief summary of his valuable life will serve to recall his many virtues to the memory of those who once knew him, and suggest to all how much more extended this memoir might be.

WELLS—ELLEN C. WELLS died at Lake Charles, La., April 1, 1886. She was the second daughter of Judge William B. Wells and Ellen C. Wells. In May, 1861, she married George H. Wells, Esq., then residing at Harrisburg, La. Seven children, issue of this marriage, survive her. Born of Methodist parents, she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Opelousas, La., when only about eleven years old, and remained in the faith until she joined the church triumphant in heaven.

Quiet and unobtrusive in demeanor, and rarely leaving home except to attend church and the prayer meeting, the dominant feature of her life work was the moral and religious training of her children, and when, nearly a year ago, she was informed that an internal form of cancer had fatally attacked her, her greatest concern was a fear that she had not filled up the measure of her duty in this respect. It seemed inexplicable to those who knew her best that she should be so troubled with this apprehension, until they learned that one of the saddest features of the disease referred to is an encroachment on the mind's domain, and then they understood the necessity of her duty in this respect. It seemed inexplicable to those who knew her best that she should be so troubled with this apprehension, until they learned that one of the saddest features of the disease referred to is an encroachment on the mind's domain, and then they understood the necessity of her duty in this respect. TAYLOR—MRS. MARY P. TAYLOR was born in Hancock county, Ga., August 5, 1808. Her maiden name was Turner. She professed religion, and joined the Methodist Church when but a girl. She was married to Jonathan Taylor October 10, 1828, in the State of Georgia. With her husband she moved to Louisiana in 1839, in which State she lived until her death, which occurred April 1, 1886, at the residence of her son, W. S. Taylor, in Clarksburg parish, being nearly seventy-eight years old.

The writer knew her for more than twenty years intimately. She was a devoted Christian, and a good woman, good works from girlhood to old age, and to death. Christ was her portion, and she proved that whether in prosperity or adversity, in joy or sorrow, in health or in sickness, it was good to be a friend of Jesus, and that his grace was sufficient for every emergency. Her home was always a pleasant rest for the weary, and she was always found a hearty welcome. She raised a large family of children, some of whom have passed over the river; and together with her sainted husband they were awaiting her coming on the other shore. She was a patient, uncomplaining sufferer for several years previous to her death. I visited her often during the time of her affliction; she ever expressed herself ready to depart and be with Christ, yet resigned to suffer the will of God. Bro. Barrham, her son-in-law, writes me that he talked with her a short time before her death. She said to him, "All is well, I feel no fears of the future." Her soul seemed to overflow with the power of saving grace as she approached the river of death, but her strength would not permit an outburst of joy. She quietly and peacefully fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, and her body rests beside her loved ones in the old graveyard awaiting the last summons of the Master. My tears, weep not; your loss is her eternal gain.

CARLEY—On Monday, April 12, 1886, the angel of death visited the home of Rev. Lyman Carley, carrying away little Louella. She was taken sick with unobtrusive grip on her birthday, which was April 6, and in a short week the dreadful disease had done its work. She was dedicated to the Lord in baptism by the writer, at the First Church, in Perry county, Miss., January 16, 1883. Louella was a bright, affectionate child, and loved all that was beautiful in this world, all that was beautiful in the world of God, and his family in their sorrow.

LUSK—Died on the morning of February 21, 1886, JOHN, infant son of W. G. Lusk (deceased) and M. N. Lusk, aged three years. Just one year after the father was buried, the desolated home was called upon to give up another beloved inmate; but remember all-merciful mother that Jesus has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

DR. M. W. CASE—I began the use of your remedy for coughs and bronchitis in September, 1879. I tried it faithfully, and it completely cured me. My throat was constantly inflamed. My nasal organs were diseased. Nothing would reach the lungs. I was now from the entrance of the throat. My ears were also affected. I used your remedy for the throat and nose, and I was cured. I can now breathe three times a day and not suffer at all. I am perfectly well. Your friend.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 28.—Notwithstanding the rain was falling in torrents all last night an enthusiastic multitude continued waiting to and fro in the public thoroughfares till midnight, and the Exchange Hotel, where Messrs. Davis and Gordon stopped, it rained all night and poured down till 10 o'clock, when the weather cleared somewhat and the rain ceased. The hour for delivering the address by Mr. Davis and Gen. Gordon was changed by the Executive Committee to 2 P. M. Instead of going to the park, which was very wet, it was decided to go to the Capitol grounds, and for the speeches to be made from the very spot where Mr. Davis took the oath as President of the Confederate States.

JACKSON, Miss., April 28.—The wrecking train that left here at 8 o'clock last night to render assistance at the break on the Illinois Central Railroad, near Montgomery Station, on approaching the place became itself wrecked. Freight conductor George Aird and the colored fireman, Jim Bruce, were killed; the engineer, John Scanlon, had his arm broken and is otherwise badly but not seriously injured. The engine on which they were riding fell fifteen feet and turned nearly bottom up. The engine and tender and live flats were all completely wrecked. Hands are busy to-day clearing the track. There has been a rain here from New Orleans or Natchez since Monday night. It has stopped raining here at last, though it is not entirely clear.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 29.—The greatest event of this memorable week, the laying of the corner-stone of the Confederate monument, took place to-day. The sun shone brilliantly all day and the weather was delightful.

NEW YORK, April 30.—The action of Cardinal Tascheran, of Canada, in issuing a mandamus forbidding Catholics from joining the Knights of Labor is attracting great attention in labor circles.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 29.—In response to a call issued by Gen. Henry A. Barnum and other Grand Army men, citizens to the number of 200 met in the Assembly chamber to-night to protest against the utterances of Jefferson Davis in his speech at Montgomery yesterday, and in the language of the call to denounce the "resurrection of Davis from the oblivion of the grave." American and patriotic people had consigned him. Patriotic speeches were made by Gen. Barnum, Speaker Husted, Senator Kain, Coggeshall and Smith, Assemblyman Van Allen and others. The assemblage sang "We'll Haug Jeff Davis on a Sour Apple Tree." The following was adopted: Resolved, That treason is odious; that the Union of the United States of America, and the liberty which the American principle of popular government illustrates is worth the blood of all loyal citizens of our country.

MISSISSIPPI CITY, Miss., April 29.—Parties from eight miles north of here report great damage done by yesterday morning's wind. The cyclone traveled from west to east, and was the most severe of a mile wide. The distance traveled is not known. Large quantities of timber were blown down and lofty pines uprooted. Mr. Lloyd had three ribs broken in the crash.

OSYKA, Miss., April 30.—News reached here from Smithburg, in this county, to-day, that a terrific hail storm had visited that section yesterday evening, and stripped the hills of all foliage. In many spots replanting of cotton and corn is necessary. It being beaten down so badly. The average size of the hail stones was about three inches in diameter.

SAVANNAH, Ga., May 2.—Mr. Davis' trip from Atlanta to Savannah was a continuous ovation. At every station crowds collected, and wherever the train stopped Mr. Davis was called for and was obliged either to bow or to speak. The enthusiasm everywhere was unbounded.

NEW YORK, May 2.—Dr. Wolfred Nelson, formerly a member of the Board of Health of Panama, arrived at New York from the isthmus by the last steamer. In an interview with a representative of the Associated Press yesterday he said: "I discovered as I was half the work on the canal was completed, the statement is entirely untrue. The canal is not yet completed. A crisis has arisen in canal affairs; the company's indebtedness to share and bondholders now amounts to about $100,000,000, on which they are paying an annual interest of $1,000,000. It is reported on excellent authority that the company has exhausted its funds, and is working on borrowed capital pending the floating of the new loan of $120,000,000."

MOSS POINT, Miss., May 2.—All of the water land around Moss Point is under water, caused by rises in the Pascagoula and Dog rivers. The water is now about 8 feet above low water mark and has risen over an inch an hour to-day. This rise will stop all of the saw-mills on the river.

SAVANNAH, May 3.—The grand street parade and review from the Exchange by the governors of this and other States were the opening ceremonies of to-day, in which the Hon. Jefferson Davis took a prominent part, riding in a carriage with the governors of several States. They received a grand ovation all along the line.

ST. LOUIS, May 3.—After a shut down of several months the Vulcan Iron Works at Carondelet resumed operations this morning, giving employment to about 600 men.

ST. LOUIS, May 3.—Late on last Saturday night Mr. J. W. Hayes, Mr. Wm. H. Bailey and Mr. Barry, members of the Executive Board of the Knights of Labor, met in the Congressional Chamber to-day, and the meeting led to the happy result of the Knights declaring the strike off.

HELLENA, Ark., May 3.—The river has fallen up to 60 inches this evening fourteen inches, and as the great body of water in the St. Francis bottoms and bank lands has been exhausted, the fall is expected to continue more rapidly. The general condition of the overflooded district is now decidedly more favorable from the fact that the water will subside in time to replant the crops drowned out and still make a full crop.

presenting the ultimatum to the Greek government. Count de Moury, the French ambassador, has been instructed by his government to make fresh representations to Greece with a view to effecting a peaceable settlement with Turkey.

LONDON, April 30.—The Daily Telegraph, referring to the demonstration at Montgomery, says: "We think it would be better if Mr. Davis allowed the past to sleep, as Lee and Benjamin did."

LONDON, April 30.—Mr. Gladstone denies the story that he has decided to join the Roman Catholic Church, and that he had requested the fact to be kept secret for six months for political reasons.

DUBLIN, April 30.—Statistics show that during the last three months 188 families, comprising 2477 persons, were evicted from holdings in Ireland. During the same period 250 outrages were committed.

ATHENS, May 3.—All the foreign ministers here, except Sir Horace Rumbold, the British minister, have received instructions to the effect that the reply of the Greek government to the ultimatum of the powers is insufficient. The situation here is complicated and critical. The government resents the interference of the powers with its internal affairs.

LONDON, May 3.—Mr. Gladstone, in a manifesto to his Middlesex constituents, explains that his great age has prevented his taking part in the speeches of the Exeter recess, and has obliged him to reserve his limited powers for the House of Commons, and for that reason he uses his pen instead of his voice.

From Rev. John Matthews, Pastor M. E. Church, South, at Montgomery, Ala.

"Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is the only medicine kept in my family. We can use it for almost everything—burns, bruises, stings, earache, sore throat, etc., etc. My children, when hurt or sick, always call at once for Darby's Fluid. We can not get along well without it."

Seeking a Bed of Gold.

On this page of the Weekly Press will be found illustrations and a description of the marvelous work of turning the course of Feather river in California, for the purpose of securing to gold which must rest at the bottom of the stream, as it runs through a section rich in gold and other precious metals. The illustrations and description are the work of representatives of the Scientific American—a guarantee that they are the unimpaired expression of men skilled in the labors they were sent to perform. The moving spirit in this great enterprise, since its inception in 1882, is Dr. R. V. Pierce of Buffalo, who is the largest stockholder and who has personally invested nearly a million dollars in this gigantic undertaking. If the belief of old and experienced miners is verified by the result—and this will soon be known, as the tunnel will be completed, since the richest men in the world, and stockholders in the Big Bend Tunnel & Mining Co. will be the wealthy men of the land.—From the Albany Press.

HIDDEN.

BY SAMUEL CHARLES HOWARD.

Judge not of those who pass
As they to you appear;
We see but darkly, as through glass,
Mid clouds are walking here.

The heart which coldness shows
May feel keen blows of hate,
On it the tenderest words are blown
From every wayward gale.

Beneath the sternest look
Some wish for help may lie,
As in the rough crag's secret nook
The flower waits from the hill.

(Ah, see! the weary day)
The sunlight's kiss of love,
For even the feeble, shadowy ray
Still lingers and looks above.

Veiled from the distant hill
The battle smoke is white;
The blood, the curse stark and still,
Are hidden out of sight.

The ocean's angry winds
Burst sweet upon the shore,
And have brought the shining sands
Made smoother than of yore.

The pearl is search the tide
That sings the latest song;
And merrily, telling words of life
The heart where good thoughts throng.

A Case of Denominational Comity.

Mr. Editor: In our town, a short time ago, the Baptist pastor, assisted by one Rev. Mr. H., a Baptist evangelist from the northern part of our State, commenced a protracted meeting in the Baptist Church. Soon after the meeting opened the Methodist pastor, as is customary with such pastors on such occasions, went out to the meeting, but took a seat in the congregation. He did the latter because he knew that some Baptist preachers, especially some of those in the ordinary ranks and in the piney-woods tribes, do not recognize any church and ministry as a scriptural church and ministry but their own. Hence, he did not wish to intrude upon holy ground, or to get in the way of or embarrass any one. But the Baptist pastor did not let him remain where he took a seat. He went to him and would have him go forward and receive an introduction to the evangelist. During the exercise of the evening he was called on to lead in prayer, and at the close of the service the Baptist pastor extended to him a public and very cordial invitation to co-operate with him in his meeting, saying, as he did so, that he meant exactly what he said, and calling him "brother" very tenderly and sweetly. Well, this invitation, being extended as it was, placed the Methodist pastor in rather an awkward situation, so far as his own views and feelings were concerned. As he had learned both from observation and experience that Baptist preachers, or at least some of them, would use ministers and members of other churches on such occasions and then treat them unkindly, not to say impolitely, before they got through, by bringing up their peculiar mode of baptism, every church but their own, he had made up his mind not to co-operate with said brethren in their meetings unless he could have some assurance beforehand that they would treat him and his church with proper respect. So he addressed a polite and brotherly note to the Baptist pastor next morning, propounding to him the following question, to wit: "Do you recognize the church and ministry of which I am a member as a part of the great church and ministry of God among men?" giving him at the same time his reasons for propounding the question, and assuring him that if he would give an affirmative answer thereto, he would take pleasure in complying with his request to co-operate with him in his meeting. On account of past observation and experience he was unwilling to enter into the work of the meeting without some such assurance on the part of the Baptist pastor. Indeed, he could not do so as he desired. He was not willing to work at all unless he could put his whole heart, mind, soul and strength into the work, and he could not do this when he had good reason for believing that he would hear his own church unkindly assailed before the meeting closed, and that, too, by the party who had invited his presence and co-operation. It is true that the Baptist pastor had been very brotherly and kind to him in his manner of extending the invitation, but then he remembered from the case of Joab and Amasa that one does not always mean brother when he uses the endearing term, and he feared that a dagger—not a literal dagger, of course, as the one in the case referred to, but a sectarian dagger—might be concealed under a cloak of pretended brotherly love. Indeed, he had realized from sad experience that such things do sometimes occur. Hence, in asking the assurance he asked of the Baptist pastor, he was only acting in self-defense and through self-respect and through a desire to be placed in a condition in which he could enter into the work of his meeting heartily and cheerfully. But this assurance was not granted. The Baptist pastor, instead of answering the question privately as he should have done, it being propounded to him as an individual and in a private way, made the matter public and produced a great stir in the community. He got up in the morning service with a long face, and in a very doleful way told the congregation that he was in great trouble about a certain matter, and asked all the Christians present to pray that he might be divinely guided as to how he should act in regard to it. This, of course, excited the curiosity and sympathy of many present very much. I doubt not that many prayers went up for him that day. Then in the afternoon service his friend, the evangelist, let the cat out of the wallet, but it was one which they had put in themselves. He told the congregation that the Methodist pastor had written the Baptist pastor a very unkind note, and insinuated that he was trying to throw obstacles in the way of the meeting, when in truth he had no thought or intention of doing either. He had addressed the Baptist pastor politely and kindly, and he certainly had no thought or intention of putting any obstacle in the way of success in the meeting. On the other hand he was only endeavoring, as above stated, to be placed in a condition in which he could do earnest work in the meeting. But his conduct was misrepresented and his motives were misconstrued by the visiting brother. Nor did his chastisement stop with this afternoon castigation on the part of the evangelist. He was taken up again at the close of the night service by the pastor, who got up before a large congregation and in the presence of the Methodist pastor, whom he had invited there to hear what he had to say, and stated that the Methodist pastor had declined the invitation that he had extended to him the night before, and had demanded that he should give his views of the church, when, indeed, he had done neither. He had simply asked him, as above stated, in a quiet, kind way if he recognized the church and ministry of which he was a member as a part of the great church and ministry of God among men, assuring him at the same time that if he would give an affirmative answer to the question, he would take pleasure in complying with his request. And after thus misrepresenting the contents of the note, he made several insinuating remarks relative to the matter, and then raised his hand to pronounce the benediction without giving the Methodist pastor a chance to open his mouth. But just as he raised his hand to invoke the benediction, the Methodist pastor arose and demanded the privilege of speaking a word or two. He was unwilling to keep silent under the circumstances. So he went to the front and told the people that he had, as he thought, been treated very unkindly in regard to the matter to which their attention had been called; that he had simply addressed the Baptist pastor a private note, propounding a private question and expecting a private answer; but that instead of sending such an answer, he and his friend had brought the matter before the public and spoken of him insinuatingly. Then, after asking the people to suspend judgment in the matter until they heard his statement and explanation, which he proposed to make and did make in his church the following Sabbath to a crowded house, he denied that he had declined the invitation extended by the Baptist pastor, and in order to prove his statement true he required the Baptist pastor to read his note to the congregation. Then, after reading the note, which revealed exactly what the Methodist pastor had done, the Baptist pastor remarked right there in the presence of the whole congregation that he could not have answered the question propounded without forfeiting the manhood of his church. "I could not have answered that question," said he, "without forfeiting the manhood of my church." Surely, by this expression, he drew out and brandished in the face of the multitude the dagger referred to above. Hence, the Methodist pastor, as it would seem, was right in his suspicion. "I could not have answered that question without forfeiting the manhood of my church." This is a very remarkable expression. If it has any meaning at all, it certainly reveals Pharisaism gone to seed. There is nothing to match it in all the exclusive statements made by the Pharisees of old. They were exclusive and sectarian enough, the Lord knows, and they would compass land and sea to make one proselyte, although thereby they made him, as our Savior declares, twofold more a child of hell than they were themselves, which was quite a hellish creature; yet they remembered that their father Abraham recognized one outside of their church as a priest of the most high God, and, therefore, they would not presume to utter such a statement as the one referred to above.

Now, Mr. Editor, I have given you this affair in its general particulars just as it occurred, and you can make any use of it that may seem proper to you. I hold that the Methodist pastor had a right under the circumstances to propound the question referred to, unless it can be shown that a Methodist preacher has no rights at all, but are under a binding obligation to let others use them and abuse them at their pleasure. I hold, further, that the Baptist pastor did wrong in making a private matter public, especially when he knew that by so doing he would stir up unkind feelings in a harmonious community. Then, in addition to this, I hold that he ought to have been willing to answer the question propounded, unless, forsooth, he wanted to blow hot and cold out of the same mouth.

McCOMB CITY, MISS., April 22, 1886.

"Union of the Churches," by J. H. Brunner, D. D.

This new book possesses an interest in the character of the writer as well as of the subject at issue. Dr. Brunner is a well-known member of the Holston Conference—one of the border conferences. During the war, and since, he has been faithful to the Southern side. Dum spem stabat. He is too old to be ambitious or to write for sensational purpose. His views must be credited with the wisdom of age and experience. In the Holston country, the two churches have occupied the same territory since the war. In many towns their church edifices stand in sight of each other. In the country, the circuit preacher of our church often rides by the houses of worship and private dwellings of Northern Methodists. In the earlier portion of the struggle deeds of violence were not uncommon, incited or inflamed by ecclesiastical hate. Now it is the slow, but deadly opposition of two strong bodies striving to push or pull each other from their seats. It is not difference of doctrine or of worship which allows and claims mutual toleration, but the weight of two impenetrable bodies seeking to occupy the same space at the same time.

We of the extreme South and they of the extreme North feel but little of the friction which is grinding Methodism on the border into powder. The deeper and the nether millstone know nothing of the pressure they exert upon the intervening grain. The "long and sinuous border reaching from Pennsylvania to California" is little more than a line of battle along which the warring lines of combatants alternately advance and retreat, leaving desolation in their path. The Baptist and Presbyterian system of independent congregations in a large measure loosens the contending lines, and the conflicting elements fall about upon each other like loose stones; but the more solid and compact organization of the two Methodisms is like the shock of battle where men are held in line and the ranks of the fallen closed up by the central authority working from behind and within. Shall this unhappy conflict be perpetual? Our author seeks to show that it was not so intended by those good and able men who at first divided the church. In a spirit of concord, and, like Lot and Abraham, to avoid coming strife, they sought to divide the church and to separate on amicable terms. They marked the line of separation, agreed on a division of the common property, and each side pledged itself to abide by the terms of the contract. But what are written contracts between contending armies? "Inter arma leges silent." By mutual aggressions the line of distinction has been obliterated. Everywhere we are told the word "South" no longer applies to the limits of our body. We must leave it off to be free for the fight in the North and the great West. The Northern Church reports hundreds of thousands of members south of Mason and Dixon's line. And so far have these invasions gone that now there is no possibility of retreat. All that can be done in the way of making peace is to renounce the two churches under one general government. "But," say some, "we are not prepared for that. There is yet too much of the old bitterness remaining."

Perhaps in this instance we should learn a lesson from our civil history. Who could have believed that after four years of internecine strife the Northern and the Southern States could have amicably settled down under a common government within twenty years of the close of the war? And who does not now believe that it might have been accomplished sooner than it was had it not been for the vile miscreants who kept up the cry of the bloody shirt to maintain themselves in power? But a union of two legally free and independent bodies, each having its own local autonomy not to be affected by the union of the general government, would seem to be a much easier and simpler task. Who is to be damaged by the change? Not the South, because she retains her Conference boundaries, her Bishops, editors and other connectional officers that are necessary, while she turns over her disputed possessions to the general fund and becomes a joint owner in the new stock.

It is very much as if two families, having exhausted themselves by protracted litigation, should at last by a marriage of the heirs apparent of the two houses stop the strife and restore harmony to all. The property remains in the family, and one can not get the benefit of it to the exclusion of the other. The Methodist Episcopal Church raises this year one million dollars for missions. The Church, South, will raise two hundred and fifty thousand. The joint fund can be administered by one set of officers whereas now two sets are required. The money now spent in border work on either side would be saved and put into church extension proper and foreign missions. "But the Methodist Episcopal Church, being larger, would elect all the Bishops and General Conference officers." It did not use to be so. Bishops Capers, Andrew and Paine were elected before the division. As there would be no North or South, no question like that of slavery to create lines of division, it can not well be seen how any such influence as that above could ever have a beginning.

These are some of the practical reflections that arise from reading Dr. Brunner's book. Whether they are valid in argument remains to be tested by the logic of events. The book does not seek so much to elaborate the argument as it does to present the facts. As it is the first book that has been written on either side declaratively in favor of union it ought to attract attention. There have been books and books to justify the separation, but so far as known to me this stands alone, North or South, in favor of reunion. A new generation has come upon the stage of life since these fatal issues were decided. What have we to do with the wars of the mighty antediluvians whose bones only remain to attest that they were men of gigantic frame and of extreme pugnacity? Let us cultivate the things that make for peace and, forgetting the things that are behind, press on to those before, looking to Jesus as the Mediator of a new and lasting covenant. At any rate, read the book and judge for yourself.

F. M. ORACE.

Mississippi Conference on Cheap Literature.

The Mississippi Conference at its last session, in its report on publishing interests, enacted as follows:

"In this connection we recommend that this Conference memorialize the General Conference to consider the expediency of instructing the book agent to provide or set apart a small section of its business for the printing and sale of cheap literature. This line of tracts, cards, leaflets and pamphlets should be well selected as to matter, and neatly put up as to form, and adapted both to sale at low prices and gratuitous distribution, and should be furnished to colporteurs, societies and such other agencies as may be authorized by Annual Conferences at minimum cost—that is, the actual money paid for material and labor with no margin for use of machinery, general expenses, etc.; and it should also be furnished on more liberal terms than books of the general catalogue."

It was then made the duty of the delegates to the General Conference from this Conference, to present and advocate this measure, which will no doubt be faithfully done.

The distribution of quick, cheap, readable literature, in adequate quantities, together with a general popularization of the issue of our Publishing House, is a deeply felt necessity all over the church. That by this means of incalculating sound morals and sound religion we are not working up closely upon the rapidly increasing facilities of postal and railroad transit, is but too plainly seen. And that very great avenue of improvement in these respects lie open before us is not very difficult to see. Other people do it in spreading viscious and worthless reading, and why can not we in our field?

The old Tract Society of 1855, under the management of Dr. Jefferson Hamilton, was by no means wholly unsuccessful. It continued until 1858. The material he used was neither "well selected as to matter," nor "neatly put up as to form." It expended about $30,000—that is, it took that amount in books and tracts, charged at a good selling profit out of the House over and above the amount of cash it returned. This was about the same ratio of commercial loss by the old depositories at Richmond, St. Louis, Charleston, New Orleans and Galveston. But whether this was any real loss to the Publishing House, in the long run, is very questionable.

An arrangement looking to the same ends of Hamilton's Tract Society, and also to "raise a free cash capital for the Publishing House," was authorized by the General Conference of 1858, chiefly under the supervision of a financial secretary. This was getting into a good working condition when it was torn to pieces by the war in 1861. It established about fourteen or fifteen paying depositories in as many places in the South, and paid something over $10,000 of free cash capital into the Publishing House. What it might have done if it had not been broken up by the war is, of course, not known.

The Mississippi resolution does not contemplate a revival of either of these plans in form. So far as this writer understands it, something like the following is suggested:

Let the General Conference create an office to be called "tract agent." He will occupy an office in the Publishing House. His salary, and that of a clerk, when necessary, will be fixed by the Book Committee and paid by the Publishing House. This agent and his entire business will be under the control of the Book Committee. The agency will have credit in the House for books and work not to exceed $20,000. The House will furnish books, pamphlets, etc., to the agency at the minimum cost—that is, with no profit or compensation for use of machinery, general expenses, or the like. The agent shall secure such outside assistance as he can to get up a line of cheap literature suited to the occasion, either from existing publications or new ones, and supervise their printing and manufacture. They will be disposed of as follows:

1. They will be sold to customers at cost.

2. They will be furnished to regular colporteurs at cost for cash, or on such terms as may be found most expedient. Annual and District Conferences will be expected to recommend suitable colporteurs; but the agent will discontinue any at discretion. Railroad colportage will be tried.

3. Stationary self-colportage will be tried, and continued or not as it may be found to work well. This will be done by preparing suitable open-top boxes, neatly made of tin, paper, or the like to hang up in suitable public places in rail cars, hotels and other places where they will have both exposure and protection. These boxes will contain a hundred tracts, more or less, and be plainly labeled, "Take one and deposit five cents," or some such suitable advertisement.

4. Suitable applications will be made to the secular newspaper press for favorable courtesy in giving notices of the business of the Publishing House and its tract system. Editors, when properly approached, will cheerfully lend a small space for this purpose. Regarding the House as a church institution on the one hand, and glad to get an item of news on the other, they will readily insert a paragraph. A thousand newspapers can advertise the Publishing House.

This was tried in 1861 by the House to an extent sufficient to well warrant this conclusion.

The enterprise once organized and moving in skillful bands, as it no doubt will be, many modes of distribution will occur to the agent and his advisers not now thought of by this writer. With an unoccupied field almost half as large as a continent, it must be a great success. Skill, perseverance and the Divine blessing will accomplish it. Of course colporteurs, in addition to books of the cheap list, will handle those of the general catalogue to any extent. They will at least distribute 100,000 copies of the catalogue.

Sam Jones thus describes the "cornstalk revival," and pleads for another kind:

"We want the sort of revival that will make men do the clean thing. If we can have that sort of a revival I want to see it—but not cornstalk revivals. If you pile up a lot of cornstalks as high as a house, and burn them up, there wouldn't be a handful of ashes. We want a revival of righteousness; we want a revival of honesty; we want a revival of cleanness and purity, of debt paying, of prayer meetings, of family prayer, and of paying our brother a little more salary. That is the sort of revival we want. The Lord give us this sort!"

FOUR FATHER KNOWETH.

Precious thought—my Father knoweth:
In his love I rest;
For whosoever my Father doth
Must be always lost.
Well I know the heart that planneth
Naught but good for me;
Joy and sorrow interwoven,
Love in all I see.

Precious thought—my Father knoweth,
Careth for his child;
Bids me needs closer to him
When the storm beats wild.
Though my earthly hopes are shattered,
And the tear drops fall,
Yet he is himself my refuge,
Yea, my "all in all."

See to it that he knoweth,
Roll on him the care,
Cast upon himself the burden
That I can bear.
Then, without a care opposing,
Simply to be still,
Giving the "all" to him for all things,
Since it is his will.

Oh, to trust him, then, more fully;
Just to simply move
In the calm, calm, calm of
The Father's love,
Knowing that life's checkered pathway
Leads to his rest,
Safe for the way he leadeth
Must be always lost.

Proper Pulpit Preparation.

BY REV. R. P. WHITE.

(Read before the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting, May 2, and published by request.)

BRETHREN: You have given me one of the most pleasing of duties. No subject, perhaps, has engrossed more of my prayerful thought and study; no field have I more earnestly and diligently cultivated than this. In the early part of my ministry, I sought information from every available source, and diligently used all the information gained in the preparation of over two hundred sermons; covering as far as possible every theme suited to the pulpit. I have had neither time, nor authors at hand to obtain assistance in the preparation of this essay, but give you my own thoughts and suggestions on the great subject. If I but throw out a hint, that will quicken my elder brethren and lead the younger to greater care in their preparation for the pulpit, I will be both gratified and repaid.

The first and one of the most important things in the preparation of a sermon is, to have a specific object in view, a certain end to be attained when it is delivered. The minister knows the latitude and longitude of the port from which he sails, and the latitude and longitude of the port of his destination, and equips his vessel for this voyage; then points his vessel's prow as the circumstances permit toward the desired haven. So the minister should know the moral latitude and longitude of his congregation, and the object to be accomplished in the delivery of his sermon. If his object be indefinite, his sermon will probably be without point or effect; if definite, every word, sentence and thought expressed will add to its strength and efficiency in accomplishing the end. If the object be to build up the church in doctrinal faith, the sermon should show this in its entire trend; if to comfort believers, let every sentence be prepared for its accomplishment. Experience has demonstrated to me that sermons prepared without definiteness of object, are always failures. In the preparation of a sermon there should be much care in the choice of the text. A text well chosen, legitimately appropriate to the subject in hand, secures two very important objects. First, it gives naturalness to the sermon, there is nothing strained or far-fetched in it. The preacher, in its delivery, will find that in his text he has a source from which legitimate thoughts flow, and his own manner in the delivery will be easy and natural, while his audience will follow him with pleasure and comfort. Second, it gives confidence to both preacher and hearer. He feels that he has something solid on which to build, and moves off with a steady, strong faith, while his auditors are probably more than half convinced with its announcement. The text should be thoroughly scrutinized, so as to get every possible phase of meaning that its language can convey in connection with its context. The most easy and thorough way to do this is to find the root of each word in both text and context, even if it be considered the most insignificant word in it; then take your Unabridged and study each phase of meaning, given to every word; then study the collocation of words, then take the translations (if possible) of the original, into other living languages, and compare them with your English text. I have found this plan to be of vast benefit, though not an adopt in the foreign tongue.

I was once trying to investigate some portion of the Apocalypse. The first thing I did was to inquire into the meaning of the word "revelation," as used in our tongue; then I took my German lexicon and found offenbarnd to be its synonym; I found this word to come from the same roots that our words "open" and "bare" come from. This train of thought was taken up, viz., God is the revealer, and he is the one who is making open and bare, great truths. He is making them open and bare to man; he is fully competent to this work, and man may be competent to his comprehension, or it is not revelation; it is not the making open and bare to man these great truths. I ceased to read and study this book as a sealed mystery, and began its study with the understanding that it may be comprehended, as the other portions of God's word, and I found a satisfaction in its study, I had never realized before. I consider this comparison of texts, with other languages, of great importance in arriving at the true inwardness of its meaning. Again, there must be very close, a real, tenacious adherence to the use of specific terms in all definitions of thought and doctrine. The vast amount of diversity in doctrinal faith arises from the use of generic terms in our theological disquisitions. To illustrate, the words "necessary" and "essential" are often used as synonyms. Especially is the word "necessary" often used, where the word "essential" would be proper. The word "necessary" carries totally in its meaning, if necessary, it can not but be; not simply as essential to the end; but must be, let the end or result be what it may. If it had been necessary for God to make man a moral being, for the purpose of revealing his moral nature; then God could not help making man and making him a moral being for this purpose; but if it were only essential to the revelation of God's moral nature, that he make man a moral being, then God could choose, whether he would thus make man and thus reveal himself or not. It is essential that I believe with a heart unto righteousness, to be saved; but it is not necessary, for I may choose not to believe, if I will.

A pastor, by a careful study and use of specific terms, will soon be able to convey to his attentive auditors, the exact idea he desires, whereas, with words of many shades of meaning he makes a variety of impressions on the various minds of his hearers, according to their individual understanding of the terms he uses. Every sermon should have argument, exhortation and appeal. The soul is possessed of intellectual sentiment and relative powers. A sermon that does not address the reason of the auditor, is lacking in one of its grandest essentials. It may possibly be true that the majority of your audience are unaccustomed to philosophizing and that you may realize disappointment in their puzzled countenances, but you will find all sane beings competent to appreciate some modes of reasoning. The foundation of a sermon should be a cogent, logical argument, demonstrating the truth of the principles involved in the dicta of the text. Arguments should be climactic. However, never begin with a questionable argument; for by so doing you have lost your cause in the beginning. Let each argument be sound and reasonable, but begin with the least striking and advance to the stronger so as to increase conviction as you proceed. When you have finished your demonstration of truth, your proposition immediately should follow the exhortation, which, being founded on the demonstration made, should be an earnest, direct appeal to the soul through its sentient powers. If I leave my hearers with simply the cold logic of demonstration, I may have fruit in after days; but it is very probable that the convictions will pass away in the midst of the many engagements of life. Let the exhortation appeal to the loves and hates, the hope and doubt, of the soul until he not only sees the truth nakedly as a truth, but sees it, in its relation to himself as a moral and immortal being, bearing on its bosom the blessings of love and peace if received, or the curses of sorrow and hate if rejected. Then you may expect under your appeal for decision, a quick, if not immediate, response of the will, deciding in consonance with the demonstrated truth, and the felt importance of the truth as it relates to his own well being.

Again I would urge the importance of the use of the most exact English in all sermons. The pulpit is to refine and elevate in every possible phase and department of human life. It should, therefore, send forth a bright perennial stream of truth, couched in the purest language, demonstrated by the purest logic and soundest reason and impressed upon the soul through its mental and sentient powers by the most earnest and impressive exhortation. How grandly is the preaching of the gospel adapted as the first, best, instrumentality in the salvation of man!

I would urge the moderately free use of illustration in every part of a sermon. In the argument use the simplest illustration; not coarse and commonplace in expression, but homely in the thought. In this manner we impress the truths taught on the memory of the thinking and explain the truth taught to the untutored and impress it upon their memories also. The Bible abounds in historical facts and circumstances, with which to illustrate the truths therein taught, and should be the especial source of illustration in the preparation of gospel argument. When we come to the hortatory part of the work and the appeal for decisions, we will find illustrations taken from the word of God, used in connection with incidents of human life (familiar to all), to be of great value.

But, my brethren, after all it is not with "words of man's wisdom" alone that this great work is to be done. Had we Heaven's vocabulary, the insight of angels, with logic Herculean, and rhetoric faultless, we will still be signal failures in the preparation of our sermons without that Divine alchemy which comes to human souls only when in communion with God, by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. I believe that every word, sentence and thought in a sermon should be chosen and consecrated in earnest prayer.

Lastly, never prepare a sermon on any subject, either of faith or practice, that you can not say, I believe it is truth, and feel its power. Alas for that one who is "blind," and trying to lead the blind. They "both fall into the ditch." It may be that here is the saddest task upon our part in the preparation of our sermons. If I have felt the pangs of conviction for sin, I can tell you from experience what it is; if I have drunk of the wormwood of true repentance, I can tell you of its bitterness; if I have taken God at his word, believed with a heart unto righteousness, I can lead you to faith's shining heights, where the golden gates of spiritual day open to let into the soul the light of eternal love; if I have experienced sins forgiven and the regenerating power of God, I can not only tell, but demonstrate in my life its sublimating power; if I have stood on Pisgah's heights, I can tell something of the shining skies, that are lighted with the smile of God. Experience, brethren, experience! Not only the philosophy of faith, but the experience of its power, is the grandest essential in the preparation and delivery of a sermon.

A Macedonian Call from Texas.

Our revival services in Nacogdoches closed on March 24. Result, fifty conversions and forty-one accessions. There never has been a revival here before, and in all the past history of this town the sum total of conversions, I suppose, does not equal the number the Lord has given us this year. We thank and praise the Lord! Yet wickedness, Catholicism, and infidelity abound; and we expect Christ to win greater victories over the devil. The small and dilapidated church building we have is the greatest obstacle in the way. During revival meetings not half of those who through the preaching of the word can be accommodated. And those who are turned away are the very class we want to bring to Christ. Hundreds of sinners would hear the gospel and be saved if we had a commodious house in which to seat them. There is not a house of sufficient seating capacity in town. You see our urgent need of a house of worship. We must have help. We can not build without it. Methodism is struggling here for existence. We find it impossible to obtain help from the Conference or parent body of Church Extension. Catholicism dominates our part of the community, and the infidels and sinners, who are in the majority, are indifferent to the demands of building a church and do not respond to such claims. This leaves a small handful of Christians. All denominations are represented among these—Episcopalians, Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists, and they are all striving to build up their several causes. The Baptists are now struggling to build a church. The Presbyterians are at this time holding Presbytery and will make an effort to effect an organization. And while the Methodists are in the majority over other denominations, yet these circumstances conspire to make us very weak. All denominations recognize this as a waiting field, hence their Herculean efforts to establish themselves here. I know of no field promising a more fruitful return for labor, and none more worthy of our contributions.

I adopt this plan of representing our needy condition, and make this call upon all my friends and brethren to help me. I especially ask those whom I have served in the past, to aid us in this worthy object. Brethren, this is the first time in a ministry of twelve years, that I have made such a plea through any of our church papers; but I know the urgency of the demand, and ask you in the name of Christ to help us. Any amount from a nickel up will be thankfully received. I hope those whom God has blessed with worldly goods will send us some liberal contributions. No please do not slight this Macedonian cry. Will the preachers in my old Conference send me a few dimes, and if they can do nothing more, please select some little girl who knows me, read her this article, and get her to raise me a small collection. Amounts less than one dollar can be sent in stamps, anything over in registered letter. Send to W. W. Hopper, pastor, Nacogdoches, Texas. All who find it more convenient can send to Rev. Dr. C. B. Galloway, No. 113 Camp street, New Orleans, La. All monies sent will be acknowledged.

Your brother in Jesus,

W. W. HOPPER.

MR. EDITOR: I see much in the Advocate in regard to prohibition. We have it here, and the good effect is manifest as can be. In the four months that I have been here, I have seen no drunkenness, and do not remember to have seen one man upon whom I have discovered the scent of whiskey. On account of prohibition, to a great extent, we have one of the most orderly towns, and nearly all of the adult population are members of the church. So far as my observation extends, all this action of country is moving up on this line.

ROXBOROUGH'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

A Nervous Disease.

Dr. Hopper, New York, says: "In nervous diseases, I know of no preparation to equal it."

Strictures on Baptist Liberty—Immersion.

Dr. J. M. Pendleton writes a caustic article for the Baptist Reflector against the Christian spirit and liberality of other churches, and consigns to the uncovenanted mercy of God all "pedo-Baptists" who do not think and act as the Baptists do. The title of his invective is "What a Non-Essential Does," and he calls attention especially to the fact that the American and British Bible Societies refused to furnish means, when appealed to by Baptists, for the purpose of circulating in foreign fields their Baptist version of the Bible. He then goes on to scorch and blister them for their wickedness in refusing to convey and establish the narrow but indited church laws of the saintly folks clad in "deep-water frocks." He even thinks that we would rather that the whole heathen world should perish than to give them a Baptist Bible. He says: "I must insist that it is discreditable both to the intelligence and piety of 'pedo-Baptists' that for the sake of a non-essential they keep the word of God from any portion of the human race. If so disastrous a calamity is to befall any nation, let it come through something essential and not otherwise. There are millions now in heathen lands who will never read the Scriptures unless they do so in Baptist versions, and the two Bible Societies sustained by the great body of Protestant 'pedo-Baptists' in Great Britain and America virtually say, that so far as they are concerned, these millions shall die without the Bible." "The trouble was, and is, that in versions made by Baptist missionaries, baptizo is rendered immerse." Alas! alas! for Baptist liberality and piety, if the above is a sample of it. It is the completest demonstration of Baptist intolerance and bigotry on record. It is the completest demonstration on record, that the Baptists are laboring to make people Baptists instead of Christians. It is the completest demonstration on record that the Baptists make baptism by immersion, a sine qua non of final salvation. It is the completest demonstration on record that they belong to that class so pointedly censured by our Lord, who condemned others because they followed not after them. Being from one of the foremost Baptists in America, it is the most complete and most humiliating revelation of the real essence and true spirit of the Baptist Church ever made in these United States. It would take the sarcasm of Sydney Smith, or of Robert Burns, to show up this matter in its true light.

"Oh! would some power the gift to give us,
To see ourselves as others see us."

These Bible Societies did exactly right. In the first place they did not believe it proper and just "to take the funds contributed by persons who did not believe the doctrine taught (exclusive immersion as the only baptism) to circulate what they held to be error"; and, secondly, "the Constitution forbids the publication of any other than a catholic Bible, or such a Bible as all Christians can use in common. The new version had the force of a comment." These were the reasons why they would not furnish funds to carry a Baptist Bible to Burmah and other foreign fields. It would have been to distort the end, and a practical pillaging of the funds of those who contributed money to these societies for the purpose of evangelizing and saving the heathen world. For thirty years they had been supplying a professedly non-sectarian Bible (the King James' version) for the conversion of the heathen, and now, because they refuse to send out a lately invented Bible of narrow High Churchism, dressed up in Baptist tights, that no other denomination of Christians the world over would touch; because they would not violate their well-known Constitution; because they would not thwart the very object of their existence, which was "to promote the circulation of the Holy Scriptures, without note or comment, both at home and in foreign fields"; because they were determined to be upright, just and honest, with respect to the use and distribution of the funds contributed by benevolent and Christian men for the salvation of the world; therefore, the Baptists of America get their backs up, point to these societies as practical examples of the depravity of pedo-Baptists, go off and form a Bible Society of their own that will give them a Baptist Bible, and declare by so doing that either (1) these Bible Societies refused to supply their missionaries with Bibles at all, or (2) that the Bibles proffered were insufficient to save them. On which of these two horns of this dilemma are the Baptists, together with Mr. Pendleton, impaled?

That the first is false, is fully substantiated by the work of these societies for thirty years; but they wisely refused to circulate a straight jacketed Bible that slays all the broad Christian spirit in a man as quick as a dash of double-triggered lightning. The King James' version was offered these Baptists for circulation among the heathen. Then why did they not receive it? That they would not receive it after the refusal of those societies, in 1835, to furnish them a Baptist Bible, is simply a matter of historical fact which no one will have the impudence to deny. But, I ask again, why did they not receive it? Mr. Pendleton says that these societies would rather that "these millions (of heathen) should die without the Bible" than to send the Baptist version of the same. But, as they were willing and anxious to send the King James' version, therefore, Mr. Pendleton, together with the other Baptists of America, did not consider it as the word of God at all, and, of course, incapable of saving them. Hence, they would not receive it as the Bible, and would not circulate it among the heathen as such. I ask the reader to re-read this argument and point out, if he can, any flaw in it. Have I not made it perfectly clear, on the charitable supposition that these Baptists wanted to save the perishing millions of heathen, that they did not regard the authorized version as sufficient to do this? If they believed it sufficient to save them, then why did they not receive and circulate it among the heathen, when it was offered them as a gratuity, and when it was demonstrated that they were then unable financially to circulate the Baptist Bible among them?

But, why did they not receive it? Mr. Pendleton says that the only trouble in the way was that it did not contain the word immerse, instead of the word baptizo, whenever this word occurs in it. This is not only admitted, but actually paraded before the Christian world as something to boast of. If this one change had been made, they would have received it gladly; but because that change was not made, or which is the same thing, because they refused to furnish means to circulate a Bible differing only from the American version in this one particular, substituting immerse for baptizo, therefore they refused to circulate any whatever until at least they could get up a Bible Society of their own two years later. If put on oath, the Baptists and Mr. Pendleton would say, "This is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, as help me God." From this it appears that the Baptists of America, except those admitted of course, were willing to let the heathen live and die without King James' Bible—yes, and go to hell, too, because they could not circulate a Baptist Bible among them. Rather than circulate the American version, they would not circulate any, though the heathen in the meantime were perishing. It was tantamount to saying: "It is very true that the heathen are dying every day by thousands, and dying in their sins, too, under the curse of God's righteous law, and it is very true that we could circulate among them the present English Bible, now in common use, and that, too, gratuitously; but because that is unable to save them, and because we can not send them a Baptist Bible, we will not send them any. It is of no use to send them a Bible that can not save them, and therefore we shall wait until we can fix up, organize and get up money sufficient to circulate the only Bible that can save them." This is the plain English of their action in the matter.

But you say, in spite of the above reasoning, that the Baptists of America do believe that the King's Bible contains sufficient truth to save a man, even a heathen. Then why did they not send it? Simply because it did not contain immerse instead of the Anglicized word baptizo. But why should this stand in their way when they were unable to circulate their immersion Bible among them? The answer is easy. (1) Either because they believed baptism by immersion essential to salvation, or (2) they were unwilling to save them, unless they could make Baptists of them. One of these two conclusions is inevitable, and both may be true. There is no possible way of evading this conclusion, and it shows up our wet-weather friends in a light that is not altogether agreeable. That little Baptist difficulty with these Bible Societies completely unmasks them, and reveals the intense and bitter sectarianism of the Baptist Church in America, together with their real, though concealed views of immersion. By their refusal to send our plain English Bible to the heathen, because it did not teach baptism by immersion, they would not send any, thereby proclaiming that they believed immersion essential to salvation, and that the heathen would be damned without it, or that they would rather they should be damned than not be immersed into the Baptist Church. If this is not sectarianism run mad, and salvation by water proclaimed from the house-tops, I'll give it up.

"They really make the false assertion,
No one is saved without immersion.
That God has neither son nor daughter,
But such as have been under water."
God has no other way that he can save,
But only through the liquid grave;
No! every mother's son and daughter,
Here's the gospel in the water."

I wonder what my dearly beloved and amiable Mrs. Pious Solinda will say to this! But we are simply on the defensive. When proud, strutting, obnoxious, yet dignified little whippersnappers mount their scaling stop-ladders with the express design of pulling a nose—a pedo-Baptist's nose—they need not be surprised if they find themselves stepping down and out. The lilly-lever may swagger, but he is sure to be detected and found out some day, and so for the present I shall let Mr. Pendleton and his Baptist tribe "drop."

Yours "till death do us part,"

NECKY'S BROTHER.

Sin is really the source of all unhappiness, and it is on this account that unbaptized and unpunished sinners are kept in the world until they are brought to a full realization of their sin, and then they are cast out.—Rev. Dr. Hurr.

From the Work.

HATTIESBURG CIRCUIT, MISS.

While I may not be able to report success and prosperity in all the departments of church work on my circuit, nevertheless, there are encouraging signs and good ground to hope for a gracious revival at every appointment. The church was in a prosperous condition, and there were numerous conversions—some heartburnings, general indifference, but almost every point. But, thanks be to God, there has been marked improvement in all these particulars. Speciality is this time of the two principal appointments in my charge: Hattiesburg and Ellisville. At each of these I have recently held meetings of much interest, and I am sure they have been seasons of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Our second quarterly meeting held at Hopewell (Tusculum station) was a very profitable time. The meetings at Hattiesburg and Ellisville, each resulted in addition of four members to the church, and at the quarterly meeting referred to, one adult joined, and two children were baptized. The main points gained so far, are the general quickening of the church, the revival of the prayer meeting and Sunday-school interest, and the much test concern at all points for the prosperity of God's cause.

I have secured in cash and subscriptions now more than half the amount for foreign missions on my circuit and will forward at least one-fourth to Dr. Kelley within the next two or three days.

At the meetings recently held at Hattiesburg and Ellisville, we were highly favored by the assistance of Bro. C. H. Lincoln, who, although, he does not claim to be another Sankey or Bliss, certainly sings the gospel with wonderful effect and rendered us valuable service in song. He chanced to come along just in time.

Bro. Sims, at Hattiesburg, whom all that know him, only know to love and honor him as one of the ripest scholars and best preachers of his age, helped as a good yoke-fellow. At Ellisville, our young Bro. Selby, from Poplarville circuit assisted me, laboring earnestly, with great acceptability and usefulness. The people of my circuit, without, as well as within the church have endeavored themselves to me and mine by numerous acts of kindness which will not soon be forgotten. From all but one appointment there has been a generous "pounding" which has supplemented greatly the small allowance for support, and demonstrated that "the Lord will provide." For weeks I have been doing the work of from one to two sermons a day up to last Sunday. I thank God that both body and spirit have strengthened notwithstanding.

VALDEN, MISS.

Our District Conference at Carrollton was an enjoyable occasion. There was food for all except the lovers of the vile. I will venture to say that no body of men ever assembled more thoroughly opposed to whiskey. The question of prohibition was extensively discussed, without any of the con. The fact is, whiskey must go; and God speed the day! Those men in public life and elsewhere who took on whiskey for success will go down, too, with the devouring stuff.

The noble people of Valden are coming to the front as temperance workers. Tell it, if your wish, that as a result of the efforts of our men and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, day is dawning upon our hopes. There are boys and girls here of great promise, and it will be a victory that will redound to their eternal good, as well as to the glory of God.

Our parsonage will in a few days be ready for use, and a pretty little house it is! Considering the scarcity of money, I think our success has been wonderful. We would have failed though if it had not been for our women. They were ready for every good word and work, and desire to be held in grateful remembrance for the interest they took. God bless them all!

We are looking and praying for a sweeping revival. Let all who read this remember us at a throne of grace.

Your in Christ, D. M. COONELL.

CLINTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: As the other brethren are reporting from their works, I suppose it will not be amiss for me to fall in line and give you a brief of my work. My charge is not all that I desire it to be; however, we are on the upward grade. There are many signs of returning life. Our devoted women are waking up to the truth that no success, as a church, depends in a large measure upon them. They have organized a Woman's Missionary Society, and seem determined to make it a success. The women always succeeded in their undertakings, which I think is due to their child-like faith in God. These same devoted women have a regular organized women's prayer meeting. They meet every Monday at the Methodist Church to unite their prayers in asking God to favor Zion. It is really encouraging to see these women, who have never been accustomed to leading in prayer, taking the cross of active Christian labor. They are singing in our church, led by our accomplished and very devoted sister, Mrs. J. P. Knox, is splendid. The regular weekly prayer meeting is well attended, and increasing in interest. Answer to prayer comes to the faith that recognizes God in the promise.

You did not pray in your family last night nor this morning, and today the loved one died. Do you not feel that you have wronged the dear, sweet soul by this neglect of duty?

We can not have a revival in this church because the members do not love each other and some of them will not speak. Is there such a church, and do these brethren know that their conduct will cause souls to be eternally lost? There is some very delicate and much needed work to be done by this pastor and his people. Work they must do at once or else become partakers of other men's sins. Let a day of fasting and prayer be appointed.

The words of our Lord, "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own," do not mean, that the world loves the individual because he is of the world; but that the world loves itself in the individual. In what then, young Christian, does the world see and love itself in you? Were you expected at the dance last night? Or shall we look for you among those who desecrate the Lord's day? If in neither of these, where is the world expecting to find its image reflected in your heart? I want to whisper a great secret to your soul: "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

Whether "Our Brother in Black" has or has not any decided future, it is quite certain he is making himself felt along the line of present development. We clip the following from the Christian at Work: "The Episcopal General Theological Seminary, of this city, gives a biennial prize of a gold watch to the member of the middle or senior class who will repeat from memory the entire services of the burial of the dead, and preach the best extemporaneous sermon from a text assigned one hour previous. This year the prize was taken by a colored graduate of Harvard University."

What is the meaning, and what will be the final outcome of all this stir in spiritual matters? We are not in the least apprehensive of a crisis, but may it not all portend a blaze of glory from shore to shore and round the world. We copy from an exchange as follows: "A new religious movement is creating much excitement in Southern Russia. The 'Stundists,' who are members of a Lutheran body, now call themselves evangelical Christians, and are making surprising progress among the peasant class. In many villages the orthodox churches remain empty, while the meeting-houses of the evangelical Christians are crowded. Discontent continues to multiply in Russia in spite of every kind of persecution."

This paragraph, which we find in the Central Christian Advocate, contains a suggestion to certain of our own ecclesiastical statesmen who favor an undue strengthening of our episcopacy:

"The Churchman calls a halt in the division of the dioceses of the Protestant Episcopal Church. It concedes the value of small dioceses in the matter of episcopal supervision; but there is a point, it says, 'beyond which this policy of division can not be safely carried, and that point has in all probability been already transgressed.' The propriety of uniting two of these small dioceses, Delaware and Easton, is under consideration. The difficulty does not appear to be of a financial character, as one might suspect. But the episcopal office in a small diocese is not a desirable position. The field is so circumscribed that it has no attractions for a man of parts. Easton has 33 ministers, and there were 40 confirmations in a year. The Protestant Episcopal Church is overstocked with Bishops. There are now seventy in number in more or less active service. There is one Bishop for every 54 ministers; one for about every 5,700 communicants. In the Methodist Episcopal Church there is one Bishop for every 1,061 ministers, and every 170,000 laymen."

Editorial Correspondence.

On account of floods and washouts obstructing railroad travel over the several lines leading out of New Orleans, I failed to carry out a cherished purpose to spend the Sabbath preceding the General Conference at Bristol, Tenn., with my old friend, the Rev. D. S. Hearn, president of Sullivan's College. I found it impracticable to leave the city until Saturday-afternoon. But our fancied disappointments often bring us great good. Jacob, overwhelmed with a succession of sorrows, once exclaimed, "all these things are against me," but under the direction of a wise Providence they wrought his highest honor. We know not the end from the beginning. The failures of to-day may achieve the successes of to-morrow.

The Sabbath was pleasantly spent at Calera, Ala., situated at the junction of the Louisville and Nashville and East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroads. I found it a prosperous, growing young town, of few years but of large prospects. It is near the rich coal fields of Alabama and is itself leading in manufacture and shipping of lime. Much of our best lime, used in New Orleans, comes from that point. At eleven o'clock I went quietly to the Methodist Church and heard a profitable sermon from Dr. C. D. Oliver, on the character of Daniel. The Doctor is a superannuated member of the North Alabama Conference, and resides within a mile of Calera where he has a regular appointment to preach. Recognized me at the close of the service without consultation he announced that I would preach at night, and of course, there was no escape. Every Methodist preacher is under authority whether at home or abroad. I met a number of friends and acquaintances, some old and appreciative readers of the ADVOCATE, and enjoyed the day greatly.

Pursuing my northern journey the next day I had opportunity of making observations upon the growth and thrift of some sections of North Georgia. The country had been sadly damaged by recent floods, but the enterprising farmer had begun the work of replanting and repairing, and the year's crop outlook is by no means discouraging.

From Cleveland, Tenn., northward I had the company of Col. Nugent, one of our delegates from the Mississippi Conference and a loyal, royal Methodist, known and read of in all the Southwest. At different stations our party of General Conference was reinforced and by the time we reached the Virginia line, had become quite a company. The beautiful hills and valleys of East Tennessee covered with luxuriant carpets of clover, grass and wheat, were a real feast to eyes accustomed to the barren winter and spring lands of the cotton belt. And the mountain ranges visible in the distance, robed in azure, were an uplift and inspiration to the soul.

On Tuesday morning we reached Lynchburg for breakfast. The Relay House will have to be re-laid from kitchen to office, before it can in all good conscience charge seventy-five cents, for such a meal. The waiters were few, awkward and lazy, and the bill of fare lacked variety and skill of a good cook. The last state of this man was worse than the first.

From there on to Richmond, by way of Petersburg, we traveled over historic ground. It awakened a troop of memories from the grave of the past, when the porter announced "Appomattox station." A few miles north of that depot witnessed the closing scenes of the fateful war between the States. There Robert E. Lee tendered his valuable sword—an honored, well-tried blade—to the commander-in-chief of the Federal armies, and there the "conquered banner," was furled forever. It is no disloyalty to the government—our reunited nation—that the heroism of the Southern soldiers and the historic places in our land, should be remembered and memorialized. There is a true national sentiment in the South. Ours is no lip-loyalty. We are "back in our father's house" and to remain. But it would be at once unnatural and an impeachment of true manhood, to demand the throttling of those sentiments and the oblivion of those memories. They can be cherished without compromise of national patriotism or abatement of loyal interest in our common, reunited country. In the vicinity of Richmond the remains of the old trenches are seen, where brave men resisted to death beleaguering armies by day and slept upon their muskets at night. Over them the grass has grown and is rapidly effacing the sad traces of fratricidal struggle. Richmond was reached in the early afternoon and my steps were at once directed to the hospitable home of Capt. E. Thompson Brown, where a cordial welcome was in waiting. This is to be my home during the session of the General Conference, in company with the Rev. George Needham, of the Denver Conference. The afternoon gave some opportunity of seeing the city of many memories, and for four years a place of determined search by the military skill and valor of the great North. It is now as peaceful as though its streets had never been disturbed by the enginery of war. Its streets are as busy with trade as though commerce had never been interrupted by blockaded ports and the clash of arms. Indeed it is a beautiful, well-built, handsomely kept city. But of the place and its points of interest, I shall have more to say in this correspondence.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

This body met at half-past nine o'clock this morning in Centenary Methodist Church on Grace street. The building is commodious and all arrangements for delegates are ample and satisfactory. The five Bishops were present and looking well. Bishop Wilson has greatly improved and gives promise of complete restoration to his former vigor. The opening devotional services conducted by Bishop McTyeire and his colleagues were very impressive, and gave a fine tone to the spirit of the day's deliberations.

The attendance was very large at roll-call. Many delegates, including the Mississippi, had a response for each name. There was an absence, each from Louisiana and North Mississippi, but those delegations will probably be full by to-morrow.

Dr. John S. Martin, of Baltimore Conference, was elected secretary. He served in that capacity at the last General Conference, after death of Dr. Summers, and for many years has been the accomplished secretary of his Annual Conference. He is appointed as his assistants, Dr. John D. Vinell, of the Missouri Conference and Rev. Warren A. Candier, of the North Georgia Conference.

The Bishop's Address was read by Bishop Keener and bears the stamp of his genius. It gives a graphic review of our church operations for the quadrennium and makes a magnificent exhibit of faith and achievement. The increase of membership has exceeded any like period of our denominational history, while the advance in missionary offerings is a real inspiration. Some important suggestions looking to General Conference action are made, that may result in valuable legislation. The address urgently recommended, however, the preservation in fact of our excellent book of Discipline. The Bishops advise the election of three men to strengthen our episcopal college. It is very probable, however, that four will be agreed upon by the General Conference.

The body is remarkable for the number of new men in attendance. Some delegations are composed almost entirely of representatives, who have never eered in this great council of the church before. But there are enough of the veterans present, doubtless, to put the brakes on excessive legislation. The Conference well represents the current spirit and honor of the church, and will compare favorably in ability and loyalty with any previous session of this body.

The Rev. A. C. Bledsoe, pastor of one of our leading churches in the city and chairman of the Committee on General Conference Entertainment delivered an admirable address of welcome, which was responded to by Bishop McTyeire, in his happiest style. The Bishop is equal to any occasion and rarely fails so magnificently. His references to incidents of early Methodist history in Virginia, to Randolph-Macon College, to the General Conference at Petersburg in 1846, and to the noble men who have gone before, were refreshing and often eloquent.

MAY 5, 1886.

Brother, are you expecting a sweeping revival in your charge this year? If not, why not? You had better consult the Master about it. You do not want the blood of that soul that must die this year on your hands in the judgment.

These lines by Claribel give expression to a beautiful sentiment:

"Perhaps when earthly fetters shall have set my spirit free,
My voice may know the old songs
For all eternity."

We may well doubt if the joys of Heaven will obliterate the sweet experiences of this present life.

The Revision of Our Hymn Book.

A church that lives must sing. Her sorrows and her joys find their most natural utterance in song. Not only must a living church be a singing church, but the type and power of the piety of every age are indicated by the songs it produces or uses. Nothing more clearly exhibits the prevailing trend of theological doctrine and scriptural interpretation than the popular hymns of any period. The perpetual production of new hymns is a prime evidence of the abiding inspiration of the church. From the exhaustless stores of the book each age brings its own treasures forth, and characterizes itself on history's page as much by the songs it writes and sings, as by the commentaries and theologies it elaborates and enshrines. Songs, too, are not only a chief index of the spirit and character of a people, but have a powerful influence in determining both. Hence, what shall Methodists sing? Is a question of no small importance. That our hymn book must undergo revision seems apparent to all. Few matters of more importance will come before the General Conference now in session than the devising of a judicious plan for accomplishing that great work. Such wisdom and poetic skill as are possessed by comparatively few persons will be required to qualify a committee for the revision of our hymn book. The able senior editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate proposes to revise not only the book, but the theology and even the poetry of several of Charles Wesley's hymns.

Our hymn book has been in use in its present form for nearly forty years, and though in many respects surpassingly excellent, is not without objectionable features. Not only are several of its hymns too long, or of difficult metre, or otherwise unsuitable for congregational or social worship, but the book is conspicuously destitute of any additions which the last half century has furnished to the hymnology of Christendom. The last twenty-five years have been particularly abundant in the production of musical compositions, especially of such as are adapted for use in the Sunday-school. These have all been published apart from the hymn book of the church. Can anyone doubt that this fact alone has had a powerful tendency to make the Sunday-school an institution separate from the church? And ought not the hymn book of the church to contain a goodly supply of hymns for her Sunday-schools? If they do not know each other's songs, can their sentiments be one? Our standard hymn book, though it has passed under the scrutiny of the church for many years, is not without some remarkable errors; as, for instance, in Stennett's hymn, beginning, "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand," the third line of the fourth stanza is printed differently in different books, being in some, "There God, the Sun, forever reigns," in others, "There God the Son forever reigns." This is not a matter of mere spelling, but involves somewhat of theology and of biblical doctrine. A judicious committee, or, perhaps, the General Conference should decide which word shall be used and require uniformity in all the editions of our hymn book.

After the revision of the hymn book, and in immediate connection therewith, arises the necessity for such legislation as shall promote its use by the church. The action of the last General Conference, authorizing the publication of an abridged collection of hymns has, in many places, resulted in the practical abandonment of our standard hymn book. The Mississippi Conference at its last session unanimously memorialized the General Conference "to take such action in regard to the hymnology of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as shall prevent our standard hymn book from being superseded by our new hymn book, or any other abridgements or transitory musical publications of the day."

What the church needs is a hymn book of such contents, quality and price as shall make it successful against all competitors. If such a book shall become the dignity and answer the wants of the church can not be made to rival in the market the cheap musical literature of the day, then let the Conference prohibit the further publication of abridgements, or else require every minister to use only the standard hymn book in the Sunday morning service in every congregation. The church must have and use her own hymn book. She can not afford to sell herself out to the lowest bidder, in the matter of furnishing her songs. It is to be hoped and confidently to be expected that the General Conference will take such action on this great subject as its importance demands.

May God bless our General Conference, and direct its legislation for the good of the church!

Reverence for the Sanctuary.

At the anniversary of the Board of Church Extension, held in the city of Memphis in March, Bishop McTyeire delivered a short address one evening on reverence for the sanctuary. So practical and timely were suggestions made, that the general wish was expressed for him to write out the address for publication. That he has not found opportunity to do, but has contributed the substance of his remarks in an introduction to a pamphlet just issued by Dr. Morton, containing the addresses of Dr. H. C. Morrison and this editor on the occasion mentioned. We quote from Bishop McTyeire's Introduction the following:

Whatever makeshifts for places of assembly, in the early centuries, Christians resorted to, in order to escape suppression and persecution—caves and dens and rooms in private houses—no apology now exists for inadequate accommodations. There are none to molest or make them afraid. The church must be a freeholder and not a tenant at will. The city set on a hill is its emblem. In heaven there is no temple. All is consecrated ground. But in this world, among houses for trade and manufacture and habitation—and pleasure and business, the temple of God is seen standing apart. Its architecture proclaims its purpose. Hard by is often seen its fitting neighbor, the grave-yard, where the dead sleep in the dust, a silent sermon to the living.

The Board of Church Extension is creating a public opinion on two points: First, suitable—if you please, tasteful—models of building. Why not? Second, plenty of ground. Requests for help are declined where, in a town newly laid off, or in the country, a church is to be built on just ground enough to hold it. No room for expansion; no provision for parsonage; no space for shade-trees; no standing-place for horses and carriages. Little, lean, narrow, consumptive lots are sometimes offered for this sacred cause, and that, too, in the beginning of settlements. By and by the church, among the first comers, having by its influence enhanced the value of surrounding property, is hemmed in and put at disadvantage for all the years following.

It is God's word: "Ye shall keep my Sabbath, and reverence my sanctuary." Both the time and place especially devoted to his worship are to have due honor from men. How can reverence for teaching of the Divine word and for the holy ordinances be cultivated among a people who worship God, and hold court, and fog children, and convict criminals, and collect debts, and wrangle over politics in the same dirty, dingy, tobacco-stained houses? In portions of our land a generation has grown up without reverence. It is almost impossible to reduce them to proper behavior during sermons and sacraments. All the associations of the devout occasion are profane and unwholesome. They talk and laugh and chew and spit before, during, and after preaching, and resent it if admonished for misbehavior. They have never seen, and therefore never know, the benefit of a full church service in all its parts, conducted decently and in order. The schoolmaster or the civil magistrate gave way temporarily to the gospel minister. The furniture and surroundings are ill adjusted to his calling, and upon his retirement the secularities resume sway until the next monthly appointment. Is the reverence which God commands for the sanctuary likely to be cultivated under such circumstances?

School-houses and court-houses are poor substitutes for sanctuaries. Union houses, so called, are little better. For, under honest preaching, under other kind of preaching, latitudinarianism. When you invite me to your house, I expect hostile treatment. When I invite you to mine, I desire the proper courtesies to be observed. But it is a doubtful business when we go to our house. Some particular denomination ought to have the care and control of every house of worship. It promotes peace and a whole gospel. In this matter Methodists have been sadly overreached by a false and malignant sentiment of unity and liberality, and have often lost the benefit of that pre-emption to which their pioneer labors entitled them.

The late Rev. Thomas Clinton, of Mississippi, a holy, witty, Zacharias-sized Irishman, and one who gave a long and faithful life to the Master's cause, was once opening the Sunday service in a log-house, unfenced and unceded, to which the rich and well-to-do members rode up in their carriages in elegant style. The preacher encouraged the congregation to lift up their hearts for a blessing—"If," said he, "the Lord can condescend to come and bless any people who are content to worship him in such a poor, mean, shabby, shackly, leaky, flea-bitten place as this is."

With all the corruptions of the Papacy, it is nevertheless true that St. Peter's at Rome, Cologne Cathedral, and similar dominating structures have never allowed Christianity to incur popular contempt. They speak rightly—that religion is the chief thing in this world, and that the best belongs to God. This idea finds support in the magnificent Temple on Mt. Zion.

Several years ago Bishop Pierce observed in Kentucky the baneful influence of a false liberality, where factions are employed in reporting church property—one-half, one-third, one-fourth of a meeting-house! He saw Methodism weak where fifty years ago Gynn, Cronin, Ransom, Stamper, and such like, had triumphantly proclaimed the gospel, but failed to fortify and garrison the land after overrunning it; and he plainly advised our preachers and people to draw out, and to meet under a Methodist tree if they could do no better. Let us build houses neat and comfortable, however humble, of which it may be said: "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord."

Col. Geo. W. Carter.

Many friends of other days in Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas will read with interest the following from the Richmond Christian Advocate. It is evidence of remaining manliness when a backslider or fallen member can yet honor the church and take to himself the blame and consequences of his defection. It is common, but essentially cowardly and mean, for men to leave the church and lead lives of sin, and charge it all upon some member of the church. The Richmond says:

There has been an article going the rounds of the press in reference to George W. Carter, who was formerly a member of the Virginia Conference, which does Mr. Carter an injustice. It is a reported conversation in which Mr. Carter is represented as speaking flippantly and disrespectfully of the preachers of other days with whom he then stood shoulder to shoulder. The conversation never occurred. In writing of the matter in a letter to Rev. W. E. Evans, of this city, Mr. Carter takes occasion to say:

"The purported interview and conversation referred to are fictitious. I withdrew from the church in this city twenty years ago because I was dissatisfied with my own spiritual condition. Since that time I have drifted somewhat from my old mooring, and have wandered far from God; but I have not changed my belief in the substantial truths of Christianity, and I have never attempted to palliate my own sin by changing my religious opinions. I have always declared that God was right and I was wrong. I still reverence God and honor his ministers, and still retain the tenderest affection and profoundest respect for my old comrades of the Virginia Conference."

"I have not found it profitable to notice newspaper statements relative to myself, and I am conscious that I am a very insignificant element in the great mass of the community. Under the circumstances it is a matter of very little moment in my judgment what is said or thought about me, unless it should wound the hearts of my friends."

A Suggestion.

MR. EDITOR: The Board of Managers of Mansfield Female College had a timely meeting and re-elected Rev. F. M. Grace, D. D., president of the college, as his former term would have expired in June, next. Dr. Grace took charge of the college three years ago, just after it had received a shock from which some of its best friends thought it would never recover. By a quiet, prudent, persistent management he has brought it back to its former self.

There will be thirteen graduates this year—a larger number than in any previous year. The Rev. C. B. Stuart, D. D., will preach the commencement sermon, June 6. It will no doubt be pleasant for him and also for the people of Mansfield to meet him again in the college—the scene of his former trials and triumphs. The alumni will meet on Tuesday, the eighth, when the Hon. R. P. Hunter, of Rapides, will deliver their annual address. Here I wish to call the attention of the alumni and the friends of the college generally that they deserve credit for erecting a beautiful monument to the memory of Rev. H. C. Thweatt, D. D., founder of the institution.

Now an opportunity offers to erect another monument to his name, and which is richly deserving, more lasting than marble. Miss Lizzie Thomas, a sprightly little girl twelve years old, granddaughter of Dr. Thweatt, an orphan and destitute of means of an education, believing as we do that the alumni and friends of the college and of the late Dr. Thweatt would gladly contribute means to have her educated, I therefore make the suggestion. Contributions may be sent to Mrs. S. D. Newman, Mansfield, La. Dr. Grace generously propose to give her her tuition. Who would not imitate the gratitude of David after the death of Jonathan, his dear friend?—being able to show him kindness the next best thing he could do was to help his family. Finding his father took him and gave him a long inheritance. Many will remember how much they enjoyed the visits of Dr. Thweatt, and felt that he left a lasting benediction upon their families. Here is a place where show gratitude. We want one hundred dollars a year till she graduates.

Bro. Harp, pastor of the church here, is doing a good work. Congregations large, and state of religious feeling good.

MANSFIELD, LA., April 30, 1886.

—The Richmond Christian Advocate thus describes the "form hearers": "In all congregations religious worshippers there is to be found a plausible, but dangerous class of charity. It distributes with liberal hands the preacher's message, reserving for personal use enough to perish on respectably."

ECZEMA CURED

Dr. J. H. McLean's Homeopathic Liver and Kidney Balm, cures the skin with minute pimples which are filled with a colorless fluid. The eruption is attended with pain, heat, violent itching, and intense smarting. When the pimples break, their watery contents poison and inflame the skin, and sometimes form a thick crust. Without appropriate treatment this disease is liable to last for months and years. Eczema can be cured.

By Purifying The Blood.

The blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. "For the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla, used three bottles of this medicine, and was completely cured. I know of no other remedy which has so completely cured this disease. It is the natural enemy of impurities of the blood."—George G. Bartner, Kew-Forest, Va.

Victory Certain

I had, for years, a dry, scaly humor, from which I suffered terribly. As my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady was hereditary. Last winter, Dr. T. W. of Portland, Me., advised me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and I took it for a year. For the first time I felt like a man, and had you seen my complexion before I commenced, I would have traveled a thousand miles to show you the wonderful effect of your remedy. I have not a hair on my head, and I attribute my cure wholly to

Two years since I was examined at the Long Island Hospital, in this city, and my case was declared to be Salt-Rheum. Large scales covered my legs, and were constantly dropping off, my eyes, also, were badly affected. My only relief was to remain in a warm room, and could only sleep under very light bed clothes, as the heat only increased the itching and itching. After consulting a number of physicians, and taking many remedies, I was finally cured by using Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER

Secretes the bile and acts like a filter to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious dyspepsia, a languid, weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms generally termed liver troubles. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood purifier.

Dr. J. H. McLean.—I have been for a number of years severely afflicted with jaundice and a dull, heavy pain in my liver. Three bottles of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA have cured me, and I feel like a new man.

Dr. J. H. McLean.—I have examined the prescription for the preparation of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, and believe the combination to be an excellent one, and well calculated to produce an alternative purgation of the system. I have used it both in the acute and chronic stages, and find it the best of all remedies for the cure of the liver.

Dr. J. H. McLean.—I have used BULL'S SARSAPARILLA for rheumatism and kidney trouble, and my son has taken it for scurvy and general debility. It has given us both great relief.

DYSPEPSIA

Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, heartburn, wind in the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration. There is no form of disease more prevalent than Dyspepsia, and it can in all cases be traced to an enfeebled or poisoned condition of the blood. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA by cleansing and purifying the blood, tones up the digestive organs, and relief is obtained at once.

Dr. J. H. McLean.—I have on occasion to say that I have used BULL'S SARSAPARILLA to the best advantage in the cure of Scrophulous affections, and many other cutaneous and glandular affections, finding it with entire success in many of the most obstinate cases.

Our Young People.

ONLY A NICKEL.

EX MISS CLARA P. DEARWAY.

He cleared the snow from the office door, And shivered away with all his might, He had earned a nickel—he asked no more: And it came in his hand so round and bright.

It was all his own—now what would he buy? Candy, or maybe, or new sled strings, Pins, or needles—dolls, or toys? Oh! a nickel will buy so many things.

"Now, what would a little heather do? If he had a nickel to spend to-day?" Then he paused and wondered if it were true, What they said of the heather boy and maid.

Of child-ron who never had been to pray, Who never had told their hearts had died, "Could his nickel buy them in any way To learn and to love the crucified?"

Like a Christian boy, he gave to God, The only nickel—now what it could, And the boy was blessed for his selfishness; And the nickel was blessed in being good.

For the story was told in a heather land, Of the little boy who had sent his all; And the children were made to understand That this God was the loving God of all.

All here is a lesson for you and me, And I hope my story has made it plain: If we give what we have, unselfishly, The Lord will see it to our gain.

Mr. Editor: This is our first letter to your paper. We are aged respectively eleven and thirteen years old. We go to Sunday-school every Sunday when it is not raining, or we are not sick. We have a good Sunday-school. Mr. J. E. Crossley is our superintendent. Mr. B. F. Jenkins is our teacher. We belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Bro. H. C. Parrott is our pastor. He is such a good man. Our father is a Methodist preacher. We will answer a few of the many questions asked in your good paper. Johnnie Marshall, you will find the word "outlandish" in Nehemiah xiii, 26. Ella E. Tribble, it was Eli that fell backward from his seat and died. We will ask a question: How old was Moses when he was called to lead the children of Israel out of Egypt? With many good wishes for the ADVOCATE, We remain, Your true friends, JOHNIE AND JULIA WASSON, WELLS FORTVILLE, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: I thought I would write to your valuable paper, as I have not written for some length of time. I am a boy eleven years old. I will be twelve on the fourteenth of July. I am writing this by myself. I have been going to Sunday-school when the weather is clear and dry. Our teacher is Miss L. L. She is a very good teacher. I go to school every day. I have been going to school for eight months, and have not missed a half a day. Can any of you guess how tall I am? I am four feet and ten inches tall, and weigh eighty pounds. I trust this will not reach the waste-basket. I will close by asking a question: Where in the Bible is the "Mountains of the Lord's house" found? I hope someone will answer this question. I must close. Yours,

FRANKLIN, LOUISIANA. CHARLIE S.

Mr. Editor: I thought, as I never have written to the ADVOCATE, I would write to-day. I am a little girl twelve years of age, and I weigh one hundred and sixteen pounds. I am going to school now. The school will be out in one week. Miss Ida Drangh is my teacher, and I like her very much. The Sunday-school is reorganized for this year. I am going to Sunday-school. My teacher is Mrs. Eason. I have four sisters and two brothers. I have no pets. Well, I had better close with asking a question: Who trembled before Paul? I remain as ever, Your friend, BAVIER, LOUISIANA. MOLIE SHILL.

Mr. Editor: Another Louisiana girl standing with reluctant feet, where the brook and river meet, is anxious to join the little folks. This is my second attempt to join your charming circle; but, unfortunately for me, the dreadful waste-basket has reaped the harvest of the unworthy heretofore. My father takes the old CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and we all are very much pleased with it. Come, cousins, it is not evening yet; let's take a walk and watch the glorious sunset. I will close for fear this letter will reach the dreadful waste-basket.

JANIE K. SANDERS, COLLINGSBURG, LOUISIANA.

Mr. Editor: I have never seen a letter from Gainesville boys or girls in your paper, so I thought I would write one. I am nearly ten years old, and study reading, geography, history, grammar, spelling, and dictionary. I enjoy reading the letters from children in your paper, and want to answer Flora Seller's question: The greatest miracle Christ ever performed, was changing water to wine. I will close by asking, Who built the ivory house? Your little friend,

GAINESVILLE, ALABAMA. READ FULTON.

Mr. Editor: I am a little boy eleven years old. Mamma calls me her "valentine" because I was born on the fourteenth of February. My papa is a farmer, and also practicing physician. I love to help cultivate the garden, which is very nice. I will close by asking a question in the Bible: Who, when a babe, was hid in the ark among the bull-rushes on the river bank? Your little friend, EARL O. STENCE, UTICA, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. Editor: As I have not seen a letter from this place, I thought I would write one. I am a small boy. I go to school every day. My teacher's name is Prof. Kirkman. He is a good man. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday, and get a lesson. We have a good pastor here, and everybody likes him. His name is Rev. W. W. Hurst. I like him ever so much. Please put this in your good paper. I read it every time I get a chance. Everybody has the blues; they are afraid of the water. I remain, Yours respectfully, ANQUELA, MISSISSIPPI. D. P. M.

The Little Hero.

One of the pathless little stories which John B. Gough used to tell with thrilling effect, should teach happy, well-ordered little children to be grateful for the good things God gives them. The craver went one day with a friend away up to a small garret room. A feeble voice said, "Come in, and they went in."

There was no light, but as soon as their eyes were dilated to the gloom, they saw, lying on a heap of cushions and shavings, a tiny, young-looking man, pale, but with a singularly sweet face. They asked the boy, "What are you doing there?" "I'm hiding," said the child, "I'm hiding."

The child showed his white delicate arms covered with bruises and swollen. "Who was it that beat you like that?" "I don't know," said the child, "I don't know." "What for?" "Poor father got drunk and beat me because I wouldn't steal." "Did you ever steal?" "Yes, sir, I was a thief once." "Then why don't you steal now?" "Because I went to the ragged school, and they taught me, 'Thou shalt not steal,' and told me God in heaven. I will not steal, sir, if my father likes me."

Mr. Gough's friend said, "I don't know what to do with you. Here is a shilling. I will see what I can do for you." The boy looked at it a moment, and then said, "But, please sir, wouldn't you like to see my little hymn?" "They thought it strange that, lying there without food, without fire, bruised and beaten, he could sing a hymn. How could he sing the Lord's song in a strange land? But they said, 'Yes, we will hear you.'"

And then, in a sweet, low voice, the child sang:

Gentle Jesus, meek and mild, Look upon a little child; Pity me, I pray thee, Suffer me to come to thee.

Fain would I to thee be brought, Gentle Lord, forbid it not; In the kingdom of thy grace, Once I have been a thief and a sinner.

"That's my little hymn; good-by!" The gentleman went away in the morning, mounted the stairs, knocked at the door, no answer; opened it, and went in. The shilling lay on the floor, and there, too, lay the boy, with a grave smile on his face as if he mused the best of it; and so he had—long was dead. In the night he had gone home.

The Finest Mechanism.

A celebrated surgeon once said that he never stood in the presence of a body in the dissecting room without a feeling of awe and reverence, and well may every one do so, for the wonderful mechanism of the human body is such a thing that it is almost impossible to believe that it is the work of a mortal hand. The human body is a wonderful machine, and its mechanism is such that it is almost impossible to believe that it is the work of a mortal hand.

When this piece of mechanism gets out of repair, what is the best method to restore it to its former condition? Why is it that the majority of people are not content to take Nature's simple plan and follow it? Let us see what that plan is.

The blood is the life of the body, and it is the most important part of the mechanism. It is the blood that carries the food and oxygen to the various parts of the body, and it is the blood that carries the waste products of the body out of the system. If the blood is impure, the body will be diseased, and if the blood is pure, the body will be healthy.

Household.

MISTRESS WORK AND MAID WORK.—The servant girl of this age has too large a share of consideration and importance, mostly more than in the past, when women understood housekeeping and ordered their households according to their own ideas of government. They were not subservient to the will of their servants, because they understood practically, their own position and duties as well as those of the servant, and in the conscious dignity and power of knowledge the inferior class was controlled. The influence of mind over matter is such that its potency as a governing factor should not be ignored. An inferior class need not enslave one of higher intellect, if that intellect is exerted in opposition. The higher intellect of American housewives has been overawed long enough; it is a privilege and a duty to regain the ascendancy and disenthral themselves from the oppression of domestic slaves. This bondage is not the result of weakness of intellect, or inability for executive duties, but most often through inaction and want of responsibility. Aggression must be met bravely; resistance to be efficient, must be occasional or spasmodic, but continued and earnest. Such resistance can secure the supremacy which our noble women ought to maintain in their households.

House making is, particularly woman's province, as soon as women realize the nobility of that vocation and arouse themselves from the lethargy of inaction, the first step is a reformation of home government is taken. A further advance is made, and the reformation fairly inaugurated, when they begin to inquire, "What is woman's work?" and determine to fit themselves for its performance. With the characteristic persistence of every true woman, they will apply themselves to learning and performing the duties of their station; succeeding generations will then attest the superiority of woman over the inferior class that forms a part of their households.

Some will claim that the women of to-day are more frail and delicate than those of preceding generations, and limited therefore physically for the manual labor pertaining to housekeeping. This may be true, but the object of this investigation is not to consider woman's physical defects, nor to bring about the imposition of the servants' work upon the mistress. It is rather desired to show that the duties of each position are positive and distinct, and that it rests with the mistress, as the chief executive of a domestic government, to divide her responsibilities with regard to the two provinces. This discrimination will be of great value in securing efficient and agreeable service from those physically able to endure labor.

This physical ability in the servant and the want of it in the mistress often become a puzzle to the latter, and a source of irritation to the former. It is a formidable barrier, but should not give the servants the supremacy in a home, nor need they be unreasonably exalted on account of it. Were it the chief requisite then a brick mason, or a carpenter, with superior physical powers, to make an admirable cook or waiting boy. No physical strength must be added to woman's purposes, and that through the influence of mind and training. How this influence is to be gained should be woman's study; it is an art more desirable for her purposes in organizing her household than the study of any other art. It is a study which is constantly increasing, and which is constantly increasing, and which is constantly increasing.

The HOME AND THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.—A family interest in books is itself an educating influence, and will contract most judicious selection of library books, acting both as a stimulus and force as a restraining power, teaching patience in waiting for the best, and the cultivation of best literature. Fiction is well known to be the department which gives greatest interest to the public and it is undoubtedly used to excess, a fault which might be counteracted in a measure by home discussion and reading in common.

Many ladies have yielded to the influence of thought to such an unfortunate extent that they can not concentrate their attention upon history or biography, or, in fact, anything but stories. If all members of the family united in choosing their literature, stronger food probably would be required. Force of logic in reading is enjoyed immensely, it is likely to be strong chain, but it can be broken by sympathetic narration. If the son says to the daughter, "My dear sister, here is a book which you would appreciate as well as one of Mrs. Holmes' novels. It is 'Boots and Saddles,' by Mrs. Elizabeth Easton, which I have enjoyed immensely. It is likely to be the story in a good-natured desire to please her brother, would require a taste for light travels, which she might extend by a voyage in 'The north Sunbeam' and a trip to the north pole on the Greeley expedition.

The reading public, like the Athenians, are ever on the look out for "some new thing," and instead of following the example of that sensible individual, who like Emerson, never reads a book until it is a year old, has an all absorbing taste for new literature. "My mother would like one of the new novels," demands the foolish boy of the library, as if the only necessary characteristic of a book was novelty. If the directors have chosen wisely, not much harm, except a waste of time, would be derived from this absurdly common method of choosing a book, but a previous family discussion would result in a wiser method of choosing the books, and the library would be spared much impotency. A winter evening could be spent by the family around the evening lamp studying the catalogue, and awaiting each other in the selection of the most interesting and valuable books.—Grace W. Soper, in Good Housekeeping.

General Conference Proceedings.

SESSION OF 1886.

FIRST DAY—RICHMOND, VA., MAY 5, 1886.

The Tenth Quadrennial Session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, began its session in Centenary Church, corner Grace and Fifth streets, at half-past nine o'clock this morning.

At the appointed hour Bishop McTearle called the Conference to order, and announced hymn 261, beginning:

"High on his everlasting throne,
The King of saints his work surveys."

Bishop John C. Keener read from the Scriptures the seventy-second Psalm, which was followed by prayer by Bishop Granberry.

Bishop A. W. Wilson read the first chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

Bishop R. K. Hargrove announced hymn 901:

"Try us, O God; and search the ground
Of every sinistral heart."

At the conclusion of the singing of the hymn, Dr. J. B. McFerrin led in prayer.

Bishop McTearle (presiding): There are forty Annual Conferences represented here. The official return of delegates has been made, and the roll has also been made out from the face of these returns. The credentials are here. If in any case any name be omitted, I request the secretary of the last General Conference to come forward, if he please, and call the roll by Conferences, first the clerical and next the lay delegates.

The Rev. Dr. J. S. Martin, secretary of the last General Conference, came forward to the secretary's desk, and called the roll, as requested.

Bishop McTearle (presiding): It appears, upon the calling of the roll, that some of those elected as delegates are not present. The secretary will please now call the Conferences, and if there be in any Conference a reserve delegate present to take the place of the absent principal, let his name now be announced and entered on the roll.

Dr. Crawford: Dr. Mitchell wants to set himself right before the Conference. It has been a lifelong struggle with him, he says.

Dr. Mitchell: My first name, Mr. President, is rather a peculiar one, and I have been trying a great while to have it written and pronounced as my father did before me. In Dr. Sumner's time I was never permitted to have my own way in this matter. He would have it his own way. He would have it Archelaus, instead of pronouncing it Archelaus.

Dr. A. S. Andrews: We have known Dr. Mitchell by that name a long time among us. We have known him as classical so long that we would like to have him die classical.

Dr. Mitchell: I had nothing to do with the naming, but I think my father pretty good authority, and I want to follow his example. (Laughter.)

Bishop McTearle (presiding): Brethren, you have now ascertained your membership, you have ascertained that there is a quorum present. It is now your business to proceed to the election of permanent officers.

Dr. W. P. Harrison and Dr. John S. Martin were nominated for secretary. Dr. John D. Vincell was also nominated, but declined.

Dr. Edwards of Virginia: I move that a committee be appointed to report the names of permanent officers of this Conference; and my motion is seconded.

Bishop McTearle: I suppose Dr. Edwards' motion may be regarded in the light of a substitute for the nominations made. Will the Conference adopt the substitute?

The substitute was rejected.

Upon a vote being taken, Dr. Martin received a majority of the votes, and was declared elected.

Dr. Paul Whitehead, of the Virginia Conference: I have prepared some Rules of Order for the government of this body, which I will now read. I will pass them to the secretary, so that he may read them. These rules relate to the standing committees.

Bishop McTearle: You may read the paper yourself, Doctor.

Dr. Whitehead then read as follows:

A paper proposing rules for the government of the Conference was presented by Dr. Whitehead, and on motion of Dr. Morton it was referred to a committee of five, with instructions to report to-morrow, and that it be printed for use of the members.

On motion of Dr. Morton, it was ordered that the rules of the last General Conference be the rules of this session until the report of the committee shall have been received and acted upon.

A. G. Haygood moved to reconsider the motion by which the paper offered by Dr. Whitehead was referred to a special committee, and that so much of the paper as relates to standing committees be now considered, and the motion to reconsider prevailed.

Bishop McTearle: What action will the Conference take upon this paper?

Dr. Morton, of the Louisville Conference: I move that the paper be laid over until to-morrow, and printed in the Daily Advocate.

Mr. Mason, of the Alabama Conference: As a substitute for that motion, I move that a special committee be appointed, and that this paper be referred to that committee.

Dr. H. F. Johnson, of Mississippi: There is no rule providing for the laying of a paper over. I think we had better take action upon it at once.

Bishop McTearle: The question then will be upon the substitute of the gentleman from Alabama, which enlarges the scope of the paper.

Judge Tucker, of Florida: I want to suggest one thing. The rules, I think, should be printed and laid upon the tables of the members, so that they may be read and acted upon intelligently.

Bishop McTearle: The motion is on the substitute to leave this matter to a special committee, and that now is the original motion. If you wish to amend that motion by requiring that it be printed, it is now possible to make the amendment.

Judge Tucker: I make that motion.

Mr. Mason: I accept the amendment.

Bishop McTearle: The motion now stands that this paper be referred to a special committee, who shall report on it to-morrow, and in the meantime it will be published in the Daily Advocate.

Mr. Pritchett, of Missouri: Do we understand that the whole subject is covered by that motion? I think the whole subject should be referred to the committee, and not merely that paper.

Bishop McTearle: I think that paper covers the whole subject. (Laughter.)

The motion was then adopted.

Bishop McTearle: How large shall that committee be?

Mr. Mason: I suggest that the committee be composed of nine or seven members.

Rev. E. E. Hoss, of the Holston Conference: I move that the committee be composed of three members, and that they be appointed by the Chair.

The Conference finally decided to place five members upon this committee.

Bishop McTearle: I will announce that committee before the adjournment of the General Conference.

Dr. Whitehead: I move, temporarily, that the Conference meet at nine o'clock in the morning, or at half-past nine o'clock, if that shall be more agreeable to the members of the Conference.

Several delegates called for an adjournment to nine o'clock, and that seeming to be the sense of the Conference, the motion was put and carried to adjourn to nine o'clock.

Dr. Mahon, of the Memphis Conference: I move that the General Conference be governed by the rules of the last session until the Committee on Rules shall have reported.

The motion was adopted.

P. A. Peterson moved that the following standing committee be appointed, to consist of one member from each Annual Conference:

1. Episcopacy.
2. Itinerancy.
3. Revision.
4. Publishing Interests.
5. Education.
6. Missions.
7. Church Extension and Colportage.
8. Sunday-schools.
9. Boundaries of Annual Conferences.
10. Appeals of Travelling Preachers.

David Morton moved to amend by appointing a committee each on Church Extension and Colportage, instead of one committee for both subjects.

The amendment prevailed, and the motion of P. A. Peterson, as amended, was adopted.

On motion of Paul Whitehead, the remainder of the paper on rules, offered by himself, was now referred to the special committee.

Bishop McTearle: I would ask Dr. Peterson if the committees named in his paper are not the same as those provided for by Dr. Whitehead's paper?

Dr. Peterson: They are, with one exception.

Bishop McTearle: The Conference can hardly be called upon to act upon the paper, then, without referring it to a committee.

Dr. Peterson: I am not at all concerned in this matter, except that I think it is important that we should know the men we are to have on these committees. The elections will be made this afternoon, I presume, and the Conference will name the respective committees. If it meet the approval of the Conference, I might withdraw this paper, and move that the committee provided for in the paper offered by Dr. Whitehead be acted on now.

Bishop McTearle: The chair does not see how he can entertain that motion without a reconsideration of the previous vote.

Dr. Haygood: I move a reconsideration of the motion by which the paper of Dr. Whitehead was referred to a committee.

Dr. Whitehead: I hope that that will not be done. Why can not the delegates meet and select the members of their standing committees, subject of course to any alterations that may be made hereafter. They all know what they are.

Bishop McTearle: The motion is, Will you reconsider the vote referring Dr. Whitehead's paper to a special committee, with a view of taking out that part of it which refers to the organization of standing committees.

Dr. Peterson: There is no difference at all between my paper and that of Dr. Whitehead, and I would like to have that part of Dr. Whitehead's paper referring to the organization of standing committees acted on now.

The vote to reconsider was then put by the Bishop, and the Conference reconsidered its action.

Bishop McTearle: The paper of Dr. Whitehead is now before us, and is open for amendment.

Dr. Peterson: I now offer this paper as a substitute for that portion of Dr. Whitehead's paper in relation to standing committees.

Dr. Whitehead: It can not be a substitute for that part of my paper, because, according to the gentleman's own statement, it is the same thing.

Dr. N. H. D. Wilson, of the North Carolina Conference: I move that the committees of the last General Conference be the committees of this Conference for the present. I move that so much of that report as refers to the list of standing committees be adopted.

Dr. Peterson: I will call for the reading of my paper.

The secretary read Dr. Peterson's paper for the information of the Conference, which, after some amendment, was adopted as printed above.

The balance of Dr. Whitehead's paper was referred to the Standing Committee of Five.

On motion of Dr. Edwards, the presiding elder of the Richmond district and the pastors of the churches in Richmond, including Manchester, were appointed a Committee on Public Worship during the session.

On motion of Dr. John D. Vincell, the Conference was authorized to appoint three pages to serve during the Conference.

Dr. Peterson: I desire to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a special committee of five be appointed to consider each of the following matters, viz: Bible cause, temperance, fraternal fellowship, and introductions.

Dr. A. C. Blecksoe, pastor of Broad Street Church, Richmond, delivered the following Address of Welcome:

I have the privilege of detaining this Conference now, for a few moments, on behalf of Committee on Entertainment, that I may have the privilege of extending to this body a few words of brotherly greeting and heart-felt welcome. I feel that I am acquainted with you; some of you I know by name and personally, others by reputation. As a committee, however, we feel that we know all of you. We have had, for a long time, your names under our earnest consideration. We have read them over; we have tried to get them straight, and have tried to pronounce them correctly. We have written and rewritten them, and we are as familiar with them as we are with the alphabet of our mother tongue. We have been in correspondence with many of you as regards your own personal comfort and accommodation during this session, and especially with some of you in regard to accommodations for your wives.

I would say here, Mr. President, that we regard it as a sort of compliment that so many of the wives of the delegates of this Conference have determined to come with their husbands. I think on that ground, sir, we shall have a grander and more pleasant session. God bless those wives! Somebody has said (who knows, I suppose) that while man is the head, the woman is the neck that moves the head about. (Laughter.)

I am glad, sir, to welcome those wives to our midst, and I am glad to know that some of our Bishops have brought their wives too (laughter); and I suppose some of our brethren who expect to be Bishops in the near future have brought theirs. (Renewed laughter.)

We welcome these men of God and these women who are co-laborers with us in our great work. For the first time, sir, in the history of our church since its organization this is the first occasion of the assembling of a General Conference in our city, and, with the exception of one, within the bounds of our State. We have looked forward as a city to the coming of this body which has now assembled. And just here I must be pardoned if I digress a little from the order in this matter, if I will attention to the fact that there is a tie binding the friends and homes of Richmond to the different sections of the State which are here represented which has been strengthened by the surviving members, the grand achievements, and the hallowed associations of the past. There is an interest in connection with those having gathered here in the capital of our State. We remember, sir, that in the dark days that tried our hearts your fathers and your sons and your grandfathers and your grandsons came here and we welcomed them, and we four long, weary years stood as a wall of defense around our homes and around this beleaguered capital. Many of them fell in the field and died upon our soil. Virginia still nurses their slights and just in our lovely Oakes and in Hallowood, where you grant monuments lift their form. There many of the brave sleep the sleep of death. I am not surprised, therefore, Mr. President, at a gathering of this sort in this part of our territory, and especially that it should be a matter of great interest to the people of Richmond, and that we should welcome you to our hearts and to our homes with a warm and cordial welcome.

We have looked forward with great interest to this occasion; we have felt that the assembling together of this body of representatives from different parts of our field of labor, coming here to legislate with reference to the interest of the church—coming here to devise measures, formulate plans, and project forces looking to the development of our work, and to the accomplishment of the grand mission of our church. We have felt that while you are accomplishing this, your presence and your deliberations will also be a blessing to us as a church here. We believe, sir, that from this focal center, where there is gathered the experience, and the wisdom, and the piety, and this conversation, and the faith of these men of God, and under the inspiration of your action we shall be permitted to light our torches anew. We may gather new strength and courage for our work from your deliberations, and go forward with renewed strength to the accomplishment of our mission. I rejoice with you here to-day that our beloved church has reached so high toward the mountain-tops of sublime achievement. I see her form to-day as the celestial light and glory of heaven falls upon her, while there is spread out before her far extended plains and yet loftier mountains of the promised land, inviting us to more heroic endeavors and grander achievements and victories than have yet been won. With a proper realization, then, of your mission, with this conception of the work of our beloved church, it affords me unexpressed delight, dear brethren, on behalf of our committee, and on behalf of the people of Richmond, Manchester, and I might say, of our entire State, to bid you a hearty welcome. Thrice welcome; welcome to our homes; welcome to the hospitality of our city; welcome because of the Master whom you serve, and welcome because of the church to which you are devoted. And now, Mr. President, you will allow me in this connection to refer to the fact that as I stand here in this presence I am reminded that some of our chief pastors who were accustomed to meet with us are no longer here. During the last quadrennium four of our Bishops have finished their work and gone to their reward. They are not here with you to resolve these words of brotherly greeting and of heart-felt welcome, but we feel that they yet belong to us. They are here in spirit. Their experience, and their wisdom, and their faith, and their consecration are a part of our hereditary inheritance, and their glorified spirits are part of that incorruptible treasure which we are from year to year laying now number 10,500, with 73,000 teachers and 558,205 scholars. This is a gain for four years of 1,250 schools, 10,500 teachers, and 558,205 scholars, making a grand total of teachers and scholars of 631,211. Conversions in the Sunday-schools have been more numerous than ever before.

The circulation of our Sabbath-school periodicals has kept pace with the increase in scholars. The Monthly issue of the Advocate has 570,000 copies—over 2,000,000. In this we compete successfully with the first publishing houses in the land. All foreign publications have been pretty well displaced in our Sabbath-schools by our own literature. The relations between the church and the Sunday-school are closer and more satisfactory than at any previous period in our history. The pastor is recognized in his office, and his influence thereby greatly increased. The church will more and more realize its paternal relation to every child of the race as to one born under the broad shelter of redeeming love. It will value the precious charge given into its hands for impress and nurture. The mind of our people has fully turned this way, and facilities for instructing youth on the Sabbath have greatly multiplied. Books, magazines, and weekly papers used in our schools, without stint are supplied by our Publishing House. In these a constant improvement for the past four years leaves scarcely anything further to be desired.

The effect of this Eden-like occupation in turn fills the home of God with youthful inspiration, and prepares for less lulling field of labor. As in a family well ordered the children largely contribute to the support of the household, so the church turns to its work from the Sunday-school with daily increase of hope and cheer.

We refer you to the report of the Sabbath-school Board for a full statement of the present advanced state of this interest.

Our Publishing House has exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the General Conference of 1878, in relieving itself of debt and in advancing upon all the lines of work committed to its Publishing Committee, agent, and business manager. Since the last General Conference the amount of bonds retired are some $111,500; and which leaves the sum of $85,500 in four per cent. bonds, as its present outstanding debt. Besides this creditable result, the House has again entered fairly upon its proper work of publishing new books of standard quality and value. It is to be hoped that during the next two years its increased sales will enable the agent to provide for the last cent due upon old obligations, and to start upon the novel career of owing no man anything. Already the fact that no new debts have been incurred during the past eight years is the harbinger of this financial achievement. We recommend that as soon as its debts are paid, the publications of the house be brought down to rates that shall place them within easy reach of our people; and that it furnish an adequate supply of literature for missionary work.

Our Advocate has done good service in furnishing their several centers with information and news matter to the conferences which support them. They have been prompt to satisfy the local needs which rise from day to day; to meet opponents; to define doctrine; to record the triumphs of departing saints; to give attention to individual wrongs; to commend; to magnify the personal and corporate life, and the growth of noble spirits that make up the household of faith.

Our Periodicals at Nashville—The Christian Advocate, the Sunday-School Visitor, the Magazine, and the Woman's Missionary Advocate, and the Advocate of Missions have all prospered, and have a greater prospect than at any previous time in their history. They have steadily increased their lists of subscribers by the thousand, until their circulation now compares favorably with that of religious papers throughout the more populous centers of the North.

The Quarterly Review has been sustained by the faithful labor of its editor under trying and discouraging circumstances. It deserves a hearty recognition and support. We commend it to your special attention. From its beginning our church has felt the importance of a Quarterly Review. The best talent at its command has been employed in this difficult department of literature. Probably there never was a time when the church could so ill afford the expense with a representative in the highest regions of cultivated thought.

The diffusion of the Holy Scriptures by the American and the English Bible Societies has necessitated a parallel activity in all aggressive movement upon the world. The sea steamer, the telegraph, the locomotive, must now be employed in the evangelizing of the world. The Wesleyan parish, new forces of industry and discovery hourly come into play to aid the spread of the gospel of the Son of God. And wherever this gospel is preached there the sublime message of the Holy Ghost is calling myriads into the divine Sonship. So many distinct centers of Jesus' power and love must soon.

And see the Kingdoms on a blaze." As the fruit of righteousness is sown to peace, we trust, with a grateful attitude to the great Head of the church, that in all our borders there is peace—no dissensions, no angry contentions for place, no sulen notes of discord either among people or preachers, in respect either to doctrine or discipline. All are resolved to follow the pillar of cloud that has led us through war and want, through evil report and good report.

We gratefully note an increased spiritual activity in all the Protestant churches. That they have entered upon methods of revival and have employed evangelists after the manner of our own church, and seem ready to adopt the system which has been approved among us by the habits of unnumbered years. Whatever Methodism is worth and revivals are worth, with its evangelist moving by yearly appointments upon miles of narrow land, wider territory has been the chief instrumentality, under God, for the upbuilding of our church, and the conversion of tens of thousands of souls.

With the several branches of Protestant Christianity we are in full accord. The great work of spreading scriptural truth among all nations is the outgrowth of our divine harmony. "Through the reality of history in time presents to our view whole nations who for centuries have lived a merely animal and sensual life, over whom no spirit hovers—nations that for centuries remain in a state of spiritual petrification without a single trace of living principle; we nevertheless cherish and hold the faith that the time will come when the word of the Lord shall be accomplished, and when baptism and Christianity shall be brought to all nations." (Bishop Martineau.)

We can not pass from this point of Christian sympathy without calling attention to the Temperance Movement in the arrest of drunkenness. In many of the States the "local option" law is impressing the stronghold of Satan; and in a country largely governed by this by the force of public opinion, it would seem that the day can not be far off when the laws of the land shall effectually protect society against men who, for purposes of gain, are ready to destroy the happiness, even the life, of fellow-beings. We congratulate the church upon the growth of a healthy public sentiment for temperance reform, and that the legal suppression of the liquor traffic throughout the South has been so far effected by the friends of temperance outside of all complicity with party politics.

We have lived to see the divinely ordered Institution of Marriage seriously endangered by the readiness with which divorces are granted by many of the State Legislatures and courts; so that a very large per cent. of marriages are being annulled annually. The true marriage relation strengthens the State and the church. "It has been ordained as one of the redemptive forces for the elevation of man. It sets forth a yet higher unity with another—the mystery of unity between Christ and his church. It has come down to us through the dissolers of the folk, bringing with it the innocence and atmosphere of Eden; the strength of its covenant, the purity of its joys, and the perennial fountain of its bliss." All should be done that can be to sustain the primal institution of God, and to avert the low estimate of it now taking possession of the public mind. Action is advisable looking to the removal of the already taken by some of the churches—the forbidding the celebration of the rite of matrimony by their ministers between parties where either have previously been divorced, excepting for the one scriptural cause, as in Matt. v. 32, and xix.

More and more is the glory of the dispensation of the Holy Spirit being realized by the church of God. He moves freely among the nations, independently of all limitations, whether material or spiritual; and both by his grace and by the church, he is gradually, yet surely, subduing the world to the kingdom of the Son. It is in the order of his purpose that we found ourselves forty-two years ago apart from our brethren, and set up as a distinct branch of American Methodism. By this we were prepared for the event which occurred "fourteen years after," and out of which came firmer in all the resources of ecclesiastical strength than we were before. So prepared were we for the exigency that the strife of States only gave us a surer place in the public mind and a more perfect access to the families and individuals in the range of our pastorate. We do not, therefore, wish to lose sight of guidance which has brought us into so wealthy a place. Our heritage has increased steadily from those dark days until the present, and proportionately has equalled the advance of every Protestant branch of the church in this country or in Europe. Let us be true to ourselves, and the Lord will take care of us. He that has been with us will be with us to the end.

The report from the vote of the Annual Conference upon the proposed change of name is as follows: Yes, 91; No, 12.

It is to be hoped that a corporate name, which was first introduced by Bishop Paine and adopted into the report of the Committee of Nine in the General Conference of 1874, which was further recognized in the convention at Louisville in 1875, and in the formation of the first Southern General Conference in 1876; which is the title by which all our lawsuits for the recovery of property was known, and in favor of which the decree of the Supreme Court has been; the title and name by which we were known through the annals and deep experience of the war; the name which was re-attested by a constitutional vote of the church in 1875, and by which the status of one church was recognized by the Cape May Commission in 1876, and about which our whole Methodist and foreign missionary work has clustered, will be accepted, fully and forever, as the primal and final designation of our beloved Methodism.

The Ecumenical Conference which met in London in September, 1881, determined, at the suggestion of Bishop Simpson, through its Business Committee, to call for another Ecumenical Conference, to meet in America in 1887—as we learn through the journals of that Conference. The last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church (1884) took extensive action looking to such a Conference. In 1881, 1884, and 1887, or say one every three years, and doubtless looks in the direction of a Pan-Methodist Council, which in its moral weight would present an outlook to the General Conference, and a Conference of elected representatives of the churches of the world.

Suffer, dear brethren, a word of suggestion that you maintain intact, as far as possible, your present discipline, embodying as it does the legislative wisdom of those who have preceded us. The order, usage and laws at present guiding us were not struck out at a single heat, but are the result of manifold experience and many distinct conferences during the past hundred years. That from time to time there may arise a necessity for modification of method, in order to insure greater efficiency in the church, is altogether certain; and that new powers are to be thrown around us by well argued from the continual changes observable in the arts and activities of Satan; but, in the main, the obstacles to be overcome, and the temptations to which we are subjected, are those which were encountered by the generations of our people who have gone before.

On the whole, the ministry was never more self-deceiving, more patient of poverty, or truer to the church, and (we may add) never more efficient in their work than during the past four years; and never has the Holy Spirit shown its multitudes by greater displays of converting power. The church was never heartier in its enjoyment of the means of grace. Comparing ourselves among ourselves we have reason to be satisfied that, the broad road, the way through pressing life to the eternal death, the impression we are making upon it is unsatisfactory, and seems fearfully inadequate to the accomplishment of the work of the Master.

The duty of sustaining his cause, of devoting every thing to his service, is impressed upon every believer at the pledges of that sacred hour are by many remembered and redeemed during a whole life after. But by very many those joyful vows are languidly performed. The daily oblation is not presented to him, who, "though rich, became poor that we through his poverty might be rich."

thing is now in confusion, and we do not know when we will be through with making up our reports, and we would like to have a little more time.

Bishop McTear: What time? To-morrow!

The motion to adjourn to four o'clock was carried.

The Conference then adjourned.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Conference met at four o'clock, pursuant to adjournment. Bishop McTear presiding, and the business of selecting the various committees was proceeded with and disposed of with becoming dispatch.

During the session an irregular, but somewhat interesting discussion arose as to whether laymen should settle appeals, and several delegates expressed decided convictions on both sides of the question. The debate, however, was not decisive, as no question was pending, and the talk passed into an airy chaos. The standing committees were finally selected.

The General Rules for the government of the Conference proposed by the Special Committee are as follows:

Rule 1. The regular hour of meeting shall be nine A. M. and of adjournment half past one P. M. A majority of those present and voting may extend the session temporarily; but the hour of meeting shall not be changed unless by a vote of two thirds.

2. The presiding officer shall cause the session to be opened promptly with divine service, and after reading and approval of the journal the following shall be the order of business:

(1) Report of standing committees.

(2) Reports of special committees.

(3) Appeals, memorials and petitions.

(4) Resolutions. (The call for resolutions shall be made by Conference.)

(5) No new business shall be introduced after the tenth day, except by a vote of two thirds.

3. Special committees ordered by the Conference shall be appointed by the Bishop presiding at the time. A member may decline to serve on more than one such committee.

4. When the report of a committee is read, the presiding officer shall call the committee to order, and the call of the committee shall have the right to close the discussion, and the call of the previous question shall be subject to that right.

5. The presiding officer shall decide all questions of order, subject to an appeal to the Conference. When such appeal is taken the presiding officer shall be allowed to state the ground of his appeal and the chair the ground of his decision. In each case such statement shall not exceed five minutes. Otherwise than this the vote shall be taken without debate.

6. Every resolution, substitute, or amendment shall be in writing, signed by at least two members.

7. All papers designed to go before committees shall be referred to the committee named by the mover, unless objection be made.

8. All papers proposing changes of the Discipline, whether they be reports of committees or original propositions offered under Rule 2 or otherwise, shall specify by chapter, paragraph, section, or page the passage to be affected, and also recite the language as it will be amended.

9. A report or other paper shall be considered in possession of the Conference when it has been presented and read by the secretary, but any such paper or resolution may be withdrawn at any time before action thereon by the Conference.

10. In the disposition of matter before the Conference, the following motions and propositions shall have precedence in the order in which they are named:

(1) Unfinished postponement. (This not debatable.)

(2) Postponement to a given time.

(3) Laying on the table. (This motion not debatable.)

(4) The previous question.

(5) Reference to a committee.

(6) Substitute.

(7) Amendment.

11. Every member desiring to speak shall arise from his seat and respectfully address the president, and shall not be interrupted when speaking unless called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case Rule 5 shall not apply. By permission of the Conference a member may explain if he claims to be misrepresented.

12. No member shall speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than fifteen minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall any member speak more than once until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

13. No member, unless unavoidably hindered by sickness or otherwise, from being present, shall absent himself from the sessions of the Conference without leave.

14. Every member who is within the bar when a question is put shall vote unless the Conference excuse him; and no member shall be allowed to vote who is not within the bar when the Conference is called to order, except where he has been necessarily absent.

15. Whenever a member shall move the "previous question," the chair shall demand, "Shall the question now be put?" and the vote on such motion shall be taken without debate. If a majority of the members voting sustain the call, the president shall put the question then pending without debate, except as provided in Rule 4.

16. A motion to reconsider may be made by any member who voted with the majority for the previous question.

17. On the demand of one-fifth of the members of the General Conference, a recorded vote by yeas and nays shall be taken.

18. A calendar shall be kept by the secretary of the reports from committees and of orders of the day, which shall be listed according to the time of their presentation or fixing; and they shall be considered by the Conference in order of the calendar, unless the Conference by a vote of the majority order otherwise.

19. A motion to adjourn made by a member entitled to the floor shall always be in order, and shall be taken without debate.

20. No resolution altering or rescinding any rule of discipline shall be adopted until it shall have been at least one day in the possession of the Conference.

21. These rules shall not be changed or suspended except by a majority of two-thirds of all the members present and voting.

JOURNAL OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

REV. W. L. O. HUNNICUTT.

THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1886.

Rev. W. C. Black telegraphs from Richmond the four Bishops elected, as follows: C. B. Galloway, Mississippi Conference; W. W. Duncan, South Carolina Conference; E. R. Hendricks, Missouri Conference, and J. S. Key, South Georgia Conference.

Let the church remember that Christ died to save the chief of sinners, and that real strength is developed in the effort to reach and bring this class to the cross.

Bro. H. D. Kimball has returned from Natchez, where he had been called by Bro. J. V. Penn to assist in a revival. A glorious time and forty conversions is Bro. Kimball's report.

Brother, you are paying less to the support of the gospel this year than you did last; and we want you to keep an account of how much you lose in health, stock and your crop by economizing at this point.

The time to make an advance move on any line of church work is when you discover the necessity. To hold back is to discredit the wisdom of the Holy Spirit in revealing to you what is needed to make your work a success.

There is a layman in the Mississippi Conference who is under a vow to increase his assessment for the support of the ministry five dollars every year. This year he pays twenty-five dollars, and says the Lord has so blessed him that it is easier to pay this than it was to pay five dollars five years ago. Yet there are those who will pay no more this year than they did last, though they confess the Lord is increasing their wealth. This tree will be cut down to make room for a better before many years.

"The whole life of a genuine Christian goes on continually in prayer. For, though he is not constantly moving his lips or multiplying words, yet the heart, like the artery and heart in the body, goes on beating unceasingly with sighs, and the more that blows, vexation, and distress become severely afflictive and urgent, with so much the greater force does this sighing and praying proceed, even orally, so that you can as little find a Christian without prayer as a living man without a pulse, which stands never still, though the man is sleeping or doing something else, and he is not aware of it."—Luther.

The Southwestern Christian Advocate, under its present editorial management has been a consistent and persistent friend of dividing or organizing Conferences on the color line. In the Louisiana Conference, the Rev. Dr. A. E. P. Albert, a young colored man of education and ability, has been strongly opposed to that principle and policy. In a recent issue of the Southwestern, however, he candidly announces a change of opinion and makes aggressive defense of his new position. Out of these conferences composed almost entirely of colored members the white men must go. From the paragraphs quoted below, we judge that certain white leaders are to be retired. Ministerial inequality is not to be tolerated any longer. This is not our fight, but we feel assured that this movement bodes no good. The policy is right no doubt, but the evident motives that inspire it are very questionable. Dr. Albert concludes his "new departure" as follows:

"All we ask is for ministerial equality. That the colored Conferences be left to govern themselves, without the interference of the overshadowing influence of a few white men, who never serve as pastors among us, but who are perpetually continued as presiding elders over first one district then the other. Our brethren smart under such a method. Colored men can have no influence whatever when connected with white Conferences, why should they be ruled by the few white men who happen to labor among them in the presiding eldership. During the last twenty years we have had white men that have served from district to district as presiding elder, but never in the pastorate. I do not believe the spirit of the church tolerates such transparent incapacities and reflection upon our worth and devotion."

Editorial Correspondence.

The business of the General Conference moves on apace. The committees are organized and diligently at work. Reports are beginning to come in and receive proper consideration. Suggested amendments of the Discipline thus far have met with scant favor. The familiar sound of "non-concurrence" is heard in almost every report of a committee. From present indications there will be very few changes in our disciplinary law, and none of great importance.

There has been much debate on this floor of the Conference, but mostly on matters of minor moment. Nearly two full days were spent in adopting rules of order for governing the body. The real work of legislation is done in the committee-rooms. It not infrequently occurs that the wisest counselors in the committees have little or nothing to say in the running debates of the Conference.

The Bishops are in good health and give promise of full work during another quadrennium. Bishop Wilson, whose long illness has caused so much prayerful anxiety in the church for two years or more, is greatly improved. He has his wonted power in the pulpit, and is able to do the full work of his high office.

The fraternal delegates from other Methodist bodies to this General Conference have arrived and will deliver their formal greetings this evening in Centenary Church. Rev. William Briggs, of the Methodist Church, of Canada, arrived yesterday. He is at present, and has been since 1878, the book steward of his church at Toronto, an office answering to our book agent. Mr. Briggs has managed the Publishing House of his church with great ability and increased its efficiency as an agent for the diffusion of sound Methodist literature. Rev. Dr. John Miley, of the Methodist Episcopal Church and professor in Drew Theological Seminary, arrived this morning. As an educator and the author of a scholarly, able work on the atonement, he is well known to American Methodism. His co-delegate, Gov. Foraker, of Ohio, will not be present, being detained at home by his duties as chief-executive of the State. The Legislature is in session and the governor's presence is constantly demanded.

The formal reception and addresses of the fraternal delegates, Dr. Miley, of the Methodist Episcopal Church and Rev. William Briggs, of the Methodist Church of Canada, will be remembered as a most delightful feature of this General Conference session. The address of Mr. Briggs, was unique in artistic conception, chaste and elegant in composition, and happy in delivery. I have rarely seen an audience more entirely satisfied with a public address. Dr. Miley followed with a strong speech full of fraternal affection and brilliant with fine points. The Doctor is not an orator, but a great scholar, and has quite a genius for terse, vigorous statement. He very appropriately discussed the relation of Methodist doctrine to the growth and success of the church. At the conclusion of these addresses there were loud calls for Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, of New York, who happened to be in the city, who ascended the platform and made a characteristic speech. His witty reference to his appearance in Richmond, after an effort of twenty-five years, brought down the house. His first attempt to reach the city was at the head of armed battalions, but his reception was warm; indeed, he said, "It was very hot." He is full of lyric poetry and quotes it voluminously and with admirable histrionic effect. His frequent and kind references to Dr. McFerrin, led the audience to call out "the old Doctor," who spoke in the happy, rare style of that best known man in Southern Methodism. Altogether the evening was delightfully spent, and will lead to more cordial, fraternal relations between the several branches of Methodism.

The Committee on Episcopacy have reported in favor of electing four new Bishops and the question occasioned a lengthy, animated debate. A large number preferred five, a small minority three. By an overwhelming majority the Conference adopted the Committee's report. Next Tuesday at eleven o'clock has been designated as the day and hour for the election. There is much speculation and prophesying as to the probable selections.

An important measure has passed which has been much discussed in church papers for several months—providing for the entertainment of the General Conference. The conviction has been growing that the body has become too large to be imposed upon the hospitality of any city within the bounds of the church, and that some other means ought to be provided. The plan agreed upon will secure an equalization of expense upon these several Annual Conferences and give timely relief to the small bodies of the far West.

Saturday will close the door of opportunity to all desiring to change the statute law of the church at this General Conference. According to the rules adopted for the governing of the body no memorials, resolutions, etc., proposing changes in the Discipline are to be received after the tenth day of the session.

From present indications the Conference will be in session about the usual time. But it is very evident that the business could be transacted in one half the time. There is so much useless discussion of minor points, of order, etc.

The announcements are made for preaching next Sunday. All the congregations of the city will be favored with good, wholesome Methodist prophesying. I go down to Goldsboro, N. C., to preach and spend the day with relatives.

MAY 13, 1886.

Ecclesiastical Comity.

At the recent session of the Louisiana Diocesan Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, By the Council of the Diocese of Louisiana, convened in St. Paul's Church, in the City of New Orleans, on this sixth of May, in the year of our Lord 1886. That the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America be and is hereby most respectfully, humbly and earnestly petitioned to instruct its Commission on Ecclesiastical Relations to abandon the passive policy heretofore followed in respect to those bodies of Christians generally recognized as "evangelical" and to send overtures in writing to the governing bodies of said several denominations, inviting them to conference on the matter of church unity—and further, that the Bishops of said communion be authorized and empowered to visit officially, where practicable, the sessions of such governing bodies for the like purpose.

That is rather a remarkable deliverance. Heretofore the Episcopalians have held themselves loftily aloof from other evangelical churches, only recognizing their existence to declaim against heresy and "schism," and deplore the influence of the "warring sects." That another spirit has possessed them, and a willingness to confer with these churches has been expressed, we have hope of a better, brighter day in our religious world. It is well, however, in examining the above resolution, to remember that no proper recognition of these churches, in their distinct ecclesiastical autonomy, is admitted. We can not, consistently with conscience and self-respect, confer with them without a precedent acknowledgment of our right and title to a distinct position as a branch of the church of Christ. It will be well for the cause of the Master when this movement shall ultimate in something practical. We shall look with eager interest to learn the fate of this resolution before the next Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Whether approved or rejected, the question is before the religious world, and that church must be seriously affected thereby.

Mr. William E. Dodge, Jr., of New York, gave a reception to the members and friends of the Evangelical Alliance recently. An account of the meeting in the New York Observer indicates a revival of interest in that worthy organization and its prospects for greater good. We like the idea of those biennial conferences. From the Observer's account of the reception, which we find in the Northern Christian Advocate, the following will be of general interest:

"The meeting was designed to unite the friends of evangelical work in all denominations of Christians, and to give new vigor and interest to their co-operative enterprises. There was no formal organization of the two hundred gentlemen from this and other cities, but Mr. Dodge gracefully welcomed his guests, and after an hour's friendly intercourse stated in a short speech the general aim of the meeting. He said that many had felt that the time was ripe for renewed activity on the part of the Alliance, and that a large and important work seemed to lie before it, in the near future. It was a body which afforded Christians an opportunity to co-operate with each other without sacrificing duty to their own denominations, or interfering with the work of others. The Alliance determined to begin a series of biennial conferences, holding the first in Washington, D. C., next winter; to select and employ a first-class man as its secretary; and to take a hearty and prominent part in the discussion at public meetings, and by well-considered publications of present subjects affecting morality and religion. His friends are greatly encouraged. Dr. James M. King, representing the Methodist Church, made an eloquent speech at the meeting."

Nominations.

I am requested to write three editorial articles. I am not limited as to choice of topic. I choose the above as caption of editorial number one.

By nominations I mean the suggestion of certain names in the church papers as worthy of episcopal or other high ecclesiastical honors. "Why not nominate?" This question was seriously asked me by a prominent preacher. He suggested several reasons which were quite plausible, and for the time I thought he was right. I will state the argument for.

1. Providence does not exclude a nomination in the papers whereby men may be known to the public.

2. A nomination does not necessarily imply log rolling or wire pulling, but, if anything, the contrary.

3. It is not necessary that we should be blindfolded before we permit Providence to lead us. We can walk better without the hoodwink in any case.

4. This kind of belief in and dependence on Providence leads ultimately to fatalism or trust in luck.

5. English Methodists make all their nominations before hand and discuss them. They may be upon one extreme, but American Methodists are on the other.

I trimmed my pencil and took down these points. I now set down in pen and ink the per contra.

1. The fact that Providence does not exclude one nomination might lead to so many by way of compromise, difference of opinion and buncombe that if Providence did not grow tired of it people would. There would be so many providential indications that no one could decide which to follow. To be nominated is painful to a modest man, but to be nominated and not be voted for is still more painful. Some men whose modesty was not known before have been seen to blush deeply under the latter state of things. Such we ought to spare in their feelings. We know they do not want to be conspicuous. They do not object so much to this office as being talked about. If a man is not so conspicuous that his name will naturally occur to a majority, he is not fit to be a Bishop. Who would fly a paper kite over the statue of Liberty to attract attention to the statue?

2. There is a very grave charge hidden under the second proposition. A suspicious man is not the man to cast an unsuspicious vote. A man who is opposed to log rolling is generally found axe in hand under a dogwood tree. He is not chopping, but he has his mind made up that dogwood saplings make first-rate hand-axes.

3. This proposition is answered already by the saying relative to the conspicuous man.

4. How fatalism or trust in luck can be cured by a simple nomination does not appear so clear now as it did when the proposition was first read. There is no need to deny the assertion. We may grant it; but will acting in the other direction result in anything better? Doubtful.

5. English Methodists have not made the rapid strides which Americans have. Judged by results the American Methodists might suggest a change to the English brethren.

There is an increasing inequity in the direction of these offices. Many are being caught by the thought of glory, immortality and power. It is a great thing to have mounted Jumbo. The boy who rode him from one side of the street to the other thought he was the observed of all observers. So there are many small men of Methodism who think if they can mount the elephant somewhere between the occult and the sacred and ride, the world will die happy for having seen them.

I have also noticed an increasing desire of some men to be sacrificed on the high altar of duty. I heartily concur in their desire. It falls like an inspiration, which it doubtless is, and I hope Providence and the General Conference will generously sacrifice them. But I do not want these men's names first published far and wide and opportunity given them of disgorging on the public an enormous quantity of bee-bread honey and sorghum taffy.

I have still another objection to nominations, viz.: One or two unlucky or untimely nominations may forever retire a man to the shades of private life; or if he still retains prominence without perfect efficiency or merit, he may at last be elected for no better reason than that he had been nominated so often that at last he was elected in order to be gotten out of the way. I once heard an aspirant to a certain position talk not very complacently of the incumbent. I watched him afterward, and I discovered that no one was more eager to have the incumbent elected to a higher office. He wanted the place himself.

"Of Course Some Form of Methodism."

The world's tribute to Methodism gathers volume and eloquence with the revolving years. As its doctrinal standards are studied and its marvelous history examined, the words of Dr. Chalmers become the voice of the age, "Methodism is Christianity in earnest." To this consensus of opinion must be added the Spectator, the organ of High Churchism in England. Some significant words of that aristocratic journal are aptly quoted by the Methodist Times in an admirable editorial article on "The Bright Prospects of Evangelical Christianity." The views expressed are so full of good cheer and so stimulating to faith, that we feel constrained to make liberal extracts therefrom. The special attention of Methodists is called to the significance of the concluding paragraphs:

Even in the Established Church, where evangelism must always fight against fearful odds, the power and popularity of evangelical Christianity are most encouraging. There is a remarkable revival of evangelical Christianity at Cambridge. No Ritualistic priest can command such enormous congregations as the younger evangelists who adapt their services and their style of speech to the reasonable senses and intelligence of the time. No High Church missioner has such a hold of the people as Mr. Aitken; no High Church Bishop, even when he holds a presentation episcopal staff in his hand, is so popular as the Bishop of Ripon; no High Church Canon crowds his cathedral more successfully than Canon Fleming; no High Church parish priest has such a following in his own parish as Mr. Stuart, of Holloway. When we turn from influence at home to influence abroad, the contrast is yet more marked. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the High Church Missionary Society, although a century older than the evangelical Church Missionary Society, raised last year only £110,000, as against £231,000 raised by its friendly rival.

Passing now to the great evangelical communities outside the Established Church, the prospect, bright already, grows brighter and brighter at every step. Never was evangelical Christianity so popular and so powerful in this country. In fact, evangelical Christianity is the only form of the faith which has the slightest hold of the masses of the people. Consider the significance of Mr. Moody's missions in all the great cities of the kingdom. Let any man, not an evangelist, try to collect such multitudes, and to hold them for weeks at a time. However eloquent, however devoted he might be, he would find the task impossible. An evangelical missioner is the only kind of missioner who could fill the largest public buildings in the land as long as hechose to preach in them evangelical gospel. Look again at such a prodigious phenomenon as Mr. Spurgeon. Who but an evangelical preacher could keep the Metropolitan Tabernacle full for a quarter of a century? Who but an evangelist could publish a sermon every week, and secure for that sermon such a circulation as the mightiest newspapers might envy? Again, what could be more significant than the amazing sale of the Lives of our Lord by Archdeacon Farrar and Dr. Cunningham Gekie? Twenty or thirty costly editions were eagerly demanded, before cheaper ones appeared. "Decay of evangelism!" Indeed! There never was greater devotion. Let those who think otherwise leave their studies and rub their eyes, and walk abroad among their fellow countrymen. They will scarcely find any large town in which some unattached evangelical does not conduct crowded services every Sunday in the Town Hall or other largest building available. Lastly, let the true significance of the Salvation Army be realized. When that extraordinary movement suddenly attracted the attention of all men, the Spectator wrote an article on the astounding fact that within a few years a new and mighty religious organization, claiming 2,000,000 adherents in this country alone, had appeared among us. In the course of that thoughtful article the Spectator stated that their doctrinal teaching was "of course some form of Methodism." Why "of course?" Why should the very High Church Spectator assume that any religious movement that lays hold of multitudes of the English people must be "of course" of the most pronounced evangelical character? There is a world of meaning in that sarcastic and profound "of course." Even the Spectator, much as it dislikes evangelical Christianity, is compelled to acknowledge that evangelical Christianity is the only form of Christianity that has the slightest chance with the English democracy. And never had it such a chance. The hold which infidelity has upon the educated classes is greatly exaggerated.

The following note from Rev. J. S. Oakley, written to the editor at the General Conference, is gladly given space. We are obliged to our brother for calling attention to the error and will have it corrected:

I am just through "The Editor-Bishop." I am charmed. I read it through at three sittings. You will pardon me for calling your attention to an error. On page 106, you say the Mississippi Conference was the last that Bishop Parker held. He presided over the Florida Conference at Gainesville, January, 1885, in place of the lamented Bishop Pierce. We are having a wonderful meeting at the Agricultural and Mechanical College. Over fifty conversions to date. I never saw anything like it. More than one hundred penitents came forward to-night.

STARKVILLE, Miss., May 4, 1886.

Revival Notes.

MR. EDITOR: The Lord has again blessed his people in Grenada, Miss., in a special work of grace there. The work yet goes on for the third week in the Methodist Church, under the care of the pastor, the Rev. T. J. Newell. Bro. Caruthers, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and Bro. Miller, pastor of the Baptist Church, have heartily and efficiently helped in the good work. Of our own ministry Bro. W. S. Lagrone, G. H. Hodge, Dr. J. W. Price and others have shared the labors and benefited the meeting. Bro. J. A. Bowen, the industrious agent for Grenada Collegiate Institute, gave two weeks of his helpful service. A single object animated the hearts and commanded the efforts of all—to lead men to Christ. Many have been led to him. Not only have sinners turned to Christ to find salvation and to lead a new life, but many in the church have waked out of sleep and moved into the line of active workers and joyous believers. This quickening in the church membership has been as marked as any other feature of the meeting. The cause of Christ has been strengthened; Christian obligation has become better defined and more definitely embraced in the hearts of many; there will be more care for spiritual fruit and more support to the work of the church.

The members of the Young Men's Christian Association have taken active part in this revival and rendered great service, working both in their own rooms and at the church services. That noble organization is destined to be a great force for good in Grenada.

Grenada Collegiate Institute has shared largely in the work and the fruit of the meeting. That is a Christian school in deed as well as in name. The president, Bro. Newell, and his collaborators take care of the matter. The current scholastic year will close with a gratifying success in the year's work and more hopeful promises of financial security. Bro. Bowen, the agent, is in sight of complete success in the purchase of the property.

COMO, Miss., May 8, 1886.

—Thanks to State Superintendent Warren Easton for a copy of his "Biennial Report of Public Education," to the General Assembly.

—Rev. A. S. Whitehurst, of the North Alabama Conference, on his way to Northwest Texas on business, gave us a pleasant call on Tuesday.

—Rev. J. W. McLaurin received five members into the church at McComb City on last Sabbath, which makes a total of twenty-three he has received since Conference.

—Rev. B. F. Jones, our pastor at Weesson and Beauregard, received fifty-two into the church at Weesson on last Sabbath, and baptized forty adults. The service was very impressive, and we expect to hear of a general forward move under the skillful management of this rounded pastor.

—The following from the Advocate of Missions will be of interest to our readers: "The increase in the contributions for foreign missions during the quadrennium has been greater than in any other department of the church, having more than doubled, as follows: 1882, $103,000; 1883, $160,000; 1884, $177,000; 1885, $184,000; 1886, $230,000. These are given in round numbers."

—The spring meeting of the trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground, held on the fourteenth instant, at Felicity Hall, on the grounds, was the best attended for some years past. W. H. Foster, the venerable president of the Board, presided and dispatched business with much vigor. Arrangements were perfected for the entertainment of the multitude who will go to the Seashore to hear P. Jones.

—The Christian at Work gives the following statistics of churches in New York City: "The Baptist has forty churches and eight missions in this city, with 13,669 communicants—a gain of twelve churches, six missions, and 3,200 members during the past twenty years. The Methodist have fifty-two churches and six missions in this city, with 12,000 communicants—a gain of twelve churches, five missions, and 3,000 members during the past twenty years."

Rev. Joseph S. Oakley, writing from Starkville, Miss., under date May 14, says:

The revival at the A. and M. College, of which I wrote last week, resulted in over one hundred conversions, and about seventy accessions to the churches. We received sixteen at the morning service on Sunday, Episcopal Church, fifteen Presbyterian, fourteen Baptist, nine Cumberland Presbyterian. We expect to receive another meeting in our church. All the ministers of the town are participating, and great good is being accomplished.

Perfect Safety,

Health is maintained by correct habits of living, and through a proper action of the stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels. Whenever these organs fail to perform their functions properly, the most thorough and efficacious remedy is Ayer's Pills. This medicine is purely vegetable in its composition, and is equally safe and emollient, whether administered to young or old. It does not gripe, is mild and

Speedy

In its action, restores tone to the enfeebled stomach, gently stimulates the liver, kidneys, and bowels, and induces a healthy condition of these organs more speedily than any other cathartic in use.

I was severely afflicted with Rheumatism, and came near losing the use of my limbs. I was advised to use Ayer's Pills, and, though nearly seventy years of age, am now in good health. — Mrs. J. G. Smith, Cambridge, Ga.

Ayer's Pills keep my stomach and liver in perfect condition. Five years ago I was severely afflicted with enlargement of the liver, and the physicians of the time being unable to retain any solid food on my stomach, I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, after using three boxes of this medicine, was cured. — Lucius Alexander, Marblehead, Mass.

I do not know of a safer medicine to give

To Young

Children than Ayer's Pills. I have used this remedy in my family for over twenty years, and have always found it prompt and reliable. — Mrs. H. I. Guernsey, 54 Oxford street, Baltimore, Md.

My little boy, five years of age, was very much troubled with worms, and quite feeble. A few strong doses of Ayer's Pills expelled the worms, and so improved his health that one would hardly know him for the same child. — Mrs. J. W. Little, Marietta, Va.

Last year I suffered much from General Debility, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, and Violent Headaches. After having used one box of Ayer's Pills my health was restored. — M. Koch, Huntington, Ind.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER
Secrets the bile and acts like a filter to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhoea, a languid, weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms generally termed liver troubles. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA the great blood-purifier.

Dr. JOHN BULL.—I have examined the preparation for the preparation of Dr. JOHN BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, and believe the combination to be an excellent one, and well calculated to produce an alternative impression on the system. I have used it both in public and private practice, and think it the best of any I have used.

Dr. JOHN BULL.—I have used BULL'S SARSAPARILLA for rheumatism and kidney trouble, and have taken it for asthma and general debility. It has given me back great relief.

For three years I was afflicted with Liver Complaint. I tried the best physicians in the country, but could get no relief. I was advised to use Ayer's Pills, and, having done so, believe my liver is now in a perfectly healthy condition. — Mrs. R. C. Decker, Germantown, Pa.

"WILLIE WHEAT."

BY REV. J. M. PUGH.

On a bright April morn,
When the winter was gone,
And the birds their notes were singing,
The young of all ages
Were free from their cages,
And the laugh on the air was ringing.

With merry, merry joy,
A happy little boy,
As he listened to the songs so sweet,
Caught the sound of his name,
Through the air as it came,
And a little bird said, "Willie Wheat."

With a bright, sunny face,
And a quick, dancing pace,
To his home, his kind mother to greet,
Through the air as it came,
To him it was clear—
That a bird should have said, "Willie Wheat."

"Willie Wheat, Willie Wheat;
O the song, 'tis so sweet!"
Said the child in his innocent glee;
In ecstasy of joy,
Then asked the smiling boy,
"My little bird, mamma, may it be?"

"O yes, my darling child,"
In sweet accents so mild,
Did his mother the present convey.
The reply to his heart
Did new pleasure impart,
As he bounded away to his play.

"Willie Wheat, Willie Wheat,"
Said the child as he repeated,
As the bird sang in notes, wild and free;
"Willie Wheat, Willie Wheat,"
Were accents very sweet
To the child in his innocent glee.

When his notes can be heard,
O, that's my little bird!
Says the child, with his heart full of glee.
"He is calling my name;
O, 'tis the very same
That my mamma, dear mamma, gave to me!"

How innocent the joy
Of the sweet little boy,
As his heart leaps with silent delight!
May his soul never know
Sad adversity's blow
Mid the shades of affection's dark night!

We may from this story—
'Tis no allegory—
Learn a lesson in tones very mild,
O, what a tiny thing
Much unpleasure can bring
To the heart of a dear little child!

MR. EDITOR: I have been wanting to write to the ADVOCATE for a long time. Papa laughed at me, and mother said, "wait until you can write it yourself." Now I can. I am a little boy seven years old. I have no brothers, and but one little sister. She is two years old, and has blue eyes; mine are dark brown. I have never been to school, but study at home. I am ready for fifth reader, and second arithmetic. I have been through my grammar once. We do not have cats and dogs for pets, but I have a colt named Dexter, and I pet our little cow, Jersey Belle. The baby plays with dolls. She calls them Willie, Janie, and old big Eda. Her own name is Mabel Glen. Our playmates are Jimmie Smith, Helen and Annie Spinks. I do not go to Sunday-school, as we live too far from the church. I will answer some questions, and ask two or three. Ella E. Tribble, Hannah's husband was Elkanah, a Levite. It was Eli, a priest, who, having heard that his two sons were killed, and that the Ark of the Lord had been taken by the Philistines, fell backward from his seat and died. Eddie Barland, the word "cuckoo" is found in Leviticus xii, 10, and Deuteronomy xiv, 15. Now, I want to ask, Why Matity X. Quattellum called his father "gov'ner"? Will some one of the little boys please tell me, What thief of the Old Testament, and what saint of the New, were stoned to death? If you will publish this, I will write again, and promise not to write on both sides of my paper next time. Your little friend,

WILLIAM R. COCHRAN,

PORT STEPHENS, P. O.

MR. EDITOR: The little letter writers of Mississippi have furnished most of the letters in "Our Young People's" column for a good while. I have enjoyed all of them very much, and think it is time more of your little friends in Louisiana should be heard from. The answer to Minnie B. Jackson's question may be found in I Kings xviii, 5; Job xli, 5; Isaiah xv, 6. Edward M. Brown, we read of bonnets being made for men in Exodus xxviii, 40. Our Sunday-school went into winter quarters; but it has been re-organized, and I attend every Sunday except when rain prevents. I study the Intermediate Quarterly, and our teacher, Mrs. Miles, is liked very much. Last year, while attending the Exposition, I was very anxious to visit your office, but did not have many days to remain in New Orleans; and, in trying to see what we could of the Exposition, time flew so fast no moments were left for us to visit other places. I intend to call at your office first the next time I visit your city. I remain, Your little friend,

REMAINS,

ROSA MIXER,

ELIO CANE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to you, I will do so now. I am going to school. My teacher's name is Miss Nettie Naul. I like her so much. I have three sisters and six brothers. I love to read the little folks' letters. I have two brothers. We do not go to Sunday-school. I am eight years old, and study reading, spelling, and arithmetic. Mamma takes the ADVOCATE. I think you are so kind to give the little folks a column in your paper. I will close by asking a question: What woman is it mentioned in the New Testament that made garments for the poor? PROOF THAT THE PHYSICIAN'S TESTIMONY THAT CONFESION IS TRUE.

Cleveland, O., Herald.

Yesterday and the day before we copied into our columns from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, a remarkable statement, made by J. B. Henion, M. D., a gentleman who is well known in this city. In that article Dr. Henion recounted a wonderful experience which befell him, and the next day we published from the same paper a second article, giving an account of the excitement in Rochester, and elsewhere, caused by Dr. Henion's statement. It is doubtful if any two articles were ever published which caused greater commotion both among professionals and lay men.

Since the publication of these two articles, having been besieged with letters of inquiry, we sent a communication to Dr. Henion and also to H. H. Warner & Co., asking if any additional proof could be given, and here it is:

GENTLEMEN: I owe my life and present health wholly to the power of Warner's Safe Cure, which attached me from the very brink of the grave. It is not surprising that people should question the statement I made (which is true in every respect) for my recovery was as great a marvel to myself, as to my physicians and friends.

J. B. HENION, M. D.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 31.

SIR: The best proof I can give you of the truth of my statement, and of Dr. Henion's entire truth, and would not have been published unless strictly so, is the following testimonial from the best citizens of Rochester, and a card published by Rev. Dr. Foote.

H. H. WARNER & CO.

To Whom It May Concern:

We are personally or by reputation acquainted with Dr. Henion, and we believe he would publish no statement not literally true. We are also personally or by reputation well acquainted with H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of Warner's Safe Cure, (by which Dr. Henion says he was cured) whose commercial and personal standing in this community are of the highest order, and we believe that they would not publish any statement which were not literally and strictly true in every particular.

To the Editor of the Living Church, Chicago, Ill.

There was published in the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle of the 31st of December, a statement made by Dr. B. Henion, M. D., narrating how he had been cured of Bright's disease of the kidneys, almost in his last days, by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. I was referred to in that statement, as having recommended and urged Dr. Henion to try the remedy, which he did, and was cured. The statement of Dr. Henion is true, so far as I am concerned, and I believe it to be true in all other respects. I was a parishioner of mine, and I visited him in his sickness. I urged him to take the medicine, and would do the same again to anyone who was troubled with a disease of the kidneys and liver.

It seems impossible to doubt further in the face of such conclusive proof.

MR. EDITOR: Sister Rosa has just finished a letter to the ADVOCATE, and I want to send one with her. I am a little girl nine years old. I enjoy the little letters in your good paper, but can't write a long letter like some of them. I study hard every day, and hope I soon will be able to write without having to ask how to spell words that are not short and easy. We live near Little Prairie bayou, and sometimes catch fish out of it; they do not bite well now. Crayfish are all we can catch. I love to go to Sunday-school, and learn lessons in "Our Little People." Your little friend,

We have presiding once a month. I live at Valley Station. Well, I must close, as this is my first attempt at letter writing. I will ask the little folks, Where in the Bible is "eternity" found? SESSION OF 1886.

SECOND DAY—MORNING SESSION.

When the morning hour arrived for the devotional exercises to begin the church was well filled with worshipping delegates and others. The exercises were conducted by the Rev. Andrew Hunter, of the Arkansas Conference.

Bishop J. C. Keener took the chair of the senior Bishop, and presided during the morning.
The report of the Committee on standing committees was read to the secretary's desk by Mr. J. M. Mason, the chairman, and read and corrected by the delegates.

The report was then approved.
The following named delegates who had not before been present, were reported as having arrived: Z. Meek, of West Virginia; E. S. G. M. of West Texas Conference; W. T. G. Conner, of the South Carolina Conference.

The regular order of business was taken up, which began with the call for the presentation of petitions, memorials and appeals.
H. P. Walker, of the Kentucky Conference, arose to inquire whether the Conference had authority to make the Committee on Appeals a standing committee. He said if this committee was appointed before-hand it might have no work to do. He thought the Discipline expressed upon that point as upon the committee itself.

Mr. Whitehead: I rise to a point of order; that is that the standing committee has been already organized, and this is not a proper way to raise the question, by merely making a suggestion without a motion.
H. P. Walker: The inquiry was to bring the question up, so that some motion could be made with regard to it. I will make a motion to reconsider either that question or the paper by which the Committee on Appeals was made a standing committee for the Conference. I move to reconsider the action of yesterday appointing that committee.

Bishop Keener (presiding): The motion to reconsider the action by which the Committee on Appeals was appointed yesterday is before the Conference.
Mr. Whitehead: I would like to submit a word upon that subject. I think this objection to the appointment of this committee is overstrained. At the time when the other committees were organized, it was not certain that they would have any thing to do. That is no reason for not organizing these committees. I do not see the necessity of undoing the work we have already done.

The motion to reconsider was not carried.
The following papers were appointed to be in attendance upon the Conference: Landon Edwards, Richmond, Va.; Lewis M. Palmer, Nashville, Tenn.; John Laurens, Ashland, Va.
J. M. Mason, of Alabama, sent to the secretary's desk the report of the Committee on Rules.
J. Wofford Tucker, of the Florida Conference, presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That the chair be requested to appoint a committee of seven instructed to consider the expediency and propriety of devising a constitutional plan to enable our entire church to contribute proportionately to raise a fund to defray in future the expenses of delegates to General Conference.

J. Wofford Tucker,
J. P. Walker,
A. G. HAYWOOD,
G. D. SHANNON,
JAS. H. CHAMBERS,
W. C. FENNER,
W. C. IRELAND,
ZEPHANIAH MEEK.

J. E. Edwards: I arise to make an inquiry. Is there not a rule that we are to read all papers by title without reading the face of the paper? I ask for information.

H. P. Walker: This resolution only asks for a special committee to consider a certain subject only. I can see no propriety in that, whether the church will agree with the resolution or not. Let the question be raised here, and let the inquiry be made, for you, for what it is worth.

H. J. Adams, of North Georgia Conference: I move that this matter take the regular course.

A. R. Windfield, Arkansas Conference: This is a matter that has been often sprung upon us during the last forty years. Your expenses here are high, and it is a question that cannot be and will not be treated in this way as it would be by a general committee. I hope the request of the committee will be granted, and that the committee will look into the subject and give us something that will be of permanent good. We have arrived at a point in the progress of Methodism when it is absolutely necessary.

A. S. Andrews of Alabama Conference: The matter that is brought before us in this resolution is one of great importance, and a special committee who have had this matter under deep and prayerful consideration for days and weeks and months must be able to give us something as a basis for action. I sincerely hope that this Conference will order that committee. If this is put into the hands of a general committee, it will be a long time before they may be able to reach it. They have their regular work to do. Give this to a special committee that knows how to do it, and they will do it quicker and better than a general committee.

Mr. Bishop: I move that the whole thing be referred to the Finance Committee.

Bishop Keener (presiding): The motion is before you to amend the resolution by striking out the words "special committee" and referring it to the Finance Committee.

Henry W. Long, of the Florida Conference: I move as an amendment that this special committee consist of one member from each delegation to this General Conference.

Mr. Thrall: I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion of Mr. Thrall was lost. The motion of Mr. Bishop to refer the subject to the Finance Committee was voted upon by the Conference and declared lost. The question then returned on the original resolution.

Mr. Long, of the Florida Conference: This is a matter that each Conference is not jurisdiction in it. It is a question that ought to be considered by representative men of each Annual Conference of our church. I think that whatever is agreed upon in the Annual Conferences of our church will meet the sentiments of the General Conference better than if it was a paper gotten up by a committee of seven only.

J. D. Vane, of St. Louis Conference: I make the point of order that Mr. Long has no right to make a special motion. His motion is seconded.

A delegate: The motion was seconded by myself.

Mr. Long: The subject should be considered by the representative men of the Conference, and it will be more likely met with the approbation of the General Conference than a special committee, and in the end it will save time.

Mr. Proffman: I move to lay the amendment on the table, which is to strike out the word "special," and substitute one member from each Conference.

Bishop Keener (presiding): This is a motion to lay on the table the amendment presented by Bro. Long, of Florida, which amendment is that this committee be swelled out instead of leaving it to a special committee of seven, so that it will embrace one member from each Annual Conference.

Mr. Long: This is intended as a special committee.

Bishop Keener (presiding): The question before you is the amendment of Bro. Long to amend the resolution by striking out the word "seven," and make the committee consist of one from each Conference.

The amendment proposed by Bro. Evans was defeated, and the question again returned on the original resolution.

G. D. Shands, of the Mississippi Conference: I move the adoption of the original resolution, and on that motion I move the previous question.

Bishop Keener: That motion is not now in order.

Several delegates asked to have the resolution of Judge Tucker again read for the information of the Conference. The resolution was read by the secretary.

The resolution was adopted without amendment.

H. H. Parks read the following resolution, and subsequently sent it to the secretary's desk:

Resolved, That Section 2 on "The General Rules" be amended by inserting as an introduction to paragraph 25 the following paragraph which was formerly a part of the Discipline: "At the latter end of the year 1739 eight or ten persons came to Mr. Wesley in London, who appeared to be deeply convicted of sin and earnestly groaning for redemption. They desired (as did two or three more the next day) that he would spend some time with them in prayer and advise them how to flee from the wrath to come, which they saw continually hanging over their heads. That he might have more time for this great work he appointed a day when they might all come together, which from thenceforward they did every week, namely, on Thursday in the evening. To these and to as many more as desired to join with them (for their number increased daily) he gave those articles from time to time which he judged most needful for them, and they always concluded their meetings with prayer suited to their several necessities."

Such a society is no other than a company of men who are united and seeking the power of godliness in it, which he judged most needful for them, and they always concluded their meetings with prayer suited to their several necessities.

This resolution created a rather animated discussion between Mr. Harrison and Mr. Parks, in which the clear misunderstanding as to the condition of the records of the last General Conference was developed.

The resolution was, however, referred to the Committee on Revision.

Mr. Black, of West Virginia Conference: I move that the regular business of this Conference be suspended for half an hour, so that the delegates may have the privilege of reading the Daily Advocate. (Laughter.) It is a positive fact that one-half of the members can not hear what is going on, there is such a rattling of papers. (Renewed laughter.) I hope that the Bishop will not only use his episcopal authority to stop it, but that he will hit every fellow's head that is reading a paper.

George Thornburgh presented a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Itinerancy, providing for furnishing of certain blanks for the use of preachers to make reports to the Annual Conferences.

The presiding Bishop (Keener) announced that the rules of the House were now before the Conference for consideration.

After a number of motions had been made by delegates, some of whom desired that the report of the committee should be considered as a whole, and some that it should be acted on by sections, the Conference finally decided to take up the report of the committee section.

The first section of the report was adopted without amendment.

On motion of Mr. Whitehead, the figure 5 in parenthesis in Section 2 was stricken out.

Sections 3, 4 and 5 were adopted without amendment.

On motion of Mr. Long, Section 6 was amended to read as follows: "Every resolution shall be in writing and in duplicate, signed by at least two members, and every substitute or amendment shall be in writing and in duplicate."

2. The presiding officer shall cause the session to be opened promptly with the prayer, and after reading and approval of the journal the following shall be the order of business:

(1) Report of standing committees.
(2) Reports of special committees.
(3) Appeals, memorials, and petitions.

(4) Resolutions. (The call for resolutions shall be made by the Conference.)

No new business shall be introduced after the tenth day, except by a suspension of the rule.

3. Special committees ordered by the Conference shall be appointed by the Bishop prior to the time a motion may be made to amend or to suspend the rule.

4. When the report of a committee is under discussion, the chairman of that committee shall have the right to close the discussion, and the call of the previous question shall be subject to that right.

5. The presiding officer shall decide all questions of order, subject to an appeal to the Conference. When such appeal is taken, the person appealing shall be allowed to state the ground of his appeal, and the chair the ground of his decision, in each case such statement shall not exceed five minutes. Otherwise than this the vote shall be taken without debate.

6. Every resolution shall be in writing and in duplicate, signed by at least two members, and every substitute or amendment shall be in writing and in duplicate.

7. All papers designed to go before the Conference shall be referred to the committee named by the mover, unless objection be made.

8. All papers proposing changes of the Discipline, whether they be reports of committees or original propositions offered under Rule 2, or otherwise, shall specify by chapter, paragraph, section, or page the passage to be affected, and also recite the language as it will read when amended.

9. A report or other paper shall be considered by the Conference only when it has been presented and read by the secretary, but any such paper or resolution may be withdrawn at any time before action thereon by the Conference.

10. In the disposition of matter before the Conference the following methods shall have precedence:

(1) Postponement.
(2) Laying on the table.
(3) The previous question.
(4) Commitment.
(5) Substitution.

11. Every member desiring to speak shall arise from his seat and respectfully address the president, and shall not be interrupted when speaking unless called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall he speak more than once on the same question, unless he has been called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall he speak more than once on the same question, unless he has been called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall he speak more than once on the same question, unless he has been called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall he speak more than once on the same question, unless he has been called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall he speak more than once on the same question, unless he has been called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall he speak more than once on the same question, unless he has been called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall he speak more than once on the same question, unless he has been called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall he speak more than once on the same question, unless he has been called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall he speak more than once on the same question, unless he has been called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; nor shall he speak more than once on the same question, unless he has been called to order by the president, or by a member of the Conference through the president, in which case the speaker shall be permitted to finish his remarks, but he shall not be permitted to speak more than twice on the same question, nor more than three minutes at one time, without leave of the Conference; THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1886.

If all our members were living as they will wish they were when Christ comes, we would have no more of this taking an interest in operas, matinees, race courses, dancing, gambling and such like things. All these things are of the world, and I tell you plainly that they who do such things are not of Christ and are not to be taken as his representatives to a lost world. Yet they burn the cause dearest to all men.

While waiting for a train a few days since an old friend and a true man of God in the Baptist ministry came into the depot quite late and leaning on the arm of a sweet-faced woman for support. I extended him my hand and expressed surprise and grief at his suffering, when he said: "I feel this is but the beginning of the end with me; but I want you to know that the whole way before me is clear." A brother of his church said to me he was too young a man to leave his now, and it is all because he has worn himself out in the service of the Lord. I thought of the men I had seen die much younger than he from excessive service of sin, and felt like saying of my brother, Blessed man to die thus charged!

The following from an exchange is suggestive, and deserves to be posted in the vestibule of every church where it may be read every Sabbath morning:

Is there a girl's boarding-school in your town, reader? Then perhaps the only letter written from your town. Are there strangers in your church to whom you have never extended cordial words of welcome? Then perhaps some such letter ought to have been written from your neighborhood.

The mother of the writer of this letter tells us that her daughter at College, wrote the following lines for her mother's eye alone:

There is one consolation—I won't have to stay but two months longer. Yesterday at church they played one of the old hymns that you play so often at our little church (Henry), and I could not help from crying. Everybody was a stranger to me, but that tune was not.

Mamma, if you ever see strangers enter the church, I want you to go and speak to them, tell them you are glad to see them out. As long as we girls have been attending the Presbyterian Church here, not one soul has spoken to us. But in the Methodist Church, as soon as the college girls go in, the ladies go around and speak to each one.

If I were not such a strong blue-stocking, I would go to some other church where they treat the girls politely.

We give place to the following from an exchange, and call special attention of Boards of Stewards to it:

A certain presiding elder, whose name and that of his district and Conference we will not mention, said in his report at a recent Conference session: "In many instances the salaries of our preachers are far below the time of a comfortable living, and far below what the ability of the people they serve would indicate. But this is not the worst of it. The methods of raising the estimates made are unbusiness-like and dilatory, and in some cases unworthy the dignity of Christian men. The failure to carry out some well-defined method of church finance usually arises within the church, and not outside of it. If official members refuse to sign a subscription themselves, of course they have no face to ask others to do so. The failure to pay the pastors in many of the churches has its root difficulty here. Of how many churches can these things truthfully be said? If of one, that is one too many. There is neither prosperity in such a church, nor any sense of self-approval among those who thus manage its affairs. The same presiding elder says: "In every instance which has come under my observation the pastors have been paid when the matter has been taken hold of in season and pushed. Some of our official men have caught the secret of making a good charge, and also of having a good minister. May God bless them, and their number be increased until every charge is a good one; which will greatly tend, no doubt, to make many a poor minister better."

Another serious difficulty that may be considered in this connection is the failure of those who have means to set the church an example of liberality. The history of every successful charge is at the same time a history of the large-hearted man of means who inspired others by doing his full duty. There is little, if any, hope for the church where men who are able and ought to pay twenty-five dollars only pay ten. These brethren will be greatly surprised when the Lord reveals to them the tears and heart-aches their course has caused in the pastor's home.

The General Conference—Editorial Correspondence.

Business progresses slowly in this great synod of the church. But few measures are entertained without first having been carefully considered in committee. And it rarely occurs that the report of a committee suffers defeat in open Conference. That is well. These standing committees are composed of representatives from every section of the church—every Annual Conference—and on most questions very generally and correctly reflect the mind of the connexion at large. They are also a breakwater against hasty or excessive legislation. The rhetorical "speech-maker" has there little opportunity for display of his powers. Only facts, arguments and convictions are of any avail.

On Tuesday the election of four Bishops was held and resulted in the selection of the following in the order named: Wallace W. Duncan, of the South Carolina Conference; Charles B. Galloway, of the Mississippi Conference; Eugene R. Hendrix, of the Missouri Conference; and Joseph S. Key, of the South Georgia Conference. These brethren having received a constitutional majority of the votes cast, were declared elected to the office of Bishops in the church. Dr. Duncan has for years been a leading man in South Carolina, and, as professor in Wofford College and preacher at large, has been popular and most efficient. He comes to the office in the prime of a vigorous manhood and promises years of large usefulness to the church. Dr. Hendrix has been well known in Southern Methodism since his missionary tour around the world with Bishop Marvlin in 1877. He is finely educated, a polished gentleman, a preacher of force and versatility, a successful educator, and a man of affairs. As the president of Central College, at Fayette, Mo., he has shown large capacity for administration. Dr. Key is the oldest of the four being about fifty-eight years of age. He is an alumnus of Emory College, Ga., and has devoted a laborious life to the itinerant ministry. His work has been exclusively in active, pastoral service. Of the other I shall not speak. He assumes these great responsibilities with trembling, but in the fear of God. The old Advocate office was so pleasant and its labors so congenial, he would have been quite content to have remained there for years. But to him the call of the church is the voice of God, and obediently he goes.

The ordination service on Thursday afternoon in Centenary Church was most solemn and impressive. Bishop McTearle preached a characteristic sermon—suggestive, practical, original. His godly admonitions were lovingly given. The Bishops-elect were each accompanied by two elders. Dr. Duncan was presented by Dr. S. B. Jones and Rev. W. D. Kirkland, and the writer by his old Conference associates, Dr. C. G. Andrews and Dr. H. F. Johnson; Dr. Hendrix, by Dr. J. D. Vinell and Rev. J. H. Pritchett, and Dr. Key, by Dr. J. W. Hinton and Rev. J. E. Godfrey. The service was conducted by Bishop McTearle, assisted by Bishops Keener, Wilson, Granbery and Hargrove.

The election of other connectional officers will now follow, and the Conference will soon get eager for adjournment.

To-day is the appointed time for you to work for the salvation of the lost soul nearest to you. To-morrow is not and may never be.

A Methodist Church without a class meeting is like a family without a dining-table—in a very poor condition for housekeeping.

The Rev. B. S. Rayner, writing under date of May 10, says:

Our congregations along the Gulf coast have largely increased. The interest in religion is deepening and widening daily. We hear but two topics of conversation—"Sam Jones at Seashore Camp Meeting," and "Temperance." Everybody expects to attend the camp meeting. The temperance workers will take the country. Most of the brethren have responded to the foreign mission resolution. We have collected $2 05 in excess of our assessment for expense of delegates to General Conference. Our work of church building goes on. We are licensing some good young men to preach. Our number of accessions was never so large at this season. We are expecting larger things still of our Father in heaven.

J. D. Hays, Pearlinton, Miss., May 18, 1886, says:

I send to-day to Dr. Kelley, treasurer of Board of Missions, fifteen dollars, which is a little more than one-fourth the assessment for foreign missions on Pearlinton circuit, Mississippi Conference, for the current year. Would have forwarded this sooner but for a very destructive fire at Pearlinton which materially interfered with our finances.

John Baptist and Elias.

Bro. Johns calls on me to state my opinion relative to John Baptist and Elias. Was it Elias or John who appeared with Moses on the Mount of Transfiguration? Of course there is but one answer, viz: Elias. So Matthew and Luke expressly state. In Matthew xi, H. Jesus calls John Baptist the Elias promised in Malachi iv, 5. But we are not to infer that he meant personally to identify John as Elias. I have not Dr. Clarke by me to consult, but I presume there is some misapprehension of him as well as of Jesus upon this point. I can hardly think that he would teach such a thing. I will, however, take this occasion to say that this subject has other suggestive features worthy the study of all.

1. We read and talk glowingly of the past, and forget that they who lived in the past are quite as much interested in us. There is an old form of prayer which I think came from the Scotch Covenanters, and which my father often repeated—"Though Abraham hath forgotten us and Isaac hath not known us." Now, I never repeat that, because I think, if Abraham knows anything, he knows his spiritual descendants, and forgets nothing in that line. That prophetic ken is granted Elias is conditioned on his unselfish interest in the future. Men know because they love or desire. Knowledge that ignores the element of direct personal interest is valueless. No man lives to be immortal who cuts the cords of sympathy which bind him to posterity.

2. Personal recognition or identification is not contingent upon acquaintance in this mortal life. What the means or process may be by which we do know the ancient worthies is not indicated. But I suppose it is analogous to that by which every believer comes personally to identify Jesus himself. To explain how we know is as difficult as it was for Bartimaeus to explain how his eyesight came to him. There was no doubt on his mind as to the fact, but of the process he could not tell. So we may know Jesus—spiritual recognition is as definite and clear as bodily—yet we can not tell how we first knew it.

3. This spiritual recognition is not merely for the purpose of mutual gratulation, however pleasant. Moses and Elias do not come merely to compliment Jesus but to speak of the exodus which he was to accomplish at Jerusalem. I have transferred the word here from the Greek of the text. Moses led an exodus and Elias led one. So Jesus was to lead a third and last exodus. Moses led an exodus from the physical bondage of Egypt. Elias led an exodus from the social tyranny of courts and temple, and brought man to hope for better things to come when forms and places should not trammel the recognition of purity or worth. Jesus was to lead the exodus from sin, despair and shame to holiness, glory and immortality.

4. The notion of suffering or immunity therefrom has nothing to do with the question. Experience or inexperience of a fact in the past has no value in immortal knowledge. The three who talked in mid-air had never met on earth. Their experiences and achievements differed widely so far as externals were concerned. Yet their aims and endeavors tended to the same end under the inspiration of the same motive, viz: love for God and man. Swallowed, so to speak, in this absorbing passion, the three met in mid-air and mid-eternity, and forgetting all formalities of introduction or compliment, conversed only of the exodus. The three men who were fallen on their faces on the ground thought they knew each other. But full of selfish and narrow ambitions, with limited notions as to the claims which immortality had upon this fleeting life below, the only wonder is that they knew the three matchless ones who talked above their heads.

5. We need never fear of losing good company if we want to keep it. If none but the base and faithless and cruel are alive on earth, and I alone live worthy manhood's name, at my call, and in the spacious parlors, whose chandeliers are constellations and whose rocking-chairs are eunuchs, Moses, Elias, John and Christ will wait at any time to talk with me.

Rev. E. H. Moon reports as follows from Holly Springs, Miss., May 18 1886:

We are having a gracious revival of religion in Holly Springs, Miss. The meeting has been in progress ten days, and there has been fifty conversions. Bro. Collins, formerly of the Memphis Conference, is with us, and he has stirred the town as no other man has done since I have been here. Bro. Collins is at present from overwork, though we hope he will be able to preach again before we close the meeting.

Missionary Secretary, I. G. John; Missionary Treasurer, D. C. Kelley; Church Extension Secretary, David Morton; Book Agent, J. B. McFerrin; Book Editor, W. P. Harrison; Editor Christian Advocate, O. P. Fitzgerald; Sunday-School Editor, W. G. E. Cunningham.

A Change of Time.

In the Advocate of May 20, I have a notice saying the annual meeting of the Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society would be June 23 and 24. Since that has been published I find it will be necessary to hold the meeting one week later in order to secure the attendance of the recording secretary and others whose attendance is very much desired.

The society will convene in Raymond at ten o'clock Wednesday morning, June 30, and will continue two days. Delegates will please note this change.

Look Out.

A man calling himself Rev. C. W. Musgrave was in Woodville eight or ten days ago. He proposed to lecture on what he "seen" in his travels, also on temperance. He is too ignorant to lecture on anything. He speaks of the Blue and White Nile coming together near Memphis. Says he could see no body of water from the top of Mt. Carmel, except a glimpse of the Dead Sea. He said the plain between the foot of the mountains and the sea of Galilee on the east side was perhaps thirty miles wide. I was blamed for treating him with so little attention. I blame myself for treating him as much as I did. He left suddenly. The keeper of the hotel would like to hear from him.

Pres. Miss. conf. W. M. S.

Look Out.

A man calling himself Rev. C. W. Musgrave was in Woodville eight or ten days ago. He proposed to lecture on what he "seen" in his travels, also on temperance. He is too ignorant to lecture on anything. He speaks of the Blue and White Nile coming together near Memphis. Says he could see no body of water from the top of Mt. Carmel, except a glimpse of the Dead Sea. He said the plain between the foot of the mountains and the sea of Galilee on the east side was perhaps thirty miles wide. I was blamed for treating him with so little attention. I blame myself for treating him as much as I did. He left suddenly. The keeper of the hotel would like to hear from him.

WOODVILLE, Miss., May 19, 1886.

—Ex-Vice President David Davis is reported in a critical state of health, caused from the development of a large carbuncle on the left shoulder.

—Our brother, J. G. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, for more than sixty years in the regular work, filled the editor's pulpit in Brookhaven, May 2, morning and night, to the great delight of the church and congregation.

—Rev. J. M. Fuller, of the Michigan Conference, and now in his seventy-ninth year, has just closed a meeting in which he received 165 persons into the church. He preaches regularly to one of the largest Methodist congregations in Michigan.

—An exchange says, "In a portion of Washington City, eight thousand by sixty-three hundred feet in size, there are three hundred and eighty-nine liquor saloons licensed by Congress, which occupies the position of City Council in that city." Would it not be well for the voter to look after this shame on our nation in the selection of Congressmen?

—Our Sunday-school work is making a very gratifying progress. The gain during the past four years exceeds 1,200 Sunday-schools, 10,500 teachers and 95,884 scholars, which makes a grand total of 631,241 teachers and scholars. Now, let our watchword along this line of church work for the next quadrennium be, a total number in our Sunday-schools equal the whole number of our membership.

—Rev. Bromwell Andrew, of the Newark Conference, died on Thursday morning, April 29, at Navesink, N. J. He was born June 12, 1798, converted in the year 1818, licensed to preach in 1822, and he estimated that he had taken into the church more than one person for every dollar he had received as salary. His last message to his Conference was: "Tell my brethren that my trunk is all packed, and I have a through ticket."

—We call special attention to the following item from the Bishops' address: "One hundred years ago there were only 100 travelling preachers and 15,000 members in the United States; now there are not less than 25,000 itinerant, 32,907 local preachers, and 3,716,318 members. During the four years just past our membership has increased from 860,717 to 996,994; itinerant ministers from 4,011 to 4,466; local preachers from 5,569 to 9,943—the largest total quadrennial increase since our organization in 1814."

Who Will Help Us?

We hope to build a Methodist Church in New Albany, Union county, Miss. New Albany is on the line of the Memphis, Birmingham and Atlantic railroad. We are expecting the Gulf and Ship Island road to cross at this place. If we succeed in building a good house of worship here for our church, this will be at no distant day one of our very best stations.

We are unable to build without aid. Our church is very weak; we must have help. We hope that many sisters will aid us, and we believe they will. The brethren will not forget us and leave us alone. Some have already aided us; others have promised help. We have commenced to build, and have faith to believe the Lord will open the way for us. Please help a brother who is laboring on a very small salary that he may accomplish this good work. Send by postoffice order to Rev. D. L. Cogdell, Ripley, Tippah county, Miss.

MAY 1, 1886.

Mr. Editor: Many of your readers will be sorry to hear of the loss sustained by our venerable brother, Rev. L. D. Langford, a local elder of Mt. Olivet circuit, and father of Rev. D. C. Langford, of the Mississippi Conference. On Thursday night of last week—so I am reliably informed—his dwelling-house, furniture, household stuff, smoke-house and contents were all entirely consumed by fire. This is a serious loss to our brother, and will be a severe trial to his faith and patience; but we doubt not that the good shield which has served him in many a hard-fought battle for his many years will prove effectual to the resisting of the fiery darts and trial of the present time. "For our light affliction which is but for a moment worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

MECHANICSVILLE, Miss., May 26, 1886.

Will the pastors of the Brookhaven district please send me at once the names of their delegates to the District Conference? Also the names of their local preachers?

And oblige yours, etc.

Rev. W. W. Hopper, writing from Nacogdoches, Texas, May 18, says:

I have just received $100 from Bro. S. T. Taylor, of Waynesboro, Miss., to help build my new church. He is the first to respond to the Macedonian call. Who will be next? Let me hear from you, brethren.

Will the members of the Corinthian District Conference, who expect their wives or daughters to attend the Conference with them, give notice by card. We wish the preachers and superintendents of Sunday-schools, who expect to be present, to send their names to W. M. Roberson, Baldwin, Miss. The Sunday-school Convention of the district will convene on Thursday before the first Sunday in July the District Conference, the days next following.

Cankers Eruptions

Are so corrosive in their nature, and their cause is deep seated in the system, that a powerful alterative is needed to eradicate them. For this purpose, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the most effective medicine that can be procured. No other remedy can compare with it as a cure for all diseases originating in vitiated blood. I suffered greatly, for months, from two running

Ulcers

Besides the ulcers I also had a glandular swelling on my neck, which was gathering, and seemed about to break. I consulted several skillful physicians, and took various remedies, but failed to find relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles of this remedy completely cured me, and I am now in perfect health. Mrs. Jane L. Hopkins, Cambridgeport, Mass.

For what appeared to be a cancer on my lip, I used Ayer's Sarsaparilla with excellent success. I believe the disease to be perfectly cured. —Amherst Whitmore, Braintree, Maine.

About three years ago, I was troubled with cancer humors in my mouth, throat, and stomach. Food of any kind caused the most extreme suffering. After trying a number of remedies, without receiving any benefit, I was finally taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now eating any kind of food, and am vigorous, active, and entirely free from all humors. —J. W. Compton, Bloomington, Ill.

Cured by

Until within a few months I have suffered terribly, all my life with what my physician called Red Canker. At times my mouth, tongue, and throat have been nearly raw with these cancer sores, and my effort to swallow food caused the most intense pain. I was emaciated, weak, and pale, and always more or less under the doctor's care. Physicians failed to help me, and none of the many remedies I tried gave me any relief until I commenced taking sarsaparilla. This medicine has restored me to health, and has eradicated every trace of cancer from my system. —Mrs. David Carey, North Salem, Mass.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Of the skin, whether in the form of Erysipelas, Pimples, or Boils, indicate that the blood has become vitiated, and the system diseased, and that prompt treatment is indispensable. Ayer's Sarsaparilla purges the blood of all impurities, and speedily restores health and strength to the system. For nearly three years I was covered with Scrofulous some of which were very offensive, exhausting, and painful. I had no appetite, was emaciated, and so reduced in strength as to be unable to attend to my business. I tried many remedies, and was treated by a number of physicians, but received no relief. With little hope of recovery, I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and under its healing influence, soon began to improve. After using less than half a dozen bottles of this preparation, I was restored to perfect health. —Leonard Brackett, West Haven, Conn.

Sores

For forty years I have been troubled with a humor in the blood, appearing in painful eruptions on my skin, and causing Erysipelas at times. I have been a great sufferer. I have tried all kinds of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. By ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured, and my skin is now as smooth and fair as ever. —Mury C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have been taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for an impurity of the blood, which manifested itself in troublesome Boils and Eruptions, and can truly say I have never found any medicine so prompt and certain in curative effects. It has done me great good. —P. P. Coggeshall, Bookseller, 51 Merrimack St., Lowell, Mass.

For the radical cure of Pimples, Boils, Carbuncles, and all diseases originating in vitiated blood, I know of no remedy that can compare with Ayer's Sar-

As a promoter of health, giving appetite and renewing wasted energy, this medicine has no equal. —G. H. Davies, Court St., Pawtucketville, Lowell, Mass.

BULL'S SARSAPARILLA.

THE LIVER
Secretes the bile and acts like a filter to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspension of its functions, the bile poisons the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, weak eyes, bilious diarrhoea, a languid, weary feeling, and many other distressing symptoms generally termed liver troubles. These are relieved at once by the use of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, the great blood solvent.

Dr. J. H. M'Lean has examined the preparation of BULL'S SARSAPARILLA, and he has the honor to certify that it is an excellent medicine, and is well calculated to produce an alternative action on the system. I have used it both in public and private practice, and think it the best of all remedies in use for all the cases mentioned.

Our Young People.

A LITTLE GIANT.

BY HAROLD W. RAYMOND.

I know a little giant, no bigger than a Jack, Who can wrestle with a fat man, and throw him on his back; His knotted little muscles almost too small to spy, Could turn you topsy-turvy and finally seem to try, To break the nose, and pinch the toes, and fill one full of awe, Are jokes the midget loves to play alike on friend and foe.

But he can do still greater things than make a big man squeal— He can split a stone to splinters, or break a bar of steel; He can shape the dripping caves' drops into a crystal spear, And clutch the falling rain so hard, 'twill turn all white with fear.

He can chain the clanking river, and plug the tumbling spout; He can build a wall upon the lake and shut the water out. But if you want to see this little giant and run, Just build a tiny die, or step out and fetch the sun. —St. Nicholas.

Mr. Editor: Please allow me a short space in your columns. I am a little boy six years and ten months old, and am a full-blooded Methodist. My grandpa and ma on both sides were Methodists, and did all they could to train their children in the way they should go; believing that when they grew old they would not depart from it. Mamma says she has never been as good as her father and mother were; but the first thing she did when I was born was to give me back to the Lord; hoping and praying that if I should live I would be a humble instrument in his hands of doing much good. Papa gave me two rows of cotton for church purposes, the proceeds of which I hope will be several nickels. I have never been to school, but recite lessons to mamma every day. The first day of January I commenced in ah, eh; now I am spelling in three and four syllables, and can read a little in the first reader. I love to hear reading. Mamma reads "Father Jones' Talks to the Boys," "The Light in the East," and the "Wonders of the World," which I never tire of hearing. I will do anything I can for her if she will only read. The fate of poor DeLong and his unfortunate crew is enough to draw tears from the stoutest hearts. Bro. G. W. Killison is our pastor again, and the longer he stays on the work the better we love him, and think it a great treat to have him with us; but there are so many who have equal claims on him, which makes his visits like angels. We have no Sunday-school now. Papa is superintendent, and intends to make an effort to start one soon. We are hoping and praying that Pine Grove may be greatly built up, and that there may be revivals all over the work. I will answer Edna Howard's question: Christ wrote the only sentence he ever wrote on the ground. "He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone." Mamma says I talk too much, and if you are of the same opinion, Mr. Editor, my letter is doomed to that horrible waste-basket; hoping you are not, I remain, Your little friend, BEVERLY T. KING.

Mr. Editor: As I have never seen a letter in your good paper from Wesley Chapel, I will attempt to write one myself. Papa takes the ADVOCATE, and we all read it with great pleasure, especially the children's column. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. Our Sunday-school is next to the largest in Natchez. It consists of about one hundred and sixty scholars. Bro. H. B. Davis is our superintendent, and we like him very much. Bro. J. V. Ponn is our pastor, and is loved by all his members. He is very ill now, and has been for several days. We all pray that God will strengthen and restore him to health soon. We have had a protracted meeting, conducted by Bro. Kimball, of New Orleans. It lasted nearly two weeks. We received thirteen members, but expected more. Bro. Kimball has many friends in Natchez. He is one of the most powerful preachers I ever saw. I have been quite sick and could not go to church, but have been twice when he was here. I will close, hoping you will excuse me for making so many mistakes, as this is my first letter. WALTER NEILL.

Natchez, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: As so many little folks write for your good ADVOCATE, I thought I would drop you a line. I am ten years old. I am not a member of the church yet, but I hope I will soon be. We have a large Sunday-school. My teacher, Mrs. Sallie Ashley, is a lovely woman. I like her very much. The ladies Home Workers of our church are getting up a picnic for to-night. It will be a splendid affair. I believe the money is to insure the church, and for other purposes. We have preaching every Sunday by our devoted pastor. We love him very much. He loves the children. They are going to have Rebecca's well to-night. Not to draw out of anything to make anybody drunk or had, but pure, cold ice lemonade. The brass band is to be present too. Can any of my little friends tell me, Whose wife Rebecca becomes? Your little friend, LILLIE DUNCAN.

Mr. Editor: As I have never seen a letter in your good ADVOCATE, I thought I would drop you a line. I am ten years old. I am not a member of the church yet, but I hope I will soon be. We have a large Sunday-school. My teacher, Mrs. Sallie Ashley, is a lovely woman. I like her very much. The ladies Home Workers of our church are getting up a picnic for to-night. It will be a splendid affair. I believe the money is to insure the church, and for other purposes. We have preaching every Sunday by our devoted pastor. We love him very much. He loves the children. They are going to have Rebecca's well to-night. Not to draw out of anything to make anybody drunk or had, but pure, cold ice lemonade. The brass band is to be present too. Can any of my little friends tell me, Whose wife Rebecca becomes? Your little friend, LILLIE DUNCAN.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, May 19.—The trustees of the John F. Slater Educational Fund to day met here. There were present: Chief Justice Waite, President Gilman, of the Johns Hopkins University, and ex-President R. B. Hayes. Appropriations were made as follows: Tennessee, $3500; Mississippi, $2000; Louisiana, $1000; Alabama, $3000; Georgia, $1000; South Carolina, $2700; North Carolina, $2400; Virginia, $3350; Kentucky, $700; Texas, $600; Washington, D. C., $450. Total, $30,000.

NEW YORK, May 20.—Mrs. Alice Pendleton, wife of the Hon. George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, our Minister to Germany, was killed in Central Park late this afternoon. Her daughter, Jane Frances Pendleton, twenty-two years old, who was with her, was taken up unconscious, and is in the Presbyterian Hospital seriously, but not fatally hurt.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—The House Judiciary committee to-day instructed Chairman Tucker to report favorably on amendment to the Constitution declaring polygamy unlawful. There was but one member of the committee who did not agree to the action of the committee, and he only desired further time to consider it.

RICHMOND, Va., May 21.—During the day the following conventional officers were elected: Dr. McFarland, of Tennessee (Incumbent), Book Agent; J. J. John, of Texas, Secretary; Dr. D. C. Kelley, of Tennessee (Incumbent), Missionary treasurer; W. P. Harris, of Tennessee (Incumbent), Book Editor; O. P. Fitzgerald, of Tennessee (Incumbent), Nashville Christian Advocate; W. G. Cunningham, of Tennessee (Incumbent), Editor of Sunday-school publications; David Morton, of Kentucky (Incumbent), secretary of Board of Church Extension.

The Committee on Church Extension recommend the following persons to constitute the Board of Church Extension for the ensuing four years: J. S. Latham, Louisville, Ky., president; Presley Megalan, Louisville, Ky., vice-president; John W. Procter, Danville, Ky., treasurer; Managers—Rev. W. T. Harris, D. D., of Memphis Conference; Rev. T. B. Carroll, D. D., of Denver Conference; Rev. C. V. Venable, of Louisville Conference; Rev. H. C. Settle, of Louisville Conference; Rev. Samuel K. Cox, D. D., of Baltimore; Rev. J. C. Morris, of Southwest Missouri Conference; Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., of Pacific Conference; Rev. M. H. Neely, of North Texas Conference; John Overacker, of Louisville, Ky.; Hon. C. S. Gibbs, of Louisville, Ky.; Jas. H. Carlisle, D. D., of South Carolina; Jas. Q. Carter, of Louisville, Ky.; and John L. Wheat, of Louisville, Ky. The report was adopted.

MEMPHIS, May 23.—At 12:45 o'clock to-night an oil-lamp exploded in the barber shop of the steamer Dean Adams. The flames spread rapidly, and although the night watchman promptly gave the alarm the crew barely escaped with their lives. The boat was held fast to shore and burned to the water's edge.

NEW YORK, May 23.—The Cedar-hill season, which opened with a promise of exceptional success, ended prematurely yesterday because the law against betting was enforced. Without some form of wagering money the sport is impracticable in this city, not only because people generally will not go to races if they can not gamble on them, but also on account of the income from the pool-sellers and bookmakers that will be missing. The State Legislature adjourned Friday without modifying the statute in favor of the racing associations.

COLUMBIA, S. C., May 23.—The area of waters which for three days has covered the low lands of Carolina is subsiding. It has been one of the most disastrous freshets that has ever been recorded in this State. The damage to the agricultural interests is incalculable. Thousands of acres of the best lands, planted in cotton and corn, have been flooded, and the rice planters in lower Carolina have suffered greatly. The railroads have sustained great loss, and travel has been almost suspended. The stone abutments on Broad river bridge commenced to give way this evening. The destruction of cattle and live stock of every kind has been unprecedented. The waters in the Pee Dee river rose thirty-six feet in the same number of hours, and the Congaree rose over twenty feet.

PHILADELPHIA, May 23.—It is anticipated here to-night that Keely, the inventor, yesterday gave a successful exhibition of his blimpster.

NEW YORK, May 24.—The body of Dr. Dio Lewis was cremated at Fresh Pond to-day.

CHICAGO, May 24.—Nearly all the aash, door and blind factories remained on the ten-hour plan this morning. A majority of the men returned to work. Two factories are still working on the eight-hour plan, but are expected to return to the ten-hour rule in a few days.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, Miss., May 24.—The first shipment of peaches was forwarded to-day to New Orleans, being grown by T. B. Kendall. They were larger than the first shipment of other seasons. The fruit apples were also shipped to-day, and plans on Saturday. Beams are now being shipped as far distant as Denver, Colorado. Tomatoes are expected in six or eight days.

FOREIGN.

DUBLIN, May 20.—United Ireland declares that they are Nationalists sufficient in any town of Ulster to whip the rag-tag and bob-tail Orangemen into good behavior, provided the police stand aside.

LONDON, May 23.—Advices received here say that severe engagements are taking place on the Greek frontier between Turkish and Greek troops. The fighting is intermittent and extends along the frontier for a distance of fifteen miles. The heaviest fighting is at Ternofo. Many have been wounded on both sides.

LONDON, May 24.—The House of Lords, by a vote of 149 to 125, rejected the second reading of the bill legalizing the marriage with a deceased wife's sister. The Prince of Wales supported the bill. Nineteen bishops voted with the majority.

A DRUGGIST'S VERDICT: "During 30 years drug business, never have I sold an article giving such universal satisfaction as Palmer's 'Skin-Success.' People who suffered for years with various skin complaints are constantly returning cured to thank me for recommending 'Skin-Success.'"—G. R. Harris, J. C. Heights, N. J.

Bro. John Ueber's Sabbath-school will picnic at the Seashore Camp Ground, June 3. Their friends wishing to join them can obtain tickets from Bro. Ueber, 658 North Rampart. Price, $1.

The new hotel lately erected at Holly Springs by the Illinois Central Railroad Co. has been opened to the public, and travelers North and South will be accommodated in the future by taking the Illinois Central. Three meals will be set for the accommodation of travelers—i. e., going North, breakfast at 7:15; coming South, supper at 5:15; breakfast at 8:15. As the hotel is under the direct management of the road, travelers are assured that the table will be supplied with the best that the Chicago and New Orleans markets afford. The hotel is situated on the bank of the Mississippi River, and is a fine place for a picnic. It is well equipped with all the modern conveniences, and is a fine place for a picnic. It is well equipped with all the modern conveniences, and is a fine place for a picnic.

When a man is known to suffer from a deadly contagious disease, none of his friends will come near the house, there is little need to warn them off, they are all too alarmed to come near. Why is it men are not so much afraid of the contagion of vice? How dare they run the risk for themselves and children by allowing evil companions to frequent their houses? Sin is a infectious and far more deadly than small-pox or fever. Pleas, then, from any one who might lead you into it.

God tells us that he loves to be asked and is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him. He tells us that the fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous availeth much. He bids us ask and we shall receive. If a word abounds in narratives of the actual healings of things which his children have besought him to give them. Answers cover the field of providential history as flowers cover western prairie. Answered prayers have been the great power of the world. Churches in seasons of revival as we have seen great flocks of birds descend into a meadow. Answered prayers have made the pulpit of Payson and Burns and Spurgeon powerful. Answered prayers have visited sick children like angels to restore to life or if not to die, the sting of death has been turned to the song of victory. "I can not get on without three hours a day of prayer, now," said Martin Luther in the thick of his great fight with the man of sin. Are you wiser than Luther?—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.

Camp meeting.—The annual camp meeting will commence on July 7th and continue from ten to fifteen days. The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, midway between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate. The vaudeville, Sam Jones and Sam Sull, are both expected to be present and take part in the meeting. Preparations are now being made to accommodate a large crowd of visitors.

The entrance fee for the grounds is as follows: All persons over 16 years of age, admission for ten days, one day ticket, 10 cents. Children between six and twelve years—Season ticket, 25 cents; one day ticket, 5 cents.

No charge is exacted for the bathing privileges. Accommodation for ladies and gentlemen is provided, and will be provided hereafter. The admitted superiority of the bathing grounds, together with refreshing drinking water furnished from springs and drove wells, render the place exceedingly desirable for physical and mental recuperation as well as spiritual acceleration.

Reduced rates by rail over all the connecting roads for the season are as follows: All persons over 16 years of age, admission for ten days, one day ticket, 10 cents. Children between six and twelve years—Season ticket, 25 cents; one day ticket, 5 cents.

Further information concerning bathing lots and bathing tents on the grounds can be obtained from the following members of Board of trustees: J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.; W. O. W. J. Hearin, R. E. Jones, W. L. Baker, of Mobile Ala.; Dr. J. P. Griffin, Moss Point, Miss.; Dr. H. Shannon, Ocean Springs, Miss.; W. H. Foster, R. O. L. Rayne, T. J. Carver, J. H. Campman, H. Jamison, L. P. Best, P. On motion of S. K. Cox the resolution was laid on the table.

Pending the call for resolutions P. A. Peterson, chairman of the Committee on Revision, asking and obtaining permission to turn over all papers which had been referred to his committee concerning the number of appointments in presiding elder's districts on the Committee on Episcopacy.

Continued the call of Conferences, the following resolutions were presented:

North Texas—A resolution by W. H. Hughes and T. R. Parke, requesting the Bishops to publish their decisions in an appendix to the Discipline. Referred to the committee on Publishing Literature.

Northwest Texas—A resolution by J. Fred Cox, R. S. Finley, and J. K. Lane, proposing to amend Discipline, Chapter XII, Section II, paragraph 10, page 23, and at Section III, paragraph 10, page 24, in relation to the ritual for baptisms. Referred to the committee on Revision.

South Carolina—A resolution by S. A. Weber and H. F. Johnson, proposing to amend the Discipline at Answer I, paragraph 31, page 35, in reference to election of delegates to the General Conference. Referred to the committee on Revision.

St. Louis—A resolution by James Goffrow and R. M. Seruges, proposing to amend Discipline, paragraph 15, Article XIII, page 13, in relation to missions. Referred to the committee on Revision.

Southwest Missouri—A resolution signed by all the delegates of the Southwest Missouri and St. Louis Conferences, proposing to give permission to these Conferences to unite during the next four years. Referred to the committee on Boundaries.

Texas—A resolution by E. S. Smith, J. H. Pritchett, and R. S. Crawford, proposing to amend Discipline at Answer V, paragraph 45, page 49, and at answer paragraph 12, in relation to trial of preachers. Referred to special committee on Revision.

Western Virginia—A resolution by Samuel Black and W. M. Protzman, proposing to amend Discipline, Section II, Chapter X, paragraph 14, page 73, with reference to salary of presiding elders.

On motion of J. B. Martin, secretary, T. W. Crowder was elected an assistant secretary.

The Conference proceeded to take up the reports of standing committees now on the calendar in their order.

Report No. 1 of the committee on Revision was taken up and considered.

The report as amended in item first was then adopted as a whole.

The first part of the report, as adopted and amended, is as follows:

Resolved, That Section II, on "The General Rules" be amended by inserting as an introduction to paragraph 26 the following paragraph, which was formerly a part of the Discipline:

"In the latter end of the year 1730 eight or ten persons came to Mr. Wesley in London, who appeared to be deeply convinced of sin and earnestly desiring for redemption. They desired (as did two or three more the next day) that he would spend some time with them in prayer and advise them how to flee from the wrath to come, which they saw continually hanging over their heads. That he might have more time for this great work, he appointed a day when they might all come together, which from thenceforward they did every week, namely, on Thursday in the evening. To these and to as many more as desired to join with them (for their number increased daily) he gave those advantages from time to time which he judged most useful for them, and they always concluded their meetings with prayer suited to their several necessities. This was the rise of the United Societies, first in Europe and then America."

"Such a society is no other than a company of men having the form and seeking the power of godliness united in order to pray together, receive the word of exhortation, and to watch over one another in love, that they may fully each other to work out their salvation."

Report No. 1 on Boundaries was taken from the calendar, read, and on motion adopted.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Finance was read and adopted.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Finance was read, and on motion the committee was granted permission to withdraw it, and it was withdrawn.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Itinerancy was read and adopted.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Missions was read and adopted.

Pending the consideration of the reports of standing committees, it was moved to adjourn and the motion prevailed.

Before pronouncing the benediction the chair announced the following special committee, ordered on yesterday, for the consideration of laws relating to trials: E. S. Smith, N. H. D. Wilson, S. W. John, Joseph W. Lewis, R. H. Mahou, W. F. Barclay, P. Hamill.

Announcements were made, and after singing a part of the hymn, "How tedious and tasteless the hours," the benediction was pronounced by J. B. McFerrin, and the Conference adjourned.

EIGHTH DAY—MORNING SESSION.

The Conference met pursuant to adjournment. Religious service conducted by Rev. J. H. Pritchett, of the Missouri Conference. Bishop Wilson took the chair.

The call of reports of standing committees was read, when the committee on Episcopacy submitted Report No. 3 of that committee, recommending the election of four additional Bishops.

A. R. Winfield moved to amend by striking out four and inserting three.

David Morton, of the Louisville Conference, moved to amend the amendment by inserting five instead of three.

The question recurring upon the amendment of David Morton, 102 members voted in the affirmative. The chair was about putting the question on the motion for the next highest number, which was the number recommended by the committee, when George Thorneburgh made the point of order that the negative side of the motion of David Morton should be put, and that the question was not such as required the question to be put in the order of numbers proposed; and that, therefore, the motion to adopt the number four as the number of Bishops, being the report of the committee, could not be put until the amendments offered were first put.

The chair ruled the point not well taken, and an appeal being taken from the decision, the chair was not sustained. The question now being taken upon the amendment of David Morton it was lost—101 ayes, 145 nays.

The question then recurring upon the motion of A. R. Winfield, proposing to strike out four and insert three, it was not adopted. Vote 82 ayes, 156 nays.

On motion Report No. 3 of committee on Episcopacy was then adopted.

M. S. Andrews moved that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet this afternoon at 4 o'clock to elect additional Bishops just ordered.

A. S. Andrews moved as a substitute that the election of new Bishops be made the special order for Tuesday next at 11 o'clock, and the substitute was adopted.

Samuel Rodgers, of the committee on Itinerancy, presented returned memorial from Local Preachers' Conference of North Carolina, and asked that it be referred to the special committee on Trials, and it was so referred. Also certain resolutions as to opinions of Bishops, signed by J. H. Pritchett, M. M. Pugh, and by J. H. Pritchett and P. P. Ellis, and asked that they be referred to the committee on Episcopacy, and they were so referred.

P. A. Peterson, chairman of the committee on Revision, submitted Report No. 5 of that committee. It was laid on the table under the rule, and taken its place on the calendar.

Notice was given by W. M. Protzman of a minority report, which would be presented at the proper time.

David Morton presented a request from the committee on Publishing Literature, asking instructions from the Conference as follows: "Shall the committee consider any other business than that which is referred to it by the General Conference?"

On motion of Paul Whitehead, the committee was instructed to consider all questions involving our publishing interests.

J. S. Key, chairman of the committee on Missions, presented Reports Nos. 2 and 3 of that committee. They were laid on the table under the rule, and go to their places on the calendar.

D. C. Kelley, chairman of the committee on Church Extension, submitted Report No. 4 of that committee, which was laid on the table and ordered to its place on the calendar.

T. J. Magruder, chairman of the committee on Sunday-schools, submitted Report No. 4 of that committee, which was read, and on motion adopted.

Also Report No. 5 of said committee, which was read, laid on the table and ordered to its place on the calendar.

Also Report No. 6 on said committee, which was read, and on motion adopted.

Also Report No. 7 of said committee, which was read, and on motion adopted.

Richard Irby presented Report No. 1 of committee on Colportage, which was read, laid on the table, and ordered to its place on the calendar.

T. S. Garrison, chairman of the committee on Finance, submitted Report No. 7 of that committee, which was read, laid on the table, and ordered to its place on the calendar.

Also Report No. 8 of the same committee, which was read, laid on the table, and ordered to its place on the calendar.

The call was made for reports of special committees, when P. H. Whisen, chairman of the committee on Temperance, submitted Report No. 1 of that committee.

W. A. Candier moved to amend the report by adding a paragraph to change Discipline at paragraph 95, answer 3, page 124, last line, so as to strike out the word "immorality" and insert the word "immorality."

On motion the Conference adjourned. Announcements were made, and after singing, the morning session closed with benediction by Bishop Wilson.

Living Wonders.

The wife of a derymman at Fulton, New York, writes:—"Within the past seven years my husband has had two strokes of paralysis. His pulse was fast as I could count—his breath true to my touch. His body seemed a burden to him."

A month later came this report:—"His hands, which were bloodless and cold, are now natural, and the veins stand out, showing a renewed circulation. Four months later was this further report:—"My husband continues to improve. About the last of July his left leg, which had a paralytic limp, straightened out, so that he now steps evenly on both legs. The paralytic condition of the right hand and the left side of his face, which were affected by the last shock, has also disappeared."

The wife of a clerkman in Sandersville, Georgia, writes:—"I was paralyzed in body and brain. I am now the happiest being you ever beheld. Compound Oxygen wrought wonders for me. I am a marvel and a wonder to the whole county."

A daughter of Colonel Hornbrook, of Wheeling, West Virginia, writes:—"My father was completely wrecked from paralysis, was completely restored to health by the use of the Compound Oxygen Treatment."

Dr. J. W. Williamson, of Boydton, Virginia, reports a cure of one of his patients, who "had but little use of his right side; and could not walk, talk, or write. Had not been able to ride for five years. He now talks, walks, and rides well."

W. R. Flanders, Esq., writes from North Thetford, Vermont:—"A spinal complaint partially paralyzed my limbs, so that I could not walk, talk, or write. Had not been able to ride for five years. He now talks, walks, and rides well."

A clergyman of Allamakee, Iowa, writes:—"Your Compound Oxygen has worked like a charm. After three weeks' use I have increased weight, clearness of vision, freedom from incipient paralytic attacks, and good rest. What more could I ask?"

Life of Bishop Parker.—This is a book of very dear friend, and perhaps we read it with too much partiality. But certainly it was to us a most delightful book. It is in the best and purest classical style of any book of the kind ever issued from Nashville. The money and name of the author, Dr. Parker, was peculiar in that he had great strength of character without any angularities. He was great like a man and good like a woman. Such a character is very uncommon, and therefore not easily portrayed. Dr. Parker had a delicate and refined taste, but he was not a dandy. The last part of the book contains choice articles from the graceful pen of Bishop Parker while he edited the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. These are rich in spiritual thought and verbal expression. Taken altogether, it is one of our best books. Doubtless, it will do us much good for years to come.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

—When ambition, reputation and salary are in the pulpit, worldliness, pride and ease are in the pew. The gospel of Christ is changed to the gospel of self, and the masses are misled. Self never reaches humanity to save it. When the church becomes churchy and thinks more of traditions, canons, sacraments, forms, than she does of humanity, the masses are misled.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

The Old Editor and the New.

With this issue my connection with the ADVOCATE as editor ceases. For four years I have conducted its columns to the best of my energy and ability, and have found pleasure therein. That the patronizing Conferences cordially endorsed its editorial, as well as business, management was an inspiration to labor, and will be a grateful memory through life. Called to this position with some experience as a contributor to the press, and a fondness even to fascination for journalism, I have found its duties most congenial and delightful. It has been my purpose to make a religious paper, and through this medium preach a pure gospel to the ADVOCATE's thousands of readers. If the aim has been in any measure a realization, I am devoutly thankful.

In assuming charge of this office some words, "salutatory and promissory," were spoken, from which I reproduce this paragraph:

"We shall aim to be neither sectarian nor sectional, but catholic and connective. With evangelical Christians we have no quarrel. In the presence of a common enemy, and amid imperative responsibilities, Judah and Ephraim can not afford to vex each other. Our great connective enterprises shall have the warmest advocacy. Missions, church extension, Sunday-schools and our publishing interests command support, and must be emphasized. On all questions of moral reform and public virtue we shall try to speak with Christian courtesy, but with the candor and courage of profound conviction."

In the light of the past four years I would repeat those words. That sentiment has dominated the purposes of the editor in each weekly issue, however inadequate its expression.

The ADVOCATE has become dearer to me with these laborious years, and for its importance as a medium of religious communication I have an increasing appreciation. It should be liberally, loyally sustained and its efficiency made more positive and prominent. For the nearly thirty-five years of its existence this ADVOCATE has been a potential factor in Southern Methodism. In other hands, I devoutly trust, it may have a wider circle of friends and a grander career of spiritual achievement.

By action of the Executive Committee, the Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter, of the Louisiana Conference, has been elected editor pro tem. He has consented to conduct the columns of the ADVOCATE until the annual meeting of the Publishing Committee. Dr. Carter is well known in Southern Methodism as an able, eloquent preacher, and to the readers of the ADVOCATE as a scholarly, popular writer. His communications have enriched the paper from time to time, and found eager, appreciative readers. Into his safe hands I cheerfully resign this cherished trust. May he make it more and more a power for good!

To other responsibilities and duties I go in the name of the Master. I shall miss the associations of "the dear old ADVOCATE," but will crave the earnest prayers of all its readers. If the new editor will allow, I may more or less frequently seek space in his columns to talk with old friends. If not, he will find opportunity to practice his own editorial preaching and cultivate "waste-basket grace."

In retiring from this chair I invoke the Divine blessing upon the publishers, who have been more than friends, and with whom I have labored in perfect harmony; upon the new editor, whom I revere and honor as a brother beloved; upon the contributors, who have generously yielded the fruits of their pens for the good of the church; upon the CONFERENCE that loyally sustain the ADVOCATE, and the readers that wait for its weekly coming.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

FROM THE PUBLISHERS.

Referring to the above valedictory of our late editor, Bishop Galloway. We occupy a small space to express our great sorrow in this separation.

To us it is more than a sorrow; it is a bereavement. We have long admired the brilliancy of his pen; but he has endeared himself more to us as a friend and brother. The abundance of his labors has been to us a constant marvel. His editorials and supervision of the ADVOCATE appeared to be a recreation and pastime to him. His real work was performed in the field. Here and there and everywhere he was almost a constant presence, working all the while for the prosperity of the paper. The impulse thus given for good can never cease to be felt.

The four years of affectionate intercourse between ourselves and the Bishop have been of the most confidential nature. Wise in council, godly in example, he has been to us a constant benediction.

As farewells must come at last, with moistened eyes we say, Good-bye.

To Richmond and Back.

A part of the Louisiana delegation to the General Conference at Richmond, Va., left New Orleans, May 3, by the Queen and Crescent, Georgia, Pacific and Richmond and Danville Route. It was but a short time after the great floods, which did so much damage to the roads, but close connection was made at every point and we arrived in Richmond, May 5, at seven A. M. This was the quickest time made by any going the same distance. We unanimously agreed to recommend this route to all travelers northward. We were in ample time to hunt out our homes and to answer to our names at half-past nine A. M., at Centenary Church. This writer had the good fortune to be assigned as one of the guests of J. B. Pace, one of the large-hearted Methodists of Virginia in whose pleasant family three very pleasant weeks were passed. The hospitality of that home was of the elegant sort and beautiful in its simplicity.

A very large majority of the Conference was present at the opening session and continued present through nearly the whole time. The business and the talk progressed from day to day until the final wind-up at midnight Tuesday, May 25. Some times the business would get ahead of the talk, but not often. A great amount of speech seems to be necessary to accomplish a very small amount of legislation. "In a multitude of counselors there is safety."

As the work went forward some things were developed which are worthy of note. A deliberative body, where much speech is indulged, brings out the mental characteristics of its members very finely, and shows that different minds run in different channels to reach the same point. Also different minds choose different subjects and discuss them only. In illustration of this, it was observed that during the discussion of rules for the government of the Conference, several interesting speakers came promptly forward and by a scientific dissection of parliamentary law, showed us exactly what should be adopted and what should be rejected. It was further observed that when that subject was disposed of, those speakers were rarely heard again. During the discussion of this subject, it occurred to this writer, that if all the members of the body knew parliamentary law and usage perfectly, it would be a frightful evil, which would hinder more business than it would help on.

The debates on the various subjects brought before the Conference, were for the most part such as developed the importance of the proposed legislation and presented the subjects fairly before the minds of the members. Of course, there was much that was mere sound, but the discussions will bear favorable comparison with those of any Conference which this writer has attended. There were strong men, who presented strong views, in strong words.

Some important changes were made in the law of the church and some important changes that should have been effected, were left out for the next Conference. It is a matter of surprise that so important a subject as education should have received so little attention from this great body of Southern people! It is surely a vital question and if it had occupied the same time and been discussed with the same warmth as the transposition of a few words in the Discipline, a great good and a lasting good would have come to the church.

In regard to the new Bishops and the connectional officers, some of them we know to be good men and true, all of them we believe to be so, and they have the confidence of the whole body of Southern Methodism.

We had a good time on what might be called "Fraternal Day." The messenger from Canada won our hearts by his sparkling words and Dr. Milley, whose fame had preceded him long ago, settled us more firmly upon the immovable foundations of Methodist doctrine.

To say that the hospitality of Richmond was equal to the emergency, is to say very little. It was a most superb exhibit upon a colossal scale of the hospitality of the early church. There was not one flock of complaint floating in the sky. It would weary your patience to tell all that was seen in and around the historic city, so I forbear.

The trip home was not made so quickly as the trip out. Several roads were changing gauge and we fell behind just twenty-four hours. This was not a great disadvantage, as the delay afforded us an opportunity to see the great and growing city of Birmingham. Our young friend, Albert Murphy, formerly of New Orleans, showed us much, and by his quiet, yet instructive talk gave us much history of the place and its many points of interest. We visited the beautiful Lake View, nestling at the base of the mountain; also Avondale and the great furnaces, where wealth has concentrated itself for the development of the rich treasures of the surrounding country. At eleven P. M. we visited the glass furnace, to witness what is technically called "a run." Describe that sight? One of our party walked away with the determination to "get to heaven at last" if possible! The next day, after having been absent one month, we rolled into the Crescent City in one of the magnificent coaches of the Queen and Crescent and every body said "Why, how you have fattened." No wonder.

North Louisiana Notes.

MR. EDITOR: As our North Louisiana "trumpet blower" is absent in Richmond, leaving thereby North Louisiana unrepresented in the columns of the ADVOCATE, and as your correspondent has just made a short cut into the Homer district, he sends you a few notes gathered by the wayside. We were in pursuit of a runaway horse who had grown tired of the itinerant work, and had run away to escape being ridden so much. After waiting one long week we heard from him that he was on his way home—Mississippi river. We set out at once with clothes and two books to be gone, if necessary, two weeks. What we saw on this trip is what we propose to notice:

The first morning (Tuesday) we got to the beautiful little town of Minden, Rev. J. J. Billingsley, P. C., and as it was raining we thought it not improper to call. We did so, and have never yet regretted the time spent under his hospitable roof. He told me of his revival which he had last fall, and added, "It is still going on." After a few hours spent under his hospitable roof we bade him good-bye, and went on in search of that mustang horse. That night we got as far as Bro. J. Walker's, where we stopped and spent the night.

The next morning we were off by time for Arcadia, which little town we reached by 12 o'clock, and heard, much to our satisfaction, that the runaway had been caught. We got him that evening and we turned westward for Bellevue. We spent the night with Bro. J. A. Miller, and judging from the beautiful, new, neat, comfortable parsonage which we saw, and the new church, our verdict is that Bro. Miller is in possession of a noble flock.

Returning, we spent the next night with Capt. J. Y. Weeb in Minden. There we had the pleasure of attending the prayer meeting, and there we saw with our own eyes and heard with our own ears evidence sufficient to convince us that the statement made by the pastor was true. We must say the Minden prayer meeting is a grand success.

From Minden we still continued westward, and reached Bellevue in time for a good picnic dinner. So the visit to the Homer district showed us that the Lord was carrying on his works in the Homer district as well as in the Shreveport. North Louisiana is improving. So we got the mustang, and we are well pleased with the trip, and also desire to make the itinerant work attractive to him, so he will learn to continue his work of carrying the gospel.

Editorial Number Two.

THE DUMMY SERMON.

A good brother was preparing an Easter sermon under what he considered favorable circumstances. The most of his people were going to hear a noted preacher at a neighboring place. He reasoned that to study an entirely new sermon would be time and trouble thrown away; so that it would be just as well to write a page or two of new matter and tack one-half on as introductory and the other half as concluding, corollaries and preach the last year's sermon. I thought at once of the dummy engine and street railways. I thought, too, of the good old days of economy when grandmothers sewed a six inch tuck in her skirt to be let out when the bottom had so frayed as to require cutting off and rehemming. She then let out the tuck and had a new dress.

The dummy sermon is an economy in more senses than one. 1. It is an economy of grace. A man who preaches an old sermon renews it not apt to besigue the throne of grace for inspiration, fervor and the burden of souls or for faith in the efficacy of preaching to the salvation of the hearers. A preacher ceases to feel the need of grace. Every time prayer for help is suggested he says mentally, "I have a dummy. Lord, I can get on till next time without any help. Much obliged."

2. The dummy is an economy of study. This hardly needs elaboration. That a man will preach is evidence of either overweening estimate of a good sermon or an inability to produce a new one. Not that one may not preach a sermon twice or even ten times; for he may elaborate, improve or correct in many ways. But he will preach new things as well as old every time. The old sermon will be really a new one in the best sense of the word.

3. The dummy is an economy of respect. (1.) Of the audience. It imparts forgetfulness, stupidity or mental hebetude in some other form to the people. It implies that I forget or need to be told again or that my taste for the new value of the kingdom is not to be satisfied. I suspect the preacher is either selfish or ignorant. (2.) Of the occasion. I do not mean Easter merely, but every occasion called for preaching. As Easter is a resurrection, so every proclamation of a risen Savior is a resurrection of my faculties, aspirations and expectations. He that can see the sun rise over boundless fields of ineffable beauty and not feel enough to take on newness of life in mind and heart is dead indeed, to the occasion. (3.) Of his calling. In that I am doing business for another. I must get word from Jehovah today. I must write and speak what is fitting now. My ministry is a living ministry. I have no continuing city—no well-prepared discourses that are to be peddled, shant and coronal of my immortality either here or hereafter. My calling is my immortality. Losing that, I die inevitably. Cleaving to that I can not perish. The whirlwind is not the dust it raises or the reed it shakes. It is a whirlwind where there is no dust or reeds. The call of the ministry is the Divine whirlwind sweeping (sand or no sand) the entire stretch of life's pilgrimage.

4. But the dummy is an economy of trouble. (1.) Many who hear the dummy ought to be roused out of their deadness. But they say, "That's just what we heard this time last year." It is the same whistle, the same rattle, the same jingle, the same everything. The hearer thinks he is established in the faith. Relatively he and the preacher are the same distance apart. Absolutely they are on opposite sides of an impassable gulf. They neither approach nor recede. Fixed—one is pulpit furniture; the other belongs to the pew. Neither wakes to the awful fact that life moves and thinks and creates.

5. The dummy is an economy of all those joys and advantages which grow out of a review of the past. To these, the preacher of the dummy is an utter stranger. He is going round in a treadmill. A peculiar jump at places now and then indicates to him that he has just passed the loose or broken cog another time. He will run on the same through life. His pet phrase of immortal life is "Electricity shall run its course round," thus showing that he believes eternity to be the original treadmill from which all the short lives of men flow off by centrifugal force before it learned how to adjust itself centripetally.

6. But the dummy does carry to and from their places of business men and women in the humbler walks of spiritual life. I have ridden behind the dummy with the washerwomen, the milk-women, the sewing-women, the mechanics, the scavengers and the stately rich man and other classes. I have thanked God for the poor, sallow, wan face of the seamstress, as she sat restlessly dreaming in her seat, while the prosy dummy skurried and screamed away toward her home. Tears now and then made her large, lustreless eyes swim in their hollow sockets. But it was not the dummy's scream or skow. It was a memory of the gone, a glimpse of the coming, cold hands warming again, still hearts throbbing again, pale faces flushing again, closed eyes opening again, lost ones found again, distant heaven near again. And the prosy dummy bumped, jumped, thumped along, here it went up, there down; around a corner, down a lane—steaming, screaming, raking, scraping, slowing, stopping. The pale woman rose with her bundle of work, the door opened, she stepped out. Upon the banks of the great river she walked and stepping into a boat, whose white wake was already unfurled, she pushed out toward the setting sun; and on the deepening twilight—I thought the sail became an angel's wing. Who knows? But I turned. The dummy was gone again to bring another weary sewing-woman to the river shore.

Capital and Labor.

BY REV. J. H. A. ADAMS, D. D.

Capital and labor are dependent on each other like husband and wife. The wife may act unwomanly and harass her husband, cause him to abhor and even abandon his home; but by such course she does not enhance her own well being. She will find in the end that her husband's woe is woe to herself also.

Workmen may harass capitalists, impede their business and induce them to discontinue their enterprises; but the evil consequences will be felt by capitalists and workmen alike. When the husband has no income, the wife will be penniless. When capitalists cease to give employment to the dependent classes, laborers will suffer want. What husband and wife are at war with each other, their temporal affairs inevitably retrograde. Peace assures thrift; strife begets poverty. On the other hand, when the husband industriously provides and communicates, the wife gratefully preserves, when both consult together, act in harmony, prosperity will certainly ensue. In the business world thrift will also be secured, if capital and labor recognize their mutual dependence, conceding that, though each party has inalienable rights, neither has any right to trample the rights of the other under foot.

In difficulties between husband and wife wicked outside parties are often the cause. Many a family brewer of mischief has converted a few matrimonial paradises into miniature hells. The poison of slanderous men has destroyed the happiness of many family circles. If by occasional matrimonial infidelities, third parties would keep aloof, peace and happiness would soon be restored. It is for this reason that the word "mother-in-law" has so much odium attached to it. She stands with her daughter or her son—fairly reinforcing one of the belligerent couple.

In the numerous labor troubles there is almost in every instance third parties which kindle and feed the fires of discord. It is the labor hating demagogues, broken-down lawyers, gutter politicians, beer-sipping hawlers, who instigate the honest, but ignorant, and hence peace-loving, workmen, causing them to strike, institute boycotts, cherish feeling and fan the flame of war. Like bad boys who find pleasure in the bloody fight of dogs, demagogues find chief delight when they are severely lacerated, these demagogues find pleasure in the strife between capital and labor. But not only pleasure, but some of these base instigators of those fierce contentions, but a pecuniary benefit. Fomenting strikes is their remunerative avocation. The majority of the instigators of strikes are lazy bums who seek to make a living by abusing the confidence of the unwary workmen. Some of the strikers may have justifiable cause for complaint; but, because they usually identify themselves with patent loiterers and demagogues, they deprive themselves of the sympathy of the thinking classes. It is truly sad that strikers affiliate even with the anarchists and embrace the principles of "Possession is robbery; down with the robbers." After the general rule the income of the laborer would be woefully low. When nobody can do anything his own, the laborer will be penniless. Should, however, the anarchist in the social upheaval and evolution become a capitalist, he will soon have to endure what capitalists before him endured. He will have to swallow the same medicine which he previously prescribed for others.

The Labor Arbitration Bill pending in Congress may, possibly set matters right. When friction and strife between capital and labor become, this commission is to investigate the true inwardness of the difficulty and facilitate arbitration and compromise. I pray that Congress may create this commission and thereby protect well-meaning but ill-guided workmen.

Munsey's Sermons—Second Series.

We are under obligation to Bishop Keener for a copy of the above volume of sermons. Nine editions of the first series were sold, and this was an indication to the Bishop of the popularity of the work. We are hardly capable of judging the merits of the sermons of this remarkable preacher, but refer the reader to the Bishop's "Preface to the Second Series" for a clear judgment. Munsey's powers of reasoning and his wonderful imagination and vivid illustrations are so far beyond our reach that we have to sit down in utter amazement at his feat. We think, however, that the faithfulness and fearlessness of the true pastor is exhibited more in this second volume than in the first. The man who can look his congregation in the face and say, "I believe there are worse men in this house than Cain," has risen far above the ordinary level. To us these sermons appear to be far more practical than those of the first volume. They seem to be pervaded through and through with an intense practicalness. Take this passage from the first sermon in this series:

"A man may smile and weep at church; may sing like an archangel, and pray like David in the public congregation; may be abundant in alms, and talk in sanctified tones about earth's vanities and heaven's glories, and yet be a fiend at home. Probably the greatest defect of my kind hearers, who wait from Sabbath to Sabbath upon my imperfect ministry, is a lack of home religion—a defect which is fatal to the religious prosperity of any congregation and fatal to their personal experience in religion. Why is your domestic comfort impaired by family jars and schisms? Because your home religion is defective. Why are your children unconverted? Because your home religion is defective. Why are our prayer meetings so utterly void of religious interest? Why have we no revival here? The answer comes from heaven, like a bolt of crashing thunder: Your home religion is defective. Why do not Christians die as they formerly did? Because their home religion is defective. Why does not Methodism in this community prosper as well as in others? Because of defective piety in Methodist families. 'Go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee.' Tell your families. Look at the old ashes upon your family altars. The fire has been out a long time. Kindle the fire again, and when God blesses you, tell it."

Such practical preaching is found all through the volume. The book is on sale at the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Reminiscences of an Old Itinerant—No. 5.

Mr. Editor: I do not think I ever rebelled against a call to preach the gospel except for a few moments when the impression was first made on my mind that if I did my whole duty I would have to preach. I did not see how it was possible that I ever could preach as I had, according to my estimation, none of the natural or acquired abilities essential to a preacher. But while I did not resist the movements of the Spirit that prompted me to feel I ought to prepare for the ministry, I proceeded toward a final settlement of this question of my boyhood slowly, cautiously and prayerfully. From the hour of my conversion I felt a great love for others, and a great desire to treat them to become partakers of the great salvation which I so richly enjoyed. But I allowed myself to think: this was the common experience of all truly converted persons, and that I ought not to lay any stress upon it as an intimation that I ought to become a preacher. I did not, however, resist those feelings that prompted me to weep, and desire and pray for the salvation of my fellow-men. I yielded to them and encouraged their growth. I sometimes, without consulting anyone about it, I felt prompted when called on to take part in a prayer or class meeting, to give words of exhortation and though it was a heavy cross I generally felt benefited myself for taking it up whether anyone else felt so or not. It was in the summer of 1822 that I first began to give a few words of exhortation in the social meetings of the church. In the meantime the conviction that I ought to prepare for the work of the ministry became a settled fact. My mind became full of the subject. Certain passages of Scripture seemed to be spoken to my very heart, such as: "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and shew my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sin. Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." These two passages of Scripture rolled through my mind with solemn force, for several days I opened my Bible without reference to any particular lesson to read, my eyes rested on Isaiah xli. Beginning with the first verse, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach." I read to the end of the third verse, and it seemed to be the voice of God speaking through my whole being and judging my whole duty as a preacher of the gospel. I can not describe the feelings I had at that moment. I was overwhelmed with a solemn awe. The Spirit of God came down upon me, and seemed to pervade my whole being. The verse I read seemed to be the voice of God speaking from above to my immortal soul. I did not resist, but yielded to the overwhelming power of the Spirit, and said, It is enough: I am called of the Lord, and from this hour I will seek the best preparation for that work that is in my power. Early in 1823 I made known my settled convictions about preaching to our new pastor, Rev. Daniel DeVine, who recommended me to apply for license to exhort, and do what I could in that capacity until my way should be providentially opened for a higher office. I was licensed as an exhorter early in 1823, and acted in that capacity until I was licensed to preach, October 9, 1824. I was indeed a very timid youth and often felt very sensibly my want of literary qualifications for the pulpit, but my course was continually onward and I was often happy in my work. When I have seen, as I often have, what troubles some men have involved themselves in for five, ten or more years by fighting against a call to preach, and if they did not utterly backslide, had to be whipped up to their duty by the almighty hand of God laid on them in various ways after the loss of many years of usefulness, I have ever felt thankful to him who called me into the ministry that I never rebelled against that call. The way at first was dark and full of difficulties, but I was satisfied that Infinite Wisdom made no mistakes in moving men by the Holy Ghost to preach the gospel, and as soon as I was convinced of my call I betook myself to an earnest preparation for the holy calling.

J. G. JONES,
Hazenport, Mississippi.
Indian Village.

Mr. Editor: When the appointments were published after Conference, and my name appeared opposite Indian Village, some of my friends, who had never heard of the place before, concluded that I had been sent to preach to the Indians, and their good hearts began at once to be moved with sympathy. Their minds traveled back over scenes of savage cruelty of which they had read. They could hear the savage war-whoop, the screams of perishing women and children, and they could see my poor scalp fastened to some red warrior's belt; and, when I reached my work, letters of condolence poured in on me. One good sister desired a lock of my hair before the terrible savage should get hold of it. I guess I would have given her the whole head to have saved it from so terrible a fate; but when I reached this place I did not find that there was any danger. It is true that at one time these people pitched their wigwams where Indian Village now stands, and it was from this fact that I derived its name; but that has been many years ago, and now they are all gone. But, though these braves are gone, we have many valiant warriors here still, though of another type. We have here the Bryans, Griggses, Crocker, Stegall, Collins, Vaughan, Anders, and a host of others, in any of whom the preacher always finds a warm friend, and instead of losing his scalp he finds friends who sympathize with him, and hold up his hands when they are weary.

Everything is moving along smoothly on my work, and I believe everything is improving. Indeed, with good Sunday-schools and good week-day schools a country is bound to improve. The school at Indian Village is under the care of Prof. Harris and his noble wife, either of whom would lend us to any position. The people love to go to church up here, and we have large congregations. Some of the people walk five or six miles to attend.

We had one of our best men taken from us on the twenty-eighth of last month. W. W. Patrick was one of the leading citizens of this parish. He was born in Georgia, May 10, 1825, and came to this parish about thirty-eight years ago, where he has resided ever since. He will not only be missed by the church, of which he was a faithful steward, but by the whole parish. He was prepared to go, and died in peace. Suitable resolutions were passed by the Quarterly Conference and the Sunday-school regarding his death.

At the Quarterly Conference of the Indian Village circuit, held May 1, 1886, the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, Bro. W. W. Patrick has been taken from our midst, leaving a vacancy in our body which can not be easily filled; And, whereas, Bro. Patrick had been for a number of years a faithful member of our church and this body, and in going and out among us had gained the confidence and esteem of all his brethren; therefore, be it Resolved, That while we are submissive to the will of a good and wise Providence, we can not but feel that we sustain in the death of Bro. Patrick a great loss, the church a devoted son, and this body a faithful member.

Resolved, That we extend to his family our sympathy, and pray that God's richest blessings rest upon her and all who share her bereavement.

Resolved, That we furnish his family a copy of these resolutions, and that we have them published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

A Change of Time.

In the ADVOCATE of May 20, I have a notice saying the annual meeting of the Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society would be June 23 and 24. Since that has been published I find it will be necessary to hold the meeting one week later in order to secure the attendance of the recording secretary and others whose attendance is very much desired.

The society will convene in Raymond at ten o'clock Wednesday morning, June 30, and will continue two days. Delegates will please note this change.

Who Will Help Us?

We hope to build a Methodist Church in New Albany, Union county, Miss. New Albany is on the line of the Memphis, Birmingham and Atlantic railroad. We are expecting the Gulf and Sulphur Island road to cross at this place. If we succeed in building a good house of worship here for our church, this will be at no distant day one of our very best stations.

We are unable to build without aid. Our church is very weak; we must have help. We hope that many sisters will aid us, and we believe they will. The brethren will not forget us and leave us alone. Some have already aided us; others have promised help. We have commenced to build, and have faith to believe the Lord will open the way for us. Please help a brother who is laboring on a very small salary that he may accomplish this good work. Send by postoffice order to Rev. D. L. Cogdell, Ripley, Tippah county, Miss.

MYSTERY AND LIMITATION.—It is a real world we are in, and we are real men and women in it. We dwell in mystery and within limitations, but over and above the mystery and the limitation is an indestructible source of reality. I am and I know that I am. Standing on this solid rock, I find reality about me, nor can I be persuaded that other beings and things are dreams or shadows. It is in my very nature to believe in reality, and so I demand definite conceptions, not rest in vagueness or be content with formless visions and their abstractions. Thus the human mind has always worked and thus it always will work—leaving behind it the logicians and philosophers in action, in the free exercise of the logic of human nature. I do not absolutely know what sort of a world this will be when it is regenerated, but I must have some conception of it. I do not absolutely know what heaven is, but I think of it as I think of the world, some ideal, definite conception. The highest form under which we can now think are art-forms—the proportion of statuary and architecture, the color of painting, and music. The former are limited and address a mere sense of beauty, but music addresses the heart and has its vibration amongst the feelings and covers their whole range. Hence music has been chosen to hold and express our conception of moral perfection. Nor is it an arbitrary choice, but is made for the reasons that music is the utterance of the heart; it is an expression of morality, and it is an infinite language. Before the sun of heaven as a place of endless song can prevail, it must unfold all this sort of logic of the human heart. We so represent it because when we frame our conception of heaven or moral perfection, we find certain things, and when we look into the nature and operation of music we find the same things, namely: Ideation, Sympathy, Emotion, Adoration.—Rev. Dr. Munger in Christian Thought.

Also Report No. 7 of said committee, which was read, and on motion adopted. Also Report No. 8 of said committee, which was read, and on motion adopted.

D. C. Kelley submitted Report No. 6 of the Committee on Church Extension, which was read, and on motion adopted. Also Report No. 7 of said committee, which was read, and on motion adopted.

R. H. Mahon, chairman of the committee on Boundaries, submitted Report No. 6 of that committee, which was read, and on motion adopted. Also Report No. 7 of said committee, which was read, and on motion adopted.

T. S. Garrison, chairman of the committee on Finance, submitted Report No. 3 of that committee, which was read, and on motion adopted. Also Report No. 4 of said committee, which was read, and on motion adopted.

A. G. Haygood, chairman of the committee on Episcopacy, submitted Report No. 4 of that committee. The report was taken up by sections, and items 1 and 2 were adopted.

The question being on the adoption of the third item of the report of the committee on Episcopacy, it was put to vote and declared adopted. The fourth item was then voted on and adopted, as was also the fifth and last.

The Secretary: I move now the adoption of the resolutions as a whole.

The Chair: These are distinct, independent items, and any adoption of a whole is not in order. The question now before the Conference is the report of the Special Committee on Expenses of Delegates, which the Secretary will read.

A vote was then taken on the report of the committee, and the same was declared adopted.

Bishop Granbery (presiding): The Conference will now adjourn for the day.

TENTH DAY—MORNING SESSION.

The regular order of business being taken up, the rule was suspended to take up the call for memorials, petitions, and appeals, and the fraternal messenger, Rev. C. H. Phillips, from the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, was introduced.

The secretary read the credentials of Mr. Phillips, which were signed by Bishop L. H. Halsey, and F. M. Hamilton, secretary, and also a memorial from that body.

The chair:

I am sure I speak the sentiments of this body when I say that in view of our past relations, the religious interests of the colored people of this country, especially in view of our relations to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, we will always feel a profound interest in the religious progress of that body. I have the pleasure of introducing, in behalf of that body, as a fraternal delegate, Rev. C. H. Phillips, who will address the Conference.

On motion of D. C. Kelley, of the Tennessee Conference, the memorial from the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America was referred to the committee on Fraternal Correspondence.

The call by Conference was then proceeded with as follows:

Baltimore Conference—A memorial in relation to title deeds for parsonage property. Referred to the committee on Finance.

Central Mexican Mission Conference—A memorial with reference to boundary of the Central Mexican Mission Conference. Referred to the committee on Boundaries.

Mississippi Conference—A memorial to amend Discipline in relation to the ordination of deacons and elders. Referred to the committee on Itinerancy.

North Carolina Conference—Memorials from the Yadkinville circuit, the Morganton circuit, the Hickory station, for division of the North Carolina Conference. Referred to the committee on Boundaries.

South Georgia Conference—A memorial to add a new clause to the Discipline respecting fraud and dishonesty. Referred to the committee on Itinerancy.

Southwest Missouri Conference—A resolution by W. M. Protzman and others, proposing to amend Discipline, paragraph 143, page 171, in relation to the support of the preachers. Referred to the committee on Revision.

Also a resolution by W. A. Candler and J. D. Candler to amend the Discipline, Section 111, paragraph 50, Answer 4, page 54, so as to provide for a recording steward for the District Conference. Referred to the committee on Revision.

A. G. Haygood presented a resolution requesting the delegations of Conferences having Conference organs to report the same to this Conference, with the names of the editors chosen for the same by the Annual Conference. He said:

Mr. President, here is a resolution that I am sure the General Conference will adopt in a moment if they find out what it is. This resolution simply eventuates action that the General Conference takes every session concerning our Conference papers. It is signed by W. H. Morgan, A. R. Winfield, A. G. Haygood, and others. I can not see any grounds for objection to it. It is what is done all the time.

R. B. Crawford:

I wish to ask of the chair whether or not if the Conference adopt that paper it will confer upon the Bishop the right to appoint the editors selected by these delegations for four years or longer? Does that confer that right, or is further action necessary?

Bishop Hargrove (presiding):

The General Conference is competent to say what their pleasure is in regard to it. Editors have been appointed under that action for years and years.

R. B. Crawford:

I understand there is a difference of opinion on that question; and if so, I ask if it would be proper to amend that resolution by providing in it that these editors so selected, may be appointed for longer than four years?

A. G. Haygood:

Certainly. There is no doubt in the world but the gentlemen on that committee would be glad to put that into the resolution.

R. B. Crawford:

I ask, if it is in order, that that amendment be adopted now.

Bishop Hargrove (presiding):

It is so ordered. What power will the Bishops have in case of an editor's death?

R. B. Crawford:

tion V., paragraph 61, Answer 2, page 85; and at Section VII., paragraph 67, Answer 2, page 90, in relation to the time of the publication of a traveling preacher for deacons' orders. Referred to the committee on Itinerancy.

North Alabama Conference—A resolution by A. C. Miller and W. C. Wheeler, proposing to amend Discipline, Question 5, page 141, by adding the words "or fails to pay his debts." Referred to the committee on Revision.

North Carolina Conference—A resolution by D. W. Bain, C. G. Montgomery, and others, in relation to the division of the North Carolina Conference. Referred to the committee on Boundaries.

North Georgia Conference—A resolution by A. G. Haygood and W. H. Potter to amend Discipline, paragraph 60, Answer 2, page 72, so as to permit the Bishop to appoint a preacher as an agent of our benevolent institutions. Referred to the committee on Revision.

Also a resolution by H. H. Parks and W. D. Anderson, proposing to amend Discipline, paragraph 70, page 102, in relation to reports of local preachers to the Quarterly Conference. Referred to the committee on Revision.

Also a resolution by W. D. Anderson and I. E. Shimato proposing to amend Discipline, paragraph 60, Answer 3, page 72, in relation to authority of presiding elders. Referred to the committee on Revision.

South Carolina Conference—A resolution by J. Faller Lyon and W. T. D. Cousar, proposing to amend Discipline, Chapter X., paragraph 141, page 169, with reference to salary of preachers. Referred to the committee on Revision.

Also a resolution by J. Faller Lyon and A. M. Chrellzberg, proposing to amend Discipline, Section XVI., paragraph 92, Answer 2, page 116; and Answer 4, page 117, with reference to trustees of districts. Referred to the committee on Finance.

South Georgia Conference—A resolution to add a new clause to the Discipline respecting fraud and dishonesty. Referred to the committee on Itinerancy.

Southwest Missouri Conference—A resolution by W. M. Protzman and others, proposing to amend Discipline, paragraph 143, page 171, in relation to the support of the preachers. Referred to the committee on Revision.

Also a resolution by W. A. Candler and J. D. Candler to amend the Discipline, Section 111, paragraph 50, Answer 4, page 54, so as to provide for a recording steward for the District Conference. Referred to the committee on Revision.

A. G. Haygood presented a resolution requesting the delegations of Conferences having Conference organs to report the same to this Conference, with the names of the editors chosen for the same by the Annual Conference. He said:

Bishop Hargrove (presiding):

It is so ordered. What power will the Bishops have in case of an editor's death?

R. B. Crawford:

I suppose the Conference delegations can nominate his successor. I have no speech to make, but I offer that amendment.

G. W. Briggs:

I would say for Bro. Crawford's information that there is on the calendar now a report from the committee on Revision, and when that report is taken up in its order there will be an amendment to insert the words which the brother has suggested. There will be a motion to amend that report so as to provide for these objections. This resolution had better be passed now, and when this report now on the calendar comes up from the committee on Revision there will be a motion to amend the report.

R. B. Crawford:

set upon this without referring it to a committee. Therefore, I move its reference to the committee on Publishing Interests.

A. S. Andrews:

Let us withdraw the amendment, because we can bring the same thing up in the report we have from the committee on Revision.

A. G. Haygood:

I object to that reference to the committee on Publishing Interests, and I move as an amendment that it be referred to the committee on Revision.

D. C. Kelley:

I accept that amendment.

A vote was taken, and it was referred to the committee on Revision.

Paul Whitehead offered the following:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this General Conference that neither the book agent nor Book Committee have any right or authority to refuse to receive an advertisement for our church papers, or to transact the ordinary business at our Publishing House with any firm or person upon the ground of supposed immorality of such firm or person to the agent or House or any official connected therewith.

In proposing this resolution we do not intend to dig up the remains of a dead personal controversy, but we want to save the principle involved.

A motion was here made to lay the resolution on the table, which was voted down.

J. B. McFerrin:

Mr. President, if the General Conference in its wisdom sees proper to elect a book agent and editor of the Christian Advocate and of any other paper or periodical, and appoint a committee of fifteen, nine laymen and four clerical, and they think that that agent and editor and committee are not proper judges of what ought to go into the Christian Advocate as an advertisement, then I think they would have very little confidence in the judgment, integrity or intelligence of said book agent and editor and said committee.

If the General Conference proposes to specify what advertisements shall go in, and construe the opinions of those who advertise, why all right. If, however, the book agent and committee and editor combined have not sufficient intelligence enough to supervise the publication, you perhaps had better strengthen the committee, or do something to give them light by which they are to be guided. If a matter of that sort should come up, and there should be a difference of opinion between the agent and the man advertising, who is to settle the question? Are we to wait until the next General Conference, or will you submit that to the judgment of the agent, the Book Committee and the editor? If they are to do exactly what you tell them and exactly in the way you tell them, then they have nothing to do but to work as a machine, or type-writer, to put down what you dictate.

W. H. Morgan:

I move the reference of that resolution to the committee on Publishing Interests.

P. Whitehead:

Why should we do that, Mr. President, with so plain a point? The resolution does not propose to take away the power of the book agent or editor. It simply says that they shall not have arbitrary authority in the direction I have indicated. Now, can not we deal with this resolution right here without referring it to any committee. The principle of the thing is what we are after.

David Morton:

I fully concur in the opinion of Dr. Whitehead, and can reach a conclusion now just as well as at any other time. It is a plain proposition that can be settled in a moment.

H. J. Adams:

The resolution offered by the brother from the Virginia Conference is based upon an alleged fact. Now, I claim that this Conference should have an opportunity to investigate that fact. I can not understand this movement unless it is intended to censure the venerable book agent. I hold, therefore, we are prepared to vote in this hurried manner upon this very important question. Something is due the book agent for the services he has rendered the church and the priceless services he has rendered the church in connection with that House in the last eight years, and now without a word of proof, without a moment for investigation to arraign him here and condemn him and place him under charges and give direction and positive injunction as to how he shall act in the future, is wrong. I want justice to be done, and if the agent has erred, why, we are all prone to err, and I have no doubt he will submit to be admonished.

J. W. Tucker, of the Florida Conference:

There is no reflection in that resolution upon the venerable agent of the Publishing House.

J. B. McFerrin:

I have very little personal feeling in this matter if I know myself, but if this Conference intends to pass a resolution involving a fact and involving the action of one of the officers of the General Conference, and not give him an opportunity to be heard, then I have mistaken this body. I do not think they will do that. I do not plead anything myself on the score of immorality or old age. (Laughter.) I feel myself very competent to defend every thing that I have done and every thing I have said, provided I have the chance. Refer this to a committee, and let the members of the resolution state their facts and summon the book agent to answer them. If found guilty of any impropriety he is willing to suffer any penalty you may deem proper to inflict.

P. Whitehead:

There is no attempt to try or censure anybody. There is a proposition to announce a rule for the future. That is all.

W. W. Duncan:

I rise to speak to the motion to refer, and give a reason why. Our Advocate is akin. They are edited by accredited brethren in our church. You can not separate the connectional interests.

P. Whitehead, interrupting:

Is not the brother speaking to the main question?

W. W. Duncan:

No, sir. I am arguing in favor of referring this to the committee on Publishing Interests. It is too grave a matter to be laid aside under the pressure of supposed personality. It has come to pass that the church of the future can not be bettered by the experience of the past without considering an effort to improve upon the future as personally referring to the affairs of the past, we never can legislate for the future of the church.

P. Whitehead:

I have no objection, Mr. President, to refer it.

The President:

Then the question is on referring the resolution to the committee on Publishing Interests.

The resolution was referred.

A resolution signed by J. D. Blackwell and another was also referred to the committee on Publishing Interests, providing for the publication of Bishops' addresses for general circulation.

The following resolutions, signed by W. C. Ireland and others, were referred to the committee on Revision.

1. Answer 2, Section II., Chapter III., paragraph 60, page 70.

2. Answer 3, Section II., Chapter IX., page 72.

3. Allowing the Western Virginia Conference to vote on changing the name to West Virginia Conference.

A resolution "in relation to trustees of the Publishing House" was referred to the committee on Publishing Interests.

A motion of Secretary Young, the memorial presented from the Baltimore Conference, which was this morning referred to the committee on Revision, was referred to the committee on Finance.

J. W. Hill:

I offer the following resolution: "Resolved, that we take from the table the resolution that the presiding Bishop appoint some member of the Conference to furnish information respectfully to the Associated Press of our proceedings."

Secretary Young:

There is no resolution laying on the table; but Dr. Morgan, of the Tennessee Conference, was about to move such a resolution when the chair suggested that it be deferred to a more convenient season, and that was done without the Conference laying anything on the table.

The President:

So that resolution itself is out of order. We will now proceed to the call of reports from standing committees.

Bishop Hargrove (presiding):

Our fraternal delegate, the Rev. William Briggs, fraternal messenger from the Methodist Church of Canada, is about to take leave of this General Conference, and you will be pleased to hear him.

Rev. William Briggs:

Mr. President and Brethren, as the train propose to take on Monday morning will depart before the opening of the Conference, I embrace this latest opportunity of taking leave of the Conference, which I do, sir, with very great sorrow; for inclination strongly prompts, but time will not permit my remaining longer. I have been here scarcely a week, and yet I have felt and do feel so much of you and with you that I can now enter more fully into the sentiment of the saying of a countryman of my childhood's country, who, on this side of the Atlantic, was asked where he was born. He said he was born in Ireland, but he had lived long enough in America to become a native. (Laughter.) A little longer, sir, and I will feel myself a native Southern. (Laughter.) I must remember, as I do, that Conference time is very precious; and I must also remember, what I have long been remembering with a wholesome dread, not to be a living illustration of what Mr. Walker in his dictionary terms a preacher, "One who harangues tediously in discourse." (Laughter.) We never hear that on the Conference floor at all. Now, sir, I have to make a report to my Conference—and it is a very formidable proceeding—of this reception, and give an account of the way in which my messenger has discharged his duty, and the way in which he was received by the Conference to which he was appointed. Sir, I can give an account right up to the absolute word "perfection," in every sense and good meaning of that word. I was a very short time in this Conference until the Bishop occupying the chair told the Conference that the Canadian type of Methodism was the best that he had known—or one of the best. I will take it the best. (Laughter.) And immediately I mentally voted "concurrence." (General laughter.) Then, sir, I think, on the same day, a distinguished member of this Conference really a glory—and I was rather amazed at the courage, but not at all astonished at the opinion expressed queried whether the best government in the world was to be found on this side of the Atlantic, and I did not vote "non-concurrence," even to that statement. (Laughter.) And whether I took it from the chair, or whether I took it from the body of this Conference, I am sure that any Conference will vote a hearty concurrence in the sentiments expressed. Now, sir, I take my leave with this statement about Southern Methodism; that it is a conservative and liberal Methodism, or a liberal and conservative Methodism, keeping the roots and vital principles of our old church, untouched, untrammeled, and has maintained her place and increased her original numbers. That is what we are trying to do in our Canada Methodism and what you are trying to do here, and I wish with all my heart for the successful work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Bishop Hargrove (presiding):

In behalf of the Conference you will permit me to say that we have heard with very great pleasure of the fully, strength, energy, and progress of Methodism in your great country, and we shall remember not only the message which we have had the special pleasure to hear expressed in language so eloquent and so forcibly used, but we shall remember you, sir, with exceeding pleasure. And we trust, sir, that your feeling of nativity in Southern Methodism may itself be realized, and if you should be so attached to us that you shall move down to this region, we will give you a most hearty welcome. (Applause.)

The regular order of business was resumed, which was the call of the Conferences for the reports of standing committees.

A. S. Andrews:

I wish, sir, to make Report No. 4 from the committee on Education, and in mercy to your secretary, as my chirography is very difficult to decipher, I hope you will allow me to read it.

P. A. Peterson moved that the report be adopted.

W. W. Walker:

I regret very much that the able report of the committee on Education, generally heard by the members of this Conference, I doubt whether any paper has been presented to this body more worthy to be regarded as the expression of our sentiments in reference to the question of Christian education. I think that report expresses the views we entertain on that subject with as much force and intelligence as we could have had it expressed in any other way. In making these remarks I wish to call attention to the report, and I hope the members of the Conference will have it printed, and that they will take time to read it. Its expression of sentiment and opinion are worthy of the church.

A. H. Mitchell thought the report should have dwelt with more emphasis on the subject of physical education, and thought that people would be better off if they went to bed earlier, and got up with the sun.

Samuel Black thought the paper one of the ablest that had been presented to the Conference, and he thought its precepts should be heeded.

The report was then unanimously adopted.

The report of the committee on Confederation of Methodism was then read, whereupon M. B. Chapman offered the following substitute:

Resolved, That this General Conference reaffirms the provisions of the original "Plan of Separation" and of the Cape May Commission; and in order to further adjustment of the relations between the two great bodies of Episcopal Methodists in this country, this body shall elect a commission of seven, four of whom shall be members of some Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and three of whom shall be laymen, who shall meet a like commission which the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to meet in the City of New York in 1888, is hereby respectfully requested to appoint; and this joint commission shall be charged with the duty of formulating some plan of Methodist comity at home and co-operation in foreign missionary fields, whereby there shall be avoided, as far as possible, the useless expenditure of men and money arising from the occupation of territory by both churches, where one Methodism meets all the demands. And if the plan so devised meets the approval of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, then it shall go into immediate effect.

W. A. Candler:

I move that the report of the committee and the substitute offered by Bro. Chapman be over and be printed in the Daily Advocate.

A vote was then taken on Mr. Candler's motion, and it prevailed by a vote of 172.

On motion, the Conference then adjourned.

ELEVENTH DAY—MORNING SESSION.

The devotional exercises of the morning were conducted by Rev. George Needham, of the Denver Conference.

Bishop J. C. Keener took the chair.

The Committee on Revision submitted a report, through P. A. Peterson, its chairman, which was laid over under the rule.

At this point Bishop H. N. McTyeire assumed the chair.

The committee on Quarterly Review, through J. W. Hinton, presented a "statement of managers of the Quarterly Review of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," and J. W. Hinton moved (seconded by A. S. Andrews) that the same be referred to the Special Committee on the Quarterly Review.

The call of standing committees being completed, J. S. Key, of the Georgia Conference, chairman of the Standing Committee on Missions, said:

I arise to move that the order of business be suspended long enough to take up the Report No. 5 of the Committee on Missions. That report has reference to the organization of the Board of Managers of Missionary Societies. The report was read for Saturday. It is on the calendar, and I move to take it up out of its order.

The motion was carried, and Rule 15 was suspended. The report was read by the secretary and was adopted.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Itinerancy, the first report in its order on the calendar, was then taken up.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Church Extension was taken up, and on motion adopted.

Report No. 3 of the same committee was read.

J. B. McFerrin:

I would inquire if that plan has been considered by the Board of Church Extension, and whether they recommend it or not. Have they not recommended it? and do they recommend the addition of the report or the substance of it as contained in the report just read?

C. W. Carter:

They have been considered by the Board, and they unanimously recommended it. I hope it will be adopted by this Conference.

A vote was taken, and it was adopted.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Revision was taken up and read.

W. W. Bennett:

I do not believe we are prepared to vote intelligently on that question. It would be more satisfactory if when a section is to be amended plans were taken to give as the section as it is proposed to amend it.

A. S. Andrews:

The law requires it.

P. A. Peterson:

A word of explanation will set that before us clearly. We have from time to time officers instituted by the General Conference, and we have in mind the Discipline to permit the Bishop to allow these officers to remain longer than four years, and the design of this amendment is by one phrase to cover all cases, so that the proposition is to strike out book agent and missionary secretary, etc., and enter them all by the one phrase, "connectional officers." That is the whole change in this amendment.

J. W. Boswell:

I want to call attention to that word "authorized." I did not understand that that word was passed by the committee.

P. A. Peterson:

The brother is mistaken about that, I think.

J. W. Boswell:

I do not see the necessity of adopting two reports which cross each other.

R. B. Crawford:

I think we are all of one mind in this matter. The only thing is to get it right. As we are on this paragraph it might be best to so amend now as to cover the whole.

A. S. Andrews:

With the kindest feelings to that committee, and with the deep interest I have in the departments headed by these officers, I move to recommend that report. I do not think we are ready for it in its present form.

The motion to recommit, being seconded, was put to vote and carried.

Report No. 3 of the same committee was read.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Sunday-schools was then taken up and adopted.

Report No. 2 of the same committee was next read.

C. C. Clay, of California:

I offer the following substitute for that report:

P. Whitehead, Interposing:

I would inform the brother that the Committee on Education has recommended a different disposition of that money, and their report is on the table.

W. A. Candler:

I beg to inform Dr. Whitehead that he is mistaken about that.

The Chair:

We will have the substitute offered by Bro. Clay, of California, read.

The secretary then read the substitute as follows:

Resolved, That the fund of $10,000, known as the Sunday-school Centennial Fund, be turned over to the Book Committee, and be by them safely invested, and that the interest accruing from the same annually be given to the Sunday-school Committee of the General Conference, to be by them distributed to needy Sunday-schools according to such rules and safeguards as they may elect.

T. J. Magruder:

I hope the Conference will pass the report as it came from the committee. The committee was unanimous, and they think that the General Sunday-school Committee elected by this Conference ought to have that money under their care.

The Chair:

The Conference will first vote on the substitute offered by C. C. Clay, of California.

A vote was taken on the substitute, and it was lost.

The question then being on the report, the same was adopted.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Boundaries was then read.

A vote was then taken on the report of the committee, and it was adopted.

Report No. 3 of the same committee was read.

The regular business of the Conference was then resumed.

Report No. 1 of the committee on Education was taken up, read and discussed, and on motion it was laid on the table.

Report No. 2 of the same committee was taken up and read.

C. G. Andrews moved to amend the report by striking out Question 1 of the explanatory questions proposed to be added to Question 12 of the Quarterly Conference as it now stands in the Discipline.

This amendment was laid on the table.

The question recurring upon motion to adopt the report, on motion of J. H. Evans, it was laid on the table.

Report No. 4 of the Committee on Itinerancy was taken up and read, when J. H. H. Figgatt moved to amend so as to provide that John Boards of Finance shall, in their estimates and apportionments for the support of Conference claimants, make provision for the relief made necessary by deaths or disabilities arising during the Conference year for which no estimates are made.

Pending the discussion of the amendment offered by J. H. H. Figgatt, Bishop Wilson took the chair.

The vote being taken, the motion of J. H. H. Figgatt was laid on the table.

On motion, the report was laid on the table.

Bishop McTyeire resumed the chair.

Report No. 4 of the Committee on Revision was read and discussed.

P. A. Peterson:

This debate, Mr. Chairman, has been very profitable, and I move, Sir, the previous question. (Cries of "Amen!" "Amen!")

The call for the previous question was sustained.

The question then being on the substitute for the committee's report that portion thereof which deals with this particular subject (the substitute being "may at his discretion"), it was put to the vote and lost.

The question then recurring on the report of the committee, the same was adopted.

E. E. Wiley:

Mr. Chairman, does that adopt the whole report?

The Chair:

It adopts the committee's report on this last item referring to baptism. We have adopted all the other parts of the report heretofore.

On motion the Conference adjourned by the singing of the doxology and the pronouncing of the benediction by Rev. John Miley, D. D.

TWELFTH DAY—MORNING SESSION.

The devotional exercises of the morning were conducted by Rev. Anson West.

The minutes of yesterday were read and approved, Bishop McTyeire in the chair, after which Bishop J. C. Keener assumed the chair.

R. H. Mahon:

On yesterday Report No. 2 of the Committee on Boundaries was read and adopted without much consideration, and I have been asked to move that the action of the Conference be reconsidered, and I now make that motion so that brethren who did not have an opportunity to consider the matter may do so now if they choose to do it.

The motion was seconded.

A vote was then taken on the motion to reconsider Report No. 2 of the Committee on Boundaries. The result being in doubt, a division was called for, and the motion to reconsider was lost by the following vote:

Ayes, 35; noes, 98.

P. H. Whisner:

I wish to give notice that at the proper time a motion will be made to reconsider the action by which the report of the Committee on Missions requiring this Conference to elect by ballot the missionary treasurer. The motion to reconsider that action will be made at the proper time, for the reason that a resolution has been presented here since the action of the Committee on Missions was had.

The Chair:

The motion is to reconsider the report of the Committee on Missions, No. 5. Those in favor of the motion will say I.

The motion was carried.

P. H. Whisner:

I move that the report be laid on the table for the present.

The motion was carried. P. A. Peterson presented Report No. 2 from the Committee on Revision, which was recommended on yesterday.

A motion of W. A. Candler the rule was suspended requiring the report to take its place on the calendar, and the report was adopted.

P. A. Peterson presented Report No. 9 from the Committee on Revision, which went to the calendar, under the rules.

P. A. Peterson presented Report No. 10 from the Committee on Revision, which was read at length and went over under the rules.

David Morton presented Report 10 from the Committee on Publishing Interests, which went to the calendar.

Also Report No. 11 from the same committee. The rule was suspended, this report was considered and adopted.

Report No. 8 from the Committee on Sunday-schools was read and went to the calendar.

Report No. 9 from the same committee was read and adopted.

R. H. Mahon presented Report No. 9 from the Committee on Boundaries, which went to the calendar.

The call of special committees was taken up, and T. S. Garrison presented Report No. 17 from the Committee on Finance, which went to the calendar.

Also Report No. 18 from the Committee on Finance, which was read and sent to the calendar.

The Chair:

I wish to make an important announcement. In a very little while we shall have to vote in the election of Bishops, which time it will be absolutely necessary that the delegates, all of them, shall be in their places, each one in the benches assigned to the different Conferences. A word to the wise is sufficient and I go no further. (Laughter.)

On motion of S. A. Weber, W. B. Hill, of Georgia, was added to the Committee on Quarterly Review.

B. J. Tarver presented a report from the Committee on Divorce. The report was laid over and ordered printed.

The reports of committees were taken up in their order from the calendar.

Report No. 3 from the Committee on Publishing Interests was taken up and adopted.

Report No. 5 from the Committee on Finance was adopted.

Report No. 4 from the Committee on Boundaries was adopted.

Report No. 5 from the Committee on Boundaries was taken from the calendar.

T. J. Patton:

I move, Sir, to amend that report by striking out all that portion of the report having reference to the boundary of the Louisiana Conference. I will state the reasons for this motion. I think there has been but one preacher in the Louisiana Conference that has taken any part in this matter, and that is the presiding elder of the Shreveport district. I think the Louisiana Conference should be allowed to remain as it is. I therefore move that all that part of the report referring to the boundary of the Louisiana Conference be stricken out entirely.

M. H. Neely:

This was a proposition to us of this portion of Louisiana, and we agreed to let it pass. The North Texas Conference is perfectly satisfied either way.

A. H. Mitchell, of Louisiana:

As a citizen of that parish of our State, I desire to say that our people do not want this change. I received a letter from a brother in the parish, who presented it in the committee, but at the same time I stated that it was not at the solicitation of the church there or any citizen of the parish. I do not see any real necessity for this change at all.

W. H. Goodale:

I move that this report be recommended with instructions to strike out all that relating to boundaries of Louisiana.

R. H. Mahon:

I do not think the Conference understands this. There is a small portion of the State of Louisiana in the northwest that is cut off from the Louisiana Conference by a chain of bayous or lakes. It belongs at present to three or four districts, and is very inaccessible. We have been memorialized to transfer a part of it to the Little Rock Conference, and the rest to North Texas Conference, and we supposed there was no objection to that course being followed.

A. H. Mitchell:

Have the people of that section been consulted?

R. H. Mahon:

We did not understand that there was any objection.

A. H. Mitchell:

I can say, as a citizen of that parish, that we do not desire it. I see the people there constantly every day, and I have not heard a single person speak in favor of it.

A member:

Well, Sir, here are conflicting reports. Bro. Mahon says he did not understand that there was objection from the people there, and Bro. Mitchell, of Louisiana, says there is objection. Now I want to vote as the people desire. I always want the wishes of the people ascertained first, and then vote accordingly.

The motion to lay on the table prevailed.

P. A. Peterson:

I move a reconsideration of the vote by which Report No. 2 of the Committee on Revision was adopted, in order that I may present an amendment which I forgot.

The motion was seconded, put to vote, and carried.

P. A. Peterson:

I now move to amend by striking out in the twelfth line on page 71, the words: "which are or may be," so that it will read: "The Bishop shall have authority to appoint agents for the American Bible Society, and the presidents, principals, or teachers of seminaries, or of other educational institutions."

A. S. Andrews:

I hope this amendment will be adopted. It will guard our own institutions a little more carefully. It will let the discipline a thing that rattles like a loose nail in a horse-shoe, and it ought to come out.

A vote was taken, and the amendment adopted.

The question then being on the addition of Report No. 2, it was adopted.

Report No. 3 from the same committee was then taken up and read.

P. A. Peterson:

I move that the report be adopted as a whole.

W. M. Prottsman:

I wish to state that when that report was presented and read, I think it was, was read, I gave notice of a minority report on that item, and I now move, Sir, that when the report is taken up it be considered item by item.

J. S. Gardner:

I second that motion.

A vote was taken, and it was so ordered.

On motion of W. A. Candler, the Conference voted to proceed to the business next in order, leaving the report under discussion to come up immediately thereafter.

The Chair:

The time has now arrived, determining the Conference to vote on the election of our Bishops. It has been the custom of our fathers, at so important a juncture in the history of our church as this one, to call especially upon God for Divine guidance, and we this morning propose to place ourselves immediately under the direction of the Chief Shepherd. We approach the throne of heavenly grace that we may be guided to the selection of the worthy officers of the General Superintendency. I need say nothing to you, my brethren, of the importance of feeling consecrated, each one of you, that you are discharging one of the highest duties laid upon you as a minister of God, as an elder of the church of God—for most of you are elders of the blessed Savior himself in consecrating, in advancing, in the moving forward of his kingdom of infinite grace. We shall read a few verses, a hymn, which Bro. Peterson will raise the tune for, and, after singing of the hymn, I request that Dr. H. H. Parks, of North Georgia, will lead us in prayer.

Hymn 259 was sung.

The benediction was pronounced by Bishop J. C. Keener, and the delegates gathered around the successful candidates, congratulating them on their elevation to the episcopacy.

We present to our readers the last paragraphs of Dr. Miley's Fraternal Address before the General Conference:

Methodism brought a new life into England, a new faith, a new morality, a new spirituality, a new philanthropy. She reached down to the lowest and saved them; reached up to the highest, and made even the nobility morally responsible to the clergy of the Church of England for a better life, and brought into that church a spirit of evangelism which remains to this day. Other churches received the quickening power of the mighty movement, and in turn wrought effectively for Christ and souls. So profound and widespread was the influence outside of the distinctly Methodist community, that Green, the historian, was no doubt correct in declaring Methodists themselves only the smaller part of the great movement.

The great movement came in the hour of England's greatest need. Infidelity was rampant, vice a deluge, religion a mockery, the churches lifeless, the spiritual powers of the nation at bay. The salvation of England, the salvation of her churches, was at stake.

His great work in England was respected in America. The conditions of the country were very different, but the need was very great. Neither the life nor the methods of the churches were adequate to the emergency. Methodism came with her living experience, with her fervent evangelism, with her intense passion for soul-saving, with her faith in the saving power of the gospel, with her itinerancy reaching into the many and keeping up with the long line of an ever-advancing frontier. The great tens of thousands and the swift goings of his preachers form one of the grandest spectacles in Christian history. Methodism evangelized America.

The future calls us to a great mission. Our country has greatly changed since a hundred years ago. We have become a great nation. The young are passing away, and we are taking on the cast and the habits of maturity. But we still need and shall continue to need a living evangelism. It is our rejoicing that this white burden of need is not upon the churches which we here represent.

Other churches are answering to the urgent call for the saving gospel. Still we must fulfill our own mission. These are needs of the South which concern us, and needs in the North which concern us, and needs which are more or less common to both of us. In your Southern life there are great questions waiting for a wise solution, tendencies which may threaten the future, perishing souls everywhere to be saved, enough of facts to create a profound exigency for the gospel through your ministry. In our Northern life we have a growing secularism in the many forms of worldliness; great corporations, which are never clear of evil consequences; the conflict between labor and capital, the influence of which must be adverse to the interests of religion; a vast foreign population, much of it unassimilated, illiterate or unevangelized, the peril of the Sabbath in our cities, the chief agency and support of the ruinous liquor traffic; perishing souls everywhere to be saved enough of facts to create a profound exigency for the gospel through our ministry. As for the frontier life which concerns us both—that form of life for which the earlier Methodism did so much—it is really larger now than at the opening of the century. In all this pioneer life, in which the present must mold the future, the deepest need is for the molding power of the gospel. There the world is open and waiting for the gospel. Never was there more work for Methodism. We still need the aid of the laity, the same intense passion for soul-saving which was the inspiration of their heroic evangelism. There is work for all workers, and we welcome the fraternity and co-operation of the churches of other schools of theology and other forms of polity.
